"POWERFUL PICTURES WILL CURE ANY BOX-OFFICE DEPRESSION THAT EVER EXISTED"

THESE are the words of Walter Hays, Treasurer of all of the Mitchel H. Mark motion picture theatre enterprises. They confirm Goldwyn's own widely-advertised statement that "good pictures banish bad business in the theatre."

This also explains why exhibitors throughout North America have done capacity business while playing Goldwyn's

Madge Kennedy in "Nearly Married," by Edgar Selwyn,

"The Auction Block," Rex Beach's Greatest Story,

Mae Marsh in "The Cinderella Man," by Edward Childs Carpenter, and why exhibitors everywhere are doubling their bookings for the greatest of all the Goldwyn Pictures and the biggest production of the year in the motion picture industry

Mary Garden in "Thais," by Anatole France.

Thousands of exhibitors can improve conditions in their houses instantly by playing Goldwyn Pictures—BEGINNING NOW.

THE SUPREME ACHIEVEMENT of GOLDWYN

MITCHEL H. MARK, president, and Harold Edel, managing director of the Strand Theatre, who have as their New Year's week attraction at one of the world's greatest amusement institutions, Goldwyn's remarkable presentation of MARY GARDEN in "THAIS," make this unusual announcement:

"We know of no picture with which Mary Garden in 'Thais' can be compared and we expect to break every attendance record of The Strand with this unrivalled production."

And Still More:

ASCHER BROS., Chicago, telegraph: Mary Garden in "Thais" will prove the greatest attraction ever offered patrons of the screen. It is the most remarkable production of the year and we offer our congratulations.

STANLEY V. MASTBAUM, of Philadelphia, one of America's greatest exhibitors, writes: "Thais" is perfect to the smallest detail. Mary Garden and the production are both wonderful. "Thais" is an artistic knock-out.

MARY GARDEN IN THAIS

by Anatole France

Directed by Frank H. Crane

GOLDWYN has the unusual honor of introducing for the first time to the millions of devotees of the photo-drama this exceptional dramatic artist in a production from a story by one of the foremost figures in the literature of the world. In "Thais" Mary Garden is the thrilling, electric, vital personality of flesh and blood—the daring, sensational, unusual woman who constantly challenges the attention of the world.

A Prediction.

MARY GARDEN is receiving more publicity, more attention from the critics, more attention from all classes of the public, than any star who has ever been presented in your theatre.

"THAIS" is the one production of recent years that is so certain in its box-office appeal as to justify you in playing it for double the time you give any other picture.

Mr. Frederick L. Collins,

My dear Mr. Collins:

I have just seen "Mother"by George Loane Tucker and, to say the least, it is a picture that will linger with me for a long, long time. Miss Risden, who plays the character part of "Mother" gives one of the finest character performances I have ever witnessed on the screen. The refinement, the intelligence and the good taste displayed by her make her, in my opinion, one of the greatest artistes on the screen. The whole picture has an atmosphere of good taste about it and drama is so big that I don't see how in the world it can go wrong. The musical possibilities in this picture are also great and I can assure you that if it is properly played and handled it will touch a responsive cord in everyone's heart and is bound to be talked about.

I will let you know in the near future just what date I can give you in either The Rialto or The Rivoli and you can rest assured that I shall be glad indeed to play it.

Very sincerely yours,

Managing Director.

Do you remember
"Tess of the Storm Country"?

So do all your patrons. Yes, and they'd pay money to see it again.

You know this is true because Harold Edel, Managing Director of the Strand Theatre has played "Tess" back for three solid weeks of capacity business.

Now, we aren't going to tell you that you can do this with every picture or even say that this picture is as good as "Tess."

"The Little Princess" is better from our standpoint. It cost many times as much—the settings, cast, and story cost much more. But it's up to your patrons after all.

For the sake of the industry, if not for your own sake, play this wonderful picture long enough to let your regulars tell their friends and get out of this picture your proportion of the money spent to produce it.

—but don't forget to advertise enough so that all your people know about it.

A LETTER FROM
MARGUERITE CLARK

My dear Children:

John Martin came to see me to-day and we talked a long time about you, which made me very happy. I love you children dearly (and it is plain to see that John Martin does, too.)

Do you know what I want most of all in the world? I want to make you children happy and I want to give you the kind of thoughts that are really lovely; and I want to live and feel like a child myself—that is the reason I like my Fairy Plays most of all.

Won't you children come to see me in my new play, "THE SEVEN SWANS." I am a little Princess in it. You will love the film, I know, because my heart was with you all the time it was being made. Oh, it is a very magic play—and I should not wonder if some day I might step right out of the screen and come right among you children and ask you to play with me! Oh, I wish that would happen! Well—who can tell, perhaps it may.

"When I love you and you love me Big magics are quite apt to be."

Good-bye, Children, I hope to see you soon.

Affectionately yours,

Marguerite Clark

AND SO

ONCE upon a time, in the Kingdom of Seven Dials, there was a beautiful little Princess, who lived with her father and Seven Big Brothers. In a near-by kingdom there lived a wicked Queen, a miserable Witch, and a cruel Prince. The wicked Queen desired to rule the Kingdom of the Seven Dials, so she arranged for the marriage of the little Princess to her stupid and cruel son. The Queen, and the Witch, and the stupid Prince came to the happy kingdom and wonderful were the betrothal festivities.

CHILDREN COME AND SEE THE BETROTHAL OF YOUR LITTLE PRINCESS.

TISEMENT. We just wanted to show you a "double United States are reading to their "Kiddies" this Christmas

Every one was happy but the Princess who feared the wicked Queen and hated the stupid Prince, and, in a moment of anger, she soundly slapped one of the Queen's subjects. For this she was cast into prison by the Queen, who wanted to get rid of her.

POOR LITTLE PRINCESS, PERHAPS YOU CAN HELP HER!

Although the wicked Queen had gotten the little Princess out of the way, she knew she could not rule the Kingdom of the Seven Dials unless the Seven Big Brothers were disposed of. So she called her miserable Witch and said, "Work a Black Magic—rid me of those Seven Brothers!"

So the Witch, changing herself into a beautiful maiden, cast herself into the pool of the Seven Dials. Of course the brave princes all jumped into the deep pool to save the maiden, but, instead of drowning, as the Witch hoped and planned, they were turned into

SEVEN WHITE SWANS.

The Witch was so enraged that she cast a spell over them. They must remain Swans until sundown every night; at dark, only, might they take human form. Broken-hearted, they flew away to a far country.

In the meantime, the Princess escaped from prison and hastened to the kind Sandman for help to rescue her dear brothers. But even good cannot be gained without labor and sacrifice. So she worked and suffered, strove and journeyed.

But I cannot tell you the rest of this story, which ends in happiness for the dear little Princess because——

YOU ARE GOING TO SEE THE SEVEN SWANS.

"JOHN MARTIN'S BOOK" does not, as a rule, carry motion picture advertising. The very fact that the production of "The Seven Swans" in which Miss Marguerite Clark stars, and which will be released by Paramount, has attracted the attention of John Martin, satisfies us that we are accomplishing one of our aims—the occasional production, under the most careful supervision, of pictures designed to delightfully entertain and instruct juvenile audiences. It is also significant of the fact that Paramount and Artcraft pictures are of a quality and character adapted for the entertainment of all the people. This is a source of real gratification to all concerned in the making of these pictures.

TRIANGLE

What Is Service in the Film Business?

NEVER was a word more abused—and misused.

Every quack who has had anything to sell, from thumb tacks to automobiles, has employed that word "SERVICE" in some form or other.

In the film business service means a whole lot. It means first—picture quality, measured by the power of a production to fill a theater; second—it means the proper delivery of film, and third—it means cooperation in connection with exhibitor's aids, publicity and especially systematic, fair and square methods of doing business.

The Triangle code defines service as "SATISFACTION"—pure and simple.

If the above is true, let's apply it to Triangle and see where we come out.

Triangle is buying the best stories that are available realizing that a good story is the foundation of a good picture. This is the one element of a successful picture that cannot be eliminated.

Triangle is producing its pictures at the best equipped studios in the world where every facility is available to insure high quality production. These studios are efficient manufacturing establishments, where waste is eliminated and every possible economy is practiced. The entire cost of a production always appears on the screen.

Here is what S. L. Rothapfel of the Rialto Theater, New York, has to say about Triangle productions: "It gives me much pleasure to inform you that we have selected for the week of December second 'Until They Get Me.' My staff also reports that they have looked at five other Triangle pictures ('Fanatics,' 'Learnin' of Jim Benton,' 'Because of a Woman,' 'The Maternal Spark' and 'Without Honor'), and find them very satisfactory. I can assure you you will have our every support. Keep up the good work."

Triangle has recently established a Traffic Department, whose sole duty it is to see that every Triangle exhibitor secures his film regularly and promptly and that it is shipped to him over the shortest route and at the least expense. This is just another little evidence of our desire to give service plus.

Triangle exchanges are operated by men who know picture quality, who can advise exhibitors as to the best methods of promoting pictures, and who fully realize that every exhibitor with whom they do business must receive fair, square and courteous treatment. This is the unalterable policy of Triangle.

There is nothing revolutionary about Triangle. We have no wonderful red-fire announcements to make to exhibitors. We are simply doing business in the most business-like way, with all of our cards on the table.

Does this method of doing business interest you?

AN · ANNOUNCEMENT
BY
W · W · HODKINSON

PRESENTING

THE · MOTION · PICTURE · PLUS

I offer the Motion Picture PLUS as a process which, presented as a means of guaranteeing genuine quality to the public, will give the theater which shows it THE EQUIVALENT OF THE HIGHEST CLASS OF STAR, with all a star's advantages and none of the disadvantages.

Look out of the window as you read this. Imagine how much finer would be the view if the entire side of the wall were taken away.

THE MOTION PICTURE PLUS IS TO THE OLD PICTURE AS AN OPEN WALL IS TO A WINDOW.

It is a motion picture higher, wider, finer photographically, more unlimited in stage action—a process years ahead of the old method upon which we have built this tremendous industry.

THE MOTION PICTURE PLUS is a picture twice as wide as the present height of the screen, and as high as the present width of the screen.

In other words, the film runs sideways instead of up-and-down, and two standard "frames" are used for each picture.

THE STEREOSCOPIC EFFECT HAS AT LAST BEEN ACHIEVED IN THE MOTION PICTURE PLUS, giving a depth and clarity of focus heretofore unknown.

In projection, the new picture allows more actors, more action, with FIGURES THE SAME SIZE OR LARGER than they now appear.

Read the details in the following pages, and as you read realize what a tremendous force this new picture will be for you, restricted as it will be to products of surpassing quality—a visible guarantee to the public of Quality, QUALITY, QUALITY.

Wm. W. Hodkinson.

THIS · IS · THE · OLD · PICTURE

Scene from "A Man's Man," a PARALTA PLAY, featuring J. Warren Kerrigan.

This Style of Picture has been Standard for Ten Years for These Reasons

1.—The film size, ¾ x 1 inch, could be cheaply produced, for cheap theatres.

2.—The standard celluloid film would tear and "buckle" more easily if it were wider, and would break more easily if it were narrower. This size has the greatest "tensile strength."

3.—The lenses of ten years ago would not photograph a picture on a larger film in the 1-16 of a second allowed, except with "fuzzy" edges and a background out of focus.

4.—The small stage allowed of cheap settings and did not require much of the unskilful actors of that day.

There has been No Change in the Shape or Size of Pictures for These Reasons

1.—Nobody ever thought it possible. Their eyes were glued to immediate advantage, no matter what the cost in effort wasted on a medium that could not do the effort justice.

2.—"Standardization," in screen size and in projecting machines, was considered more important than the need of a more worthy medium for the great productions.

3.—The mechanical difficulties were considered too great to overcome.

MEANWHILE we built our Strands, spent hundreds of thousands on productions, stars and distribution efficiency—while presentation methods lagged in the old narrow channels of the nickleodeon days.

AND·THIS·IS·THE·NEW

The same scene as it would be presented in the Motion Picture PLUS

This Size and Shape of Film Is Perfectly Practical in Any Theatre, for These Reasons:

1.—Although double the amount of film is used, the new process, absolutely protected by many patents, will give such effects and WILL BE USED AS A GUARANTEE OF SUCH QUALITY, as will put the picture beyond all question of competition in stars, spectacles, etc.

2.—The standard film is used, in all its tensile strength and with all the value of standardization in laboratory work, shipping, handling, etc.

3.—Modern special lenses give not only as good but far better photographic results in the Motion Picture PLUS than anything yet achieved. The stereoscopic effect, so long sought for, has been secured, insuring a photographic quality unique in any motion picture theatre.

4.—For figures of equal size upon the screen, the actors move on a stage nearly twice as wide. This has all the effect of the stage of a legitimate theatre. It gives full advantage to the costly sets of modern productions. It allows the director to bring actors into the scene from "off stage" instead of jumping them into the action or using confusing "cut backs."

Compared to this larger field, the old screen seems like looking at a part of the stage of a theatre through a square hole.

The Hodkinson Plan for Distributing The Motion Picture PLUS

The first production under the new process is a PARALTA PLAY, with Bessie Barriscale as the star. It will be ready for issue in February, 1918.

In the beginning, not more than fifty theaters will receive franchises for exhibiting the Motion Picture PLUS. These exhibitors will be tied in with the Hodkinson organization.

This will give them assurance of control of the new process, with all its prestige of quality, in their locations.

As a bi-product of the Motion Picture PLUS, productions utilizing the same stories, stars and sets, will be made in the narrow, standard form, giving smaller exhibitors the advantage of the national advertising, publicity and discussion of the Greater Motion Picture until we can offer the number of productions needed to supply smaller theaters.

The projecting machines for the Motion Picture PLUS will be leased to theaters, so that THE ONLY ACTUAL INVESTMENT REQUIRED WILL BE A LARGER SCREEN.

Basic patents protect all the manufacturing and projecting processes of the Motion Picture PLUS, and all rights are vested in the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

WE SHALL THEREFORE BE ABLE TO CONTROL THE STANDARD OF QUALITY OF EVERY PICTURE MADE IN THIS SIZE AND SHAPE.

This control we regard as a sacred trust, which we shall use only to give to the theaters and the public that VISIBLE GUARANTEE OF QUALITY which alone can dispel from the public mind the confusion which hinders its search for pictures worthy of public patronage.

*"Greater love hath no man than this,
that a man lay down his life for his friends."*
St. John xv: 13

John Webster's creed is, "live and let live." That's why he hates kings and such, and despises the holier-than-thou kind.
The world is his play ground. He has many play fellows.
But only one friend.
For that friend, John Webster is ready to go the limit.
There's nothing John Webster refuses to try once — and once more, if it doesn't take the first time.
He tries mining, and makes his pile. He tries to save a fellow's head.
The fellow is still wearing a hat.
He tries to start a revolution and goes through with it all the way.
He tries to deliver a nation from the yoke of a despot. (Mr. Despot is now cursing John Webster's memory — in a place where the heat is never turned off.)
After he has tried a whole lot more things, he tries love.
And his friend, too, tries love.
And it's the same girl.
John Webster knows it — his friend doesn't.
There's the rub.
There's where friendship enters by the front door.
There's where John Webster is ready to sacrifice his soul on the altar of friendship.
Because he is a man's man.
Then — providence deals him the ace of hearts!

TARZAN OF THE APES

(Directed by Scott Sidney)

You have learned of its all-star cast—
Now learn about the picture itself.

*It has the ONE BIG NEW IDEA of the last two years.

*The life of a man-child fostered by an anthropoid ape is placed before your eyes.

*His primitive struggle for existence in the African jungle is shown in all its vivid realism.

*How Tarzan becomes king of the apes; how love of an American girl raises him above the beasts; how intrigue and scheme fail to rob him of his heritage —these are the themes which make

TARZAN OF THE APES

THE WONDER STORY OF THE AGE

Millions have read Tarzan in the dailies; millions will see him in the film.*

WHO PAY

LET YOUR patrons know this is a special Thos. H. Ince production in seven reels planned by its famous producer as an extraordinary feature for special presentation. Also acquaint them with the fact that it is the most powerful vehicle in which Bessie Barriscale has ever been seen. The New York Review said: "'THOSE WHO PAY' is, in our opinion, the best screen exposition of the eternal triangle that has been presented in recent years." Advertise it as such. After your opening show the women will advertise it so effectively that capacity houses will continue throughout the engagement.

Belgian

Martyred Belgium is the most appealing subject in the public mind. The title of Frederic Arnold Kummer's timely drama therefore attracts immediate attention. Drive home the fact this elaborate offering represents the supreme effort of the great director, Sidney Olcott, to stage a masterpiece (in seven reels) worthy of the importance of the subject. Take advantage of the two eminent stars, Walker Whiteside and Valentine Grant, to prove the very special nature of the production. The many calls for "THE BELGIAN" by monster benefits (it was a prominent feature of Hero Land) is proof positive of its tremendous exploitation possibilities. You should do a wonderful business with this valuable attraction.

LAST RAID

EMPHASIZE THE FACT THAT THIS IS THOS. H. INCE'S NEWEST AND GREATEST spectacle and bring out the spectacular features—the Zeppelin in Action—the inner workings of the mighty air monster—the bombing and burning of towns and villages—mutiny in the gondolas of a dirigible—a huge "terror of the skies" destroyed by fire in midair—multitudes of enslaved people sounding the battle cry of freedom. These sensational features are making this high-class thriller do a tremendous box office business. You can get YOUR SHARE of this money—it's a live showman's proposition—go after it!

They can't Bulldoze me!

TOM MOORE of WASHINGTON

I will not be bulldozed.

I will not be robbed by overcharges.

Therefore I have concelled sixty-eight contracts with one distributing company and twenty-two contracts with an affiliated company.

I am working for Tom Moore. I have my own ideas of how my own business should be run, and, in all modesty, I think that those ideas are partially responsible for whatever success I have had. I will continue to run my business in my own way. When I can't do that, I'll quit.

For some time there had been a serious question in my mind as to how long existing conditions could continue. I knew I was paying extravagant prices, but, like thousands of other exhibitors, I submitted so long as I saw a profit.

Recently I was informed it would be necessary for me to show ALL of the pictures of these two particular companies in all of my Theatres, TO THE EXCLUSION OF THE PICTURES OF ALL OTHER COMPANIES. I cancelled every contract.

The motion picture business is too important and the Exhibitors are too good business men to tolerate bulldozing tactics of this kind. We are too far-sighted to permit one company to "hog" all of the business establishing a monopoly that will place us absolutely in their control.

Tom Moore

How about you?

You Exhibitors all know Tom Moore, of Washington.

Mr. Moore is one of the most courageous men in the Industry.

He is one of the pioneers and to him is due most of the credit for the improvement in the industry in the past few years.

Mr. Moore controls eighteen houses in Washington, including the Strand and the Garden. He will have bigger houses soon.

Several weeks ago Mr. Dooley, of Paterson, N. J., told you how he had cancelled his contracts with a certain company when he found he could make no profit because of the high rentals.

Mr. Moore has the same complaint. He objects to extravagant rentals and he objects to having his policies dictated by those who depend upon him and his fellow Exhibitors for their very existence.

Mr. Moore informs us he has cancelled ninety contracts.

Mr. Moore has signed for Pathe Plays

Before you book your plays for 1918, have a talk with us. We have something interesting to tell you.

J. A. Berst

Vice-President and General Manager
Pathe Exchange, Inc.

N. B.—We would be pleased to hear from other Exhibitors who are dissatisfied with existing conditions.

CONCERNING "THE PUBLIC DEFENDER"

HON. EDWARD J. LAUER,
Justice of the Municipal Court, New York

"It is certainly a novel and singularly effective production."

HON. EDWARD J. DUNPHY,
Ex-Congressman and Prominent Attorney

"I enjoyed the picture immensely. It entertained and thrilled me."

THOS. W. CHURCHILL,
Famous Educator and Former President of N. Y. Board of Education

"I was interested from start to finish. It is a graphic presentation, with a strong melodramatic plot of peculiar but plausible development."

REV. JOHN E. ZEITER,
Pastor First Methodist-Espiscopal Church, N. Y.

"'THE PUBLIC DEFENDER' is simply great, whether read as a book or seen as a picture."

REV. SAMUEL GREENFIELD,
Rabbi Isaiah Temple, New York

"Artistically, the production ranks high. The story is carried out with startling truthfulness and vivid forcefulness."

REV. RODOLPH GROSSMAN,
Rabbi Congregation Rodoph Sholom

"The picture is intense in its story, heart moving in its appeal, and very convincing in its presentation."

DR. WM. J. O'SULLIVAN,
Celebrated Medico-Legal Expert

"The cast is worthy of high praise for conscientious and artistic rendering of their respective parts. The picture is both informative and convincing."

FRANKLIN S. TOMLIN,
Well Known Labor Leader

"From the standpoint of an interesting entertainment, I consider it greatly superior to a majority of the motion pictures that have been presented."

MYRON SULZBERGER,
Successful New York Lawyer

"Representing, as I do, certain motion picture industries, I can appreciate the wonderful selling qualities that "THE PUBLIC DEFENDER" possesses. The public will clamor for it, and thereby stimulate such demand."

SAMUEL J. SIEGEL,
Prominent Criminal Lawyer

"'THE PUBLIC DEFENDER' unfolds an intensely gripping story, sending its lesson to heart and mind in a manner to create thought."

You are not buying a law-suit when you buy the famous Keystone-Mack Sennett comedies mentioned below. EVERYONE OF THESE COMEDIES IS COPYRIGHTED AND PROTECTED. Every buyer is given a contract with power of attorney to confiscate any prints that are in the territory on Keystone subjects listed below.

"THE SUBMARINE PIRATE," with Syd Chaplin (4 Reels), and "FATTY AND MABEL ADRIFT," with Fatty Arbuckle and Mabel Normand (3 Reels), alone are worth the price we are asking for the entire list.

The only states remaining unsold are: NEW JERSEY, PENNSYLVANIA, ILLINOIS, OHIO, INDIANA, KENTUCKY, MINNESOTA, NORTH DAKOTA, SOUTH DAKOTA, and WISCONSIN.

Our suggestion to the live STATE RIGHT BUYERS who want tested box office winners is to GET BUSY AT ONCE and secure these pictures for their territories if they are still available.

New York, December 7, 1917

Gentlemen:—With regard to your new serial "THE HIDDEN HAND".

I want to give my fellow exhibitors a little "dope" on the serial. This is the first Pathe Serial I have used in the above theatre in three years. After being induced by the salesman to screen this serial, I gave him a three days' booking on it. The results were so surprising that I will hereafter use every Pathe Serial which looks anything like a drawing card such as "THE HIDDEN HAND".

I have one thousand one sheets, one thousand half sheets and one thousand three sheets posted from 34th Street to the Battery advertising this Serial. It is playing to standing room with my 1600 seats at 10c., 15c., 20c. and 25c.

Hoping you will release another serial real soon, for which I will hold dates open, beg to remain,

Yours very truly, JAMES F. THOM, Mgr.

FAIR PLAY

Our Way—The Only Fair Way —To Sell You Pictures

Book what Jewel Productions you like—whenever you like—without a contract tying you up 52 weeks in the year—without a deposit—without fear of mediocre pictures that you'll have to accept—without compulsion of any kind—except the necessity of giving your patrons the best the market affords.

Realize All That Jewel Fair Play Booking Means

This—the Jewel Way—the only fair way to sell you pictures—gives you a fair, square chance to pick only proven successes—as many or as few of those successes as you want—for the dates that best suit your schedule—for the cream of the business on those pictures. Gives you a fair, square chance to round out your program with other good pictures—if you can find them.

Realize Particularly This

Many other concerns, if they could offer Jewel Quality, would jump at the chance this highest quality offers, to tie you up with all manner of restrictions—limit you clear to the limit—squeeze the orange dry.

Not so, Jewel Productions, Inc.

Under the Jewel Fair Play Booking Plan YOU GET—

All the plums. None of the lemons. At fairest figures.

No forcing you to take several weak features just to get one winning production.

No buying a cat in a bag. You see every Jewel Production before you buy it. Thus you know what your goods are going to be like before you pay a single penny.

No exorbitantly salaried Stars—who add nothing to entertainment value, but who do compel insane rentals that a majority of exhibitors cannot afford—that only a few can play with real profit.

No contract plan. No tying you up on a Series in which there may be a weak picture.

Under the live-and-let-live Jewel Fair Play Plan You Pick Your Picture and Pay for Your Pick and Pay for That Alone

With a Quality Average infinitely above that of any other picture marketing concern in the business to-day, Jewel Productions, Inc., does not tie you up—does not restrict you—does not limit you in any way.

Instead, Jewel Productions, Inc., offers you OPEN BOOKING on the very finest pictures, obtained from every source and renting at figures that give you a white man's profit on every one.

Facts and Comments

HERE'S to the New Year. May it see the triumph of right over wrong, of justice over injustice. May it see swank and swagger in the army and navy and everywhere hide its head in shame in the face of genuine service for cause and country May it see efficiency replacing inefficiency all down the line; may it see better business methods applied in every branch of our own industry; may it bring better picture productions than the world has yet seen; may it bring success to the cause for which we fight; may it see the world made safe for democracy; may it bring health, wealth and happiness to every reader of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD.

ILL-CONSIDERED and short-sighted are mild terms to use in characterizing a great deal of the advice that is being sown broadcast over the land since this country assumed its active part in the conduct of the war. A particularly flagrant example of this half-baked counsel appeared in the newspapers a few days ago, linked with the name of a prominent New York banker. It does not take much consideration of the matter to show what will happen to business and trade generally if this advice to make last year's overcoat do, to invest in war certificates the price of the usual picture theater ticket and other similar sage (?) suggestions. It is astounding to hear a banker deliver himself of this sort of rot. Of all people, bankers should realize the dependence of the nation on trade and the interdependence of people in different trades on each other. Where will the money come from to buy food and clothing, war certificates, war munitions and everything else, we would like to know, if we tie it all up in Red Cross and war certificates.

PROMINENT bankers, however, are not the only blunderers in this respect. An unwarranted attack on picture exhibitors was contained in a circular letter sent from Washington a short time since to all tax commissioners, containing the suggestion that theater managers were boosting prices and profits under the excuse of war taxes. Now comes a ruling by the fuel director or commissioner in regard to shutting off all electric signs on certain nights in the week. That this is an arbitrary ruling issued without any consideration whatever, of its result or effect on trade, is easily seen when we note its bearing on picture theaters. These signs should not be dark on the best business nights in the week for theaters. Exhibitors' Associations and Leagues everywhere should agitate for a modification of this ruling. The signs could be bright until, say, nine-thirty and if they must be dark on certain nights let it be those nights when they are of the least benefit.

WE again refer managers and theater owners to our new Department of Advertising Aids for Busy Managers. The information that we plan to give each week in this department, coupled with the Reviews and Comments on Films by our own staff, will furnish the most complete, most reliable and dependable information on films for the wide-awake exhibitor that can be compiled. This information combined with each exhibitor's knowledge of his own neighborhood and patronage should make for the most successful conduct of the business of every reader and subscriber.

CONDITIONS in the film export trade in this country have reached a pretty state surely when foreign buyers of American films have to advertise in our columns in an effort to protect the rights or property for which they have paid good money. If the trade needs one thing more than another just now, it is an organization of manufacturers to look into the whole export problem and devise ways and means of handling the sale of positives so that their own foreign property rights will be secure as well as the ownership and rights of the buyers of foreign territory. One manufacturer a few days ago admitted that he did not know just how many copies were printed of each of his productions. No wonder that the South American buyer who had just paid this manufacturer a good price for exclusive copies was able to buy a new copy next day at a bargain price that had actually come from the laboratory of the manufacturer. Was ever the situation in the trade of duping and stealing and dishonesty in worse shape than today? We question it.

O. Henry on the Screen

Robert C. McElravy

THE success in adapting the stories of the late O. Henry from his own scintillating pages to the screen is so marked that it has a double importance for the public. It not only reveals new possibilities for the moving picture, but it renders a new and valuable interpretation of the remarkable O. Henry plots themselves.

It would be a daring thing to say that O. Henry stories as photoplays are an improvement over the tales as he himself wrote them. The writer would not presume to say that, conclusively, not having seen all of the screen numbers thus far released. But he has seen several of them—competent, carefully adapted photoplays, which retain admirably the O. Henry touch. Those he has seen suffer in no way in comparison with the original stories, and in some respects they are bigger, more vital and closer to life than the same narratives were upon the printed page. In fact, if he were living, O. Henry himself would undoubtedly pronounce the screen version of "Whistling Dick's Christmas Stocking," with George Cooper as the genial hobo-hero, quite as enjoyable as his original short story, though this, it should be stated, is not one of his more important tales.

It may be that O. Henry is destined to gain his real permanency on the screen—a permanency many critics have been unwilling to accord him as a short story writer. The things he loses in transference to the screen—the ephemeral diction, valuable only to the time for which it was written, and the shrewd, involved, but in a way unnecessary verbal byplay—these are the very things that puzzled and angered some of his readers.

This excess material is largely curtailed in screen production, with just enough of it retained to give a proper seasoning. But the things in which everyone admits O. Henry excelled, the swiftly moving always original plot, the genuine flesh and blood characters, and the curious, ironical humor and pathos growing out of situations that impinge upon real life—these remain and are given fresh emphasis.

Are not the things that appear in the photoplay after all the real O. Henry? Do not the screen stories have a certain dignity and sublimity along with their humor, that many of the short stories themselves lacked?

O. Henry as an author represented a broader, deeper current of feeling than his surface style indicated. His stories were written in the smart, unliterary language of the late '90's and the early 1900's, an era from which war-sobered America seems already slipping away with incredible swiftness. It is doubtful if he could have written them in any other way and had the satisfaction of seeing them in print! He was so far the victim of his times that he had to don the cap and bells in order to be heard at all. Slang and smart comment were demanded of the writers of that period. George Ade, instantly wise to his times, met the issue squarely. He adopted slang as his literary medium, and succeeded in making an art of it, just as Charles Chaplin has since made an art of pie throwing. The Ade fables, now also screen favorites, as much perhaps as any other writing, contain a perfect record of that period, which they at the same time satirize so laughably. And they are still moving forward with the new times, exposing fresh Orlandos and new Gwendolins and new Dulcineas—joy be with them!

But with O. Henry the case was different. His slang was a secondary extraneous thing, and much of it was no doubt simply a concession to the public taste of the moment. Part of it, it must be admitted, was sheer comedy relief, for O. Henry loved more than anything else to construct the drama of the underdog—the pathetic history of the man of the streets and the open road. Fortunately the light touch is preserved to a sufficient degree in the photoplays, by means of subtitles, piquant characterizations and the surprising plot action itself. While he frequently told tales with a deep, underlying pathos, the treatment is usually of a humorous sort, and this is happily maintained in the photoplays the writer has seen.

As the writer stated in a previous review, the identity of an author seems to be more inherent in his plot conception than in the manner, or medium, of its telling. The conception is the thing that mirrors his sympathies and reflects his grasp upon life and humanity. O. Henry, by virtue of discriminating direction, is as much O. Henry in the current photoplays as in his fiction form, and has the advantage in the former of being more strongly revealed in those qualities for which the public loves him. And since his short stories as he wrote them are vulnerable to more or less just criticism, as above pointed out, it would seem that O. Henry is at least one author who has profited immeasurably in certain respects by screen adaptation.

A Few New Year's Peeps

By Sam Spedon.

WE are on the eve of a New Year and in the midst of a Merry Christmas. From the office boy to the general manager and the stenographer there is a strong realization of the greatness of the motion picture industry, its present and future possibilities. All are determined to make it greater next year than ever before. That's a good resolution and being a fitting time for resolutions, we hope that everybody's hopeful prediction will be realized. Gosh! How we would like to say something real smart and wise to impress you all that we speak as an oracle and a genius. Every exhibitor, producer, distributor and other member of the industry has troubles of his own and will have them for all time to come. Just keep on doing and try to meet conditions as best you can. Anything we can do or say to help you, just let us know and we won't be bashful in expressing ourselves. We have asked more than forty-six persons what they had to say about the coming year and they all said about the same thing. Putting it in composite form everybody wishes everybody A Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

Do You Know About It?

Profiteering in junk films by passing them on to the uninitiated and unsuspecting. The whole industry should not fail to notify the film commissioners of the Government whenever it hears of this contemptible practice. The producers of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry are willing and able to furnish a full and perfect supply of film without taking chances with irresponsible and unscrupulous individuals.

As a Starter.

The exposition to be held in New York City February 12 will start the ball rolling in 1918. Thirty thousand dollars will about put it over.

Educational Pictures—Opinion

By Louis Reeves Harrison

THERE is an amusing element in opinion—it is so comically wrong at times, without foundation in fact, and it is occasionally just as stiff as it is stupid, but the kind I have reference to is that of judgment formed on evidence, whether trustworthy or not, such as public opinion. We know that the opinion of one political party may be bitterly opposed to that of another and yet both contain germs of truth. In religion, politics and society there are intense unities of opinion which it may mean martyrdom to oppose, yet which yield in time to enlightenment and the formation of correct opinion. Our present inclination is away from unity of opinion on most subjects and more toward conclusions of our own as individuals.

As a matter of fact there is an unsuspected value in these differences of opinion, largely due to our constant development. What was true yesterday becomes, because of our growth and changing circumstances, false today. We are eternally adapting ourselves to new conditions. Opinion is not any more staple than forms of government, sects or social conventions. Perpetually in a state of discovery and advancement, we can attain no such thing as a complete settlement of opinion on any subject for all time to come. It must be remembered that states of mind are not like the multiplication table, else we might become stagnant. We are in constant assertion and revolt, in discussion and dispute, hence an important element of the drama.

All this need not stand in the way on our reaching a right view of what is going on in our midst today, and we can make each discovery of the truth a basis for further exploration. Whether general opinion takes the form of relief, or of simply of a good guess, there are times when it hardens to an established faith, to be tenaciously cherished. Witness the idea of President Wilson that "we must fight for the ultimate peace of the world and the liberation of its peoples, the German people included, for the rights of nations great and small and the privilege of men everywhere to choose their way of life and obedience. The world must be made safe for democracy."

Here is an effort made to accomplish a really great end, but the President had to deal with a national state of mind. The end in view was in many cases so dimly perceived, or so outrageously misconstrued that it became necessary for him to take possession of our thoughts and illumine them with a brilliant expression of opinion, one carefully conceived and so clearly presented as to clarify our activities and the aim behind them. His opinion is of high value because of its incisive truth and because it is directed toward promoting our progress.

From a state of apparent indifference to remote danger, the whole country has been aroused by such shining opinions until the energies of the nation are now directed, as by a common impulse, toward righting world wrongs and guarding our own future from perils hitherto unforeseen. So any great opinion may become an established belief. It may not stir a nation to action, but it may operate to reclaim men and women who are going in the wrong direction, to protect immature minds, to effect legislation, and even secure the enactment of laws more just, or designed to accomplish some definite good end.

Whatever the intrinsic merit of an important opinion, it cannot become generally effective until its force is widely and deeply felt. Right here I oppose those scientists who claim that opinions are formed by an intellectual process. The screen story of sentiment has disproved any such theory, especially in the case of women and children, whose sympathies cannot be easily reached through logical argument. What they think springs largely from desires. Those desires must be satisfied before a message can be deeply impressed. Their minds start with sensation and work through sentiment to a conception. The conception may then be compared to others and harden to opinion.

The screen story of splendid purpose, set forth in terms of sentiment, thus becomes an educational instrument, though it may not be so designed at the outset. There is desire in the minds of a very large percentage of those who attend the picture shows, a craving for amusement, excitement, entertainment, something to stir the sensibilities, hence the audience mind is more readily reached when addressed through feeling. Settled opinion does not depend upon evidence so much as we imagine—some of our greatest faiths are independent of proof—but upon interest. The short cut to interest is through feeling, the surest route and the quickest through desire, feeling and interest to opinion.

By way of illustration, a dramatist wishes to "do his bit" to establish the opinions set forth by President Wilson. To tell us that "the only way people can express will is through democratic institutions" is to state an intellectual opinion, but if it can be shown on the screen in a story appealing powerfully to human sympathy, it will reach out to tens of millions now suffering deprivation because of the European war, who are not fully aware of why we should contribute so heavily from our energies and wealth. Such a story might show that an autocratic form of government, out of harmony with human rights, should cease to exist.

The splendid efforts we are making along lines long deemed necessary by the wisest Americans are the result of established opinion among our leaders, most of them enjoying a new elevation of sentiment, but the part we are yet to play in this tremendous world drama may depend upon the united opinion of all the people, humble as well as great. Moving pictures can be made educational in bringing about that unity, in knitting us closer together, in softening our hearts to a common sympathy with the oppressed across the seas, in teaching us to know their deep wrongs and hide the pain we feel.

For the relief of suffering, for the encouragement of those whose hearts are none too strong in time of trial, for the extension of our cherished ideals to people in other parts of the world, for all that stimulates nobility of character among ourselves, motion pictures offer the most effective medium at present known, not only because they reach out to the greatest number, but because their approach to the human heart is made along lines of the least resistance. Just as there is practical utility in every step we take as a people, there is nobility in every silent self-sacrifice, a national kindness of heart behind it all, sure evidence of enlightened opinion.

Our conduct as a nation depends very largely upon the opinions we hold. Where we are faulty in conduct we can only be improved by changing our opinions. Coercion has proven a failure. Might cannot rule us as it does the Germans, from whose undetermined minds evidence is withheld that right must prevail in the end. The surest educational methods are those direct ones which create widespread correct opinion. Ideas now, tomorrow and always will rule the world.

Mastbaum Again Says Something

By Sam Spedon

STANLEY MASTBAUM of Philadelphia writes a letter to the MOVING PICTURE WORLD calling attention to an article published in some of the newspapers which he entitles An Attempt to Kill the Goose that Lays the Golden Eggs:

"I respectfully call your attention to an article that appeared in the Philadelphia North American, issue of December 15, which I presume has been syndicated throughout the United States.

"What have you to suggest as to some form of concerted action to protest against sending out notices of this sort from Washington?

"STANLEY V. MASTBAUM."

Omaha, Neb., Dec. 14.—Pleasures should be forgotten during the war to a large extent and the money invested in war savings stamps or other Government securities, said Frank A. Vanderlip, national director of the war savings campaign, in an address here tonight.

"Store up your pleasures as you would store up money in the bank," pleaded Mr. Vanderlip. "You will enjoy them tenfold later, at the right time, and with a clear conscience.

"More than half the zest is taken off pleasure and enjoyments now because of the terrible things that are happening all the time and the suffering the whole world is going through. I am not asking you to be sad or doleful—that is quite unnecessary—but if you have a heart you won't get a tenth part of the normal enjoyment out of a pleasure or a luxury in these times, when every newspaper you pick up brings you a sense of the suffering and agony of so many millions of your fellow-men.

"These war savings stamps are the most practical aid that could be imagined in helping you to store up your pleasures. Instead of buying that theater or movie ticket you buy a thrift stamp. Your money goes direct to the war coffers; you have the satisfaction of feeling that you have helped win the war, and you have stored up a greater pleasure for the future."

Frank A. Vanderlip in addition to being national director of the War Savings campaign, is president of the National City Bank of New York. Once upon a time Mrs. Vanderlip addressed the housewives' association of her home town, advising them to conserve and economize in every way they could to help win the war. Someone asked why Mr. Vanderlip was building a large stone wall around his vast estate. He replied he was giving employment to a great many men in constructing the wall. Yet in the face of this statement he advises people not to buy tickets for "movie theaters" and invest the money in war saving stamps.

The movie theaters employ a great many persons and they are taxed on admission tax which goes to the Government. If people were to follow Mr. Vanderlip's advice, the "movies" would be driven out of business and the employes out of employment. How would Mr. Vanderlip like to have the Government representatives go about the country advising the people not to deposit money in the National City Bank, but invest it in War Savings Stamps? Mr. Vanderlip feels secure against any such procedure and for that reason he does not hesitate to throw a brick or two at the "movies" which, in addition to paying their war tax, are using their screens for the propaganda of the War Saving campaign, of which Mr. Vanderlip is national director.

We would advise Mr. Mastbaum to enter a protest to the Government in the name of his Association and call this matter to the attention of all other exhibitors' organizations and the N. A. M. P. I. requesting them to make protest also.

If we all stop eating, going to amusement and wearing clothes, we will soon have no business, no employment and no money to pay our war taxes. We will have to ask Mr. Vanderlip for a night's lodging at his vast estate on the Hudson and to discount our notes at his bank.

An Exemplary Convention

By SAM SPEDON.

WE went to the joint convention of exhibitors held at Washington, D. C., December 11 and 12. Mind you, this convention was not held under the auspices of any one exhibitors' league or association. It was an assemblage of affiliated and non-affiliated exhibitors and everything was carried out according to schedule. The first exhibitors' convention we have ever attended where this had been accomplished. If the convention had accomplished nothing else than to prove that a meeting of exhibitors could get together without a lot of hot air and fruitless waste of effort, this convention must be commended. It may have been because there was no politics in it. Everybody had a common interest; the good of the exhibitor, "all for one and one for all." It may have been that there were no manufacturers in attendance, exclusively exhibitors. We had a very strange feeling when the representatives of the five independent producing companies entered the hall to present their plan. They were listened to very attentively, without comment and the plan was given the most respectful consideration of the convention. Evidently the presence of some representation of the distributors was expected. Their attendance might not have made any difference in the action of the convention unless they had appeared with an adjustment of the "15-cent tax."

There was something ominous in the non-appearance of manufacturers and the orderly conduct of the convention. It suggested a nearer approach to business prinsiples and sincerity of purpose. It was an indication of unity and combined effort on the part of the exhibitors to settle their own affairs on their own responsibility in their own bailiwick. On the part of the producers in not attending, it seems to have the same significance.

There was no desire to rush madly into the halls of Congress, as was predicted, buttonhole the representatives and make wild appeals for relief and repeal. Quite the reverse. A committee on law and legislation was appointed and the chairman, Mr. Varner, was authorized to remain in Washington to act according to his best judgment and experience in legislative matters. Cool and calm judgment prevailed throughout, all flamboyant speeches and antagonistic contentions were taboo. There was a strong desire evinced by the members of the National Exhibitors' League to bring the A. E. A. back into the fold. Whether this was because the exhibitors realize that nothing can be accomplished by division for the 70 per cent. or smaller exhibitors or because one organization is stronger than the other, we do not know and we are not making any guesses.

The exhibitors will probably get together in a united organization. It is not yet. It may come to pass after the Detroit convention of the American Exhibitors' Association and the Boston convention of the Exhibitors' League in July next. Much will depend upon the election of a president and the adoption of by laws recommended by both bodies.

The atmosphere which permeated the convention and the spirit displayed certainly chalienged our approval. Our hope is, that the relief sought will be secured and the best results attained for the exhibitors and the whole industry through the joint convention of exhibitors.

Eric Campbell Killed in Accident

Big Chaplin Aid, Driving Machine Sixty Miles an Hour, Collides at Corner with Another Car.

THE millions of photoplaygoers who for the past two years have laughed at and with Eric Campbell, the big Chaplin aid, will learn with deep regret of his death at Los Angeles December 20. Mr. Campbell was driving an automobile in Wilshire Boulevard at a speed said to be sixty miles an hour. At the corner of Vermont avenue his car collided with another machine. When Mr. Campbell was picked up it was found death had been instantaneous.

Three women were in the car with the actor. One of them, Gene Crosby, of Brooklyn, was taken to a hospital suffering from a badly crushed arm and other injuries. It is hoped, however, she will recover.

The Late Eric Campbell.

Eric Campbell was one of the best known members of the Chaplin company. He was widely popular for his stage work when he joined the Mutual-Chaplin organization, coming to it direct from the "Pom Pom," one of the stage's successful musical comedies. He was with the Lyric Theater stock company of London for seven years, appearing in a number of successes. His first appearance in America was under the management of Klaw & Erlanger. Campbell was an author as well as a player, having written and produced a number of film comedies for the London Film Company.

Campbell's big frame and stature—he weighed nearly 300 pounds and was well over six feet in height—his agility in spite of his size, his ability to take punishment and his seeming ferocity when simulating rage all combined to make for popularity. The marked disparity in size between Chaplin and Campbell was sufficient in itself to start a laugh.

While the Chaplin studio was in course of construction and the comedian consequently was waiting to begin work on his contract with the First National Exhibitors' Circuit the big comedian, under an arrangement with Chaplin, had been working in the company of Mary Pickford.

Campbell's name had been frequently in the public prints the last few months. Last July his first wife died. A week later he married Pearl Gilman, sister of Mabelle Gilman Corey. The death of the actor ended a suit for divorce just entered by Mrs. Pearl Gilman Campbell.

Campbell was thirty-seven years old and leaves a daughter, Laura Austin, an actress.

PICTURES WANTED IN THE BAHAMAS.

In a recent issue of "Commerce Reports" United States Consul W. F. Doty at Nassau, Bahamas, says that a communication has been received by the American consulate from a citizen of that city, stating that a movement is on foot to obtain motion pictures of a high character for use there. The persons who are interested desire to get in touch with supply firms in New York with a view to securing pictures of a thoroughly satisfactory character, both optically and morally.

The kinds of film desired are: Picture weeklies, adventure, scenic and natural history, well-known books, plays, folk stories, etc., and humor without vulgarity. Catalogues will be welcomed.

It is proposed that pictures shall be supplied fortnightly, with a reserve of two weeks in stock to cover irregularities of delivery.

[The name of the writer of the communication mentioned may be obtained from the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, its district or co-operative offices. Refer to file No. 95183.]

Unity Now Prevails in Industry

At Meetings in New York Legislative Committee Is Appointed Representative of Chief Branches.

AS the result of meetings which were held in New York during the past week between the allied exhibitors' legislative committee and a similar committee from the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry it is authoritatively reported that unity was established and the two bodies agreed on a definite plan of campaign to be pursued in obtaining the necessary remedial legislation from Congress during this session.

This combined committee is to be known as the Legislative Committee of the Motion Picture Industry. It is made up of Walter W. Irwin, P. A. Powers, Garbriel L. Hess, Ricord Gradwell, Arthur S. Friend, Frank Rembusch, H. B. Varner, John J. O'Donnell, Ernest H. Horstmann and Lee A. Ochs. The following committee on publicity was also appointed: Walter W. Irwin, P. A. Powers, Frank Rembusch and Lee A. Ochs.

For obvious reasons the plan of activities as laid out by this permanent legislative committee cannot be announced at this time. The important fact, however, is that the two committees were enabled to comprehend that success could only be achieved by means of a united industry, and after some discussion it was determined that the two committees could concentrate their efforts along the same lines. The plan of campaign as finally agreed upon was eminently satisfactory. The convention of exhibitors at Washington not only succeeded in bringing about harmony and unity of action among the exhibitors, but will undoubtedly bring about harmony between the exhibitors and distributors.

The duties of the publicity committee that was appointed will be largely that of collecting and collating information of a statistical nature for the benefit of the legislative committee. In order to bring this to the attention of the exhibitors of the country the committee has taken full pages of advertising in all of the trade papers, calling upon exhibitors to supply the detailed and accurate information as to how the war taxes have affected the business of their individual theaters.

The advertisement is addressed to all motion picture exhibitors.

In filling out the blank referred to in this advertisement exhibitors are requested to be absolutely frank and honest. No attempt is being made in collecting this information to disclose business secrets in any way. At the Washington convention it was suggested that exhibitors be asked to state their gross business for the month of November in the years 1916 and 1917, but this was objected to, as it was thought many exhibitors would refuse to disclose their gross business. As a result the question was put in the form which appears in the advertisement, as it was believed no exhibitor would object to stating the amount of the decrease between the two years. Of course, if business has increased state that fact, but also explain the reason for the increase. It is desired that these blanks be filled out and returned as soon as possible, to go over them and classify the information they contain before appearing before Congress.

STRAND TO ERECT STATUE TO SOLDIERS.

Harold Edel, managing director of the Strand theater, has engaged G. E. McCune to design a bronze statue in honor of the ex-employees who are now in the United States service. The memorial will be ready in about a month. This statue will present a gigantic screaming eagle with outstretched wings, underneath which will be inscribed the names of the former Strand employees. An extract from President Wilson's message to Congress, together with a facsimile of the President's signature, will also be inscribed, presenting in all a pretentious token of regard for the boys, many of whom are already "over there."

The unveiling of the statue will take place in the big lobby of the Strand.

NEW THEATER FOR KINGSTON.

First of the string of motion picture theaters which Frank A. Keeney plans to erect to exploit the products of the Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation will be a $100,000 house on property Mr. Keeney has purchased on King street, Kingston, N. Y. Plans have been drawn by William E. Lehman, architect of Mr. Keeney's big and handsome theater in Brooklyn and also of his theater in Newark. The new house will seat about 1,500 and will be equipped as a thoroughly up-to-date place of amusement. Ground will be broken in the spring as soon as the weather permits.

Rivoli Opens to Public December 27

Description of Great Photoplay House Erected by Sol. Rothapfel—Last Word in Motion Picture Palaces

ON Thursday evening, December 27, the eyes of the amusement community will center with uncommonly keen interest at Broadway and Forty-ninth street, where the Rivoli, the latest and greatest of picture play theaters, will open in all its stately splendor and make its first bid for popular approval. The building of this superb structure proves beyond need for further discussion that the motion picture, artistically presented in conjunction with a program of high-class music, has become the most popular form of entertainment now being offered to the American public. In other words the Rivoli marks the triumph of what has come to be known as "the Rothapfel idea," for it goes almost without saying that S. L. Rothapfel, originator of that type of amusement associated with his name, will direct the destinies of the new institution.

As thousands of people who have noticed the classic facade of the Rivoli are already aware, it is with one exception the most imposing theatrical edifice in the city. Its Grecian purity of line, its towering columns, the finely modeled figures in the triangular pediment—these and the gleaming, marble-like whiteness of it all assuredly give promise of something surpassingly beautiful within. Those who have seen the interior know that this promise will be more than fulfilled. To say that the general scheme of decoration is Italian Renaissance, that the dominant colors will be dull gold, ivory and black, that the carpet will be gray and the seats upholstered in tapestry conveys but an indifferent idea of what the architect and the decorator have accomplished. There always remains to be considered the enchantment which Mr. Rothapfel can weave over the place with his flexible system of illumination in color.

This method of handling color through a system of indirect lighting permits of effects in the Rivoli which are beyond the imagining of those who have not seen them. At the Rialto Mr. Rothapfel first essayed this particular form of wizardry, with results that were amazing, to say the least, but the lighting plant there was in a measure experimental. It was installed in a theater which was rebuilt as a motion picture house before the artistic value of Mr. Rothapfel's ideas on lighting had been demonstrated. Profiting by the popularity of the "color symphonies" for which the Rialto has become famous, the builders of the Rivoli took into consideration that feature from the outset, with the result that the place is equipped from floor to dome with all the wiring, the masked lamps, and other ingeniously concealed sources of light requisite to flood the auditorium with any color or combination of color desired.

Another and in this case an entirely novel feature of the Rivoli will be the introduction of perfume to supplement the appeal made to the other senses. Several thousand dollars have been expended on a newly devised compressor plant which operates in connection with an intricate system of atomizers and by means of which any delicate odor desired can be wafted instantly to all parts of the house; incense for oriental scenes, clover and new mown hay when the stage setting reveals a country landscape at dusk, a myriad variety of floral scents if a garden is to be suggested, and any other blending of odors so long as they be aesthetically possible and have a definite suggestive value.

In the way of stage setting and scenic effects, Mr. Rothapfel will have far greater scope for his ingenuity than he has had heretofore. For the opening of the theater the stage setting will be known as "The Conservatory of Jewels," a masterful creation from the Lee Lash Studios which promises to make even blase Broadway open its eyes. It will consist of a dome within a dome, each studded with huge crystal gems after the manner of the celebrated Tower of Jewels at the Panama Pacific Exposition. These will flash with kaleidoscopic effect when the light plays upon them from in front and will glow softly in their several colors when another set of lights is brought into play behind them.

The Rivoli, Broadway's Newest Photoplayhouse, to Be Opened December 27.

The base of the inner dome will be incrusted with a fine jeweled mosaic, and at the rear of the scene the eye will be led away in perspective down a magnificent avenue of palms.

The brightest jewel of all, of course, will be the screen, and this will be arranged so that it fits in as a component part of the stage picture. There will be two sets of curtains, a screen curtain and a tableau curtain, thus adding another innovation to houses of this character.

Pageant for Opening Week.

The entertainment in the "Conservatory of Jewels" will be an elaborate variation of the combined program of music and motion pictures on which Mr. Rothapfel founded his reputation. For the opening week the introductory number will be a modified pageant which has been styled "The Victory of Democracy." This will enlist the services of Forrest Robinson, the actor, and Mary Lawton, dramatic reader, together with the full orchestra, a chorus of thirty voices, and a boy soprano. The verses for the spectacle have been prepared by Charles Keeler, of the Bohemian Club, San Francisco, in collaboration with Professor Brian Hooker, of Columbia University, widely known as an authority on history. The musical score is the result of collaboration on the part of Mr. Rothapfel and Hugo Riesenfeld, his musical director. Without disclosing too much concerning this number it may be said that it traces the progress of democracy in this country from the time the Pilgrim Fathers landed until the United States entered the present war to make the world safe for the principles on which the nation is founded.

The remainder of the program will be made up of selected soloists, film novelties of every sort, orchestral numbers, and a miniature ballet, each presented in a manner quite different from anything of the sort which has been attempted heretofore.

The feature picture which will comprise the second half of the Rivoli program during the opening week will be Douglas Fairbanks' latest Artcraft production, "Modern Musketeer." Fairbanks was the feature of the opening week at the Rialto; he was the chief attraction again on the Rialto's first anniversary bill last April, and now his latest comedy-drama has been chosen to open the Rivoli.

So far as music is concerned, interest in the new theater centers largely around the orchestra. Mr. Rothapfel announces that it will consist of approximately fifty musicians, under the general direction of Hugo Riesenfeld, though except on special occasions Dr. Riesenfeld will continue to conduct at the Rialto. Unusual interest has been stimulated by the announcement that once each week the orchestras of the Rivoli and the Rialto will be combined in what is to be known as the Rothapfel Symphony Orchestra, of a hundred or more pieces, which will render a popular symphony concert in the new theater.

The grand pipe organ at the Rivoli is the largest and most complete ever installed in any theater in the world. It was built by the Austin Organ Company, of Hartford. It is equipped with every attachment known to the organ builder's art and will supply adequate musical atmosphere for those performances at which the orchestra is not present.

Mr. Rothapfel has selected the following musicians to serve as his musical staff for the Rivoli and the Rialto: Hugo Riesenfeld, director in charge; Erno Rapee, Nat W. Finston and George Rubinstein, conductors; Arthur Depew, Uda Waldrop, Dr. A. G. Robyn and Professor Firmin Swinnen, organists; William Humiston and Edward Falck, composition and arrangements; M. Borodkin, librarian; Alfred Saenger, assistant librarian.

Eight Columns Striking Feature of Facade.

From an architectural point of view the Rivoli offers a number of novel features which will be of interest to theater builders and to the playgoing public in general. Viewed from Broadway it suggests an art museum or public library rather than a theater. The facade is constructed of an extremely light-colored stone, so light that when illuminated at night by the indirect lighting system which is to be employed it will have the effect of white marble. There will be no electric signs on the building above those used on the marquee to announce current attractions. Searchlights and arcs will be disposed in such a way as to throw the severe outlines of the building into bold relief.

The most striking feature of the facade is its row of eight towering Doric columns. These extend from a point above the level of the marquee clear up to the entablature, with nothing to relieve their severity save the leaded glass windows set into the wall behind them. Crowning the entire facade is the broad triangular pediment, adorned with sculptured figures in deep bas relief. These figures are symbolical of music and the arts in general, as befits the nature of the entertainment offered within.

There is an Egyptian note in the slanting lines which frame the main entrance to the theater, but otherwise the scheme is pure Grecian. Credit for the architecture of the building goes to Thomas W. Lamb.

Coming to the interior construction of the Rivoli, the most novel and interesting feature is found in the elaborate precautions which have been taken to insure the expeditious handling of large crowds. Taking advantage of the fact that the building extends through the block from Broadway to Seventh avenue, the architect designed a series of superimposed passageways of generous width which parallel the auditorium on both sides and run straight through the structure from front to rear. Not only are the orchestra and mezzanine floors cared for in this manner but each cross aisle of the balcony has its own corridor as well, so that patrons in any part of the house will find themselves but a few steps from a doorway at which they can turn either to right or to left and pass directly to the street most convenient to them, without interference from incoming crowds.

This system of entrances and exits bears a marked resemblance to the one used in emptying the Coliseum at Rome of its eighty thousand occupants during the days of the gladiators, a process which historians say could be accomplished in from fifteen to twenty minutes.

Seating Capacity 2,500 Persons.

The whole structure is built with similar ideas of spaciousness. The lobby will hold three hundred people comfortably; the foyer is wide enough to give easy access to the orchestra seats; there will be an extensive promenade on the mezzanine, flanked by capacious lounging, smoking, and retiring rooms; and the auditorium itself will seat approximately 2,500 persons.

As an instance of the advanced ideas in theater equipment which have been embodied at the Rivoli it is worth noting that one room off the first mezzanine has been lined in white tile and fully equipped as an emergency hospital.

The Rivoli is extraordinarily well equipped with facilities for its musicians, its individual artists, its ushers, and its general staff. The musicians have a large lounging room to themselves, with locker room and shower baths adjoining. The dressing rooms have showers and there is another lounging room for the soloists and other individuals on the program. The ushers and the stage crew are cared for in like fashion, each in a separate portion of the building, so that no member of the huge organization will have the slightest excuse for being in any part of the theater where he does not belong. There is a communicating tunnel in the cellar which leads from the front of the house to that portion known as "back stage," thus permitting instant access from either end to the other without the necessity of passing through the auditorium or going out of doors.

The executive offices will be on the second mezzanine, at the front of the theater, excepting the office of the manager, which will be just off the orchestra floor. Mr. Rothapfel's executive staff will consist of the following: Hugo Riesenfeld, musical director; C. C. Stewart, manager; Hamish McLaurin; director of publicity; Edwin Mocsary, treasurer; Joseph La Rose, master of effects; Charles C. Reis, superintendent; Lester Bowen, chief operator; George Larbig, chief electrician, and Edward M. Berry, in command of ushers.

For those whose inclination runs toward figures it may be stated that the theater is 100 feet wide by an average depth of 138, and is 70 feet from the sidewalk to the peak of the pediment. It cost in the neighborhood of half a million dollars to construct and the job was completed in six months almost to the day. This is close to a record on this sort of construction.

In booking pictures for both the theaters Mr. Rothapfel will adhere to the open market system. His feature pictures will be the products of no one concern and his sole aim will be to get the best photodramatic production available for each house each week. The entertainment he will provide will be entirely institutional in any event, and it will be a case of going to the Rivoli to see the show—not going to see a certain picture at the Rivoli.

With reference to giving the patron his money's worth, an idea of the sort of show Rothapfel has in mind for the Rivoli may be gleaned from the fact that the regular price of loge seats there will be $1. Prices for the other parts of the house will range from 30 to 60 cents, as at the Rialto, but for the first time in the history of motion picture presentation, an effort will be made to provide an entertainment of such superior quality that a dollar will be considered a reasonable price for the choice seats.

N. A. M. P. I. Board Meeting

Quarterly Session Well Attended—Educational Campaign Approved.

THE quarterly meeting of the Board of Directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry was held at the headquarters, Times Building, New York, on December 14th, and presided over by President William A. Brady. The following were present: Arthur S. Friend, Paramount Pictures Corporation; William L. Sherrill, Frohman Amusement Corporation; Louis F. Blumenthal, Lee A. Ochs, Ernest Horstmann, Alfred S. Black, Louis L. Levine, F. S. Eager, Joseph Hopp, exhibitor directors; P. A. Powers, Universal Film Manufacturing Company; Walter W. Irwin, Greater Vitagraph Company; Paul Gulick, Universal Film Manufacturing Company; Thomas Wiley, General Division; Gabriel L. Hess, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation; Joseph F. Coufal, Novelty Slide Company, and C. C. Burr, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. The exhibitor directors from out of the city came to New York to attend the meeting at the close of the convention of exhibitors held in Washington on the preceding day. Various reports of committees were presented and acted upon and many routine matters were considered, several of which were referred to special committees for attention.

The following companies and individuals were elected to membership: Biograph Company, Craftsmen Film Laboratories, Eclipse Film Laboratories, A. H. Jacobs Photoplays, Inc., Paragon Films, Inc., Greater New York Slide Company, Carl Anderson, Paralta; H. C. Segal, state rights buyer, and Albert H. Cormier.

Ricord Gradwell, vice-president and general manager, World Film Corporation, and Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager, Fox Film Corporation, were elected members of the board, representing the Distributors' Divisions, which had presented their nominations to fill vacancies. C. C. Burr, Jr., was elected as a director from the General Division, upon nomination of that branch to fill a vacancy.

A new branch of the Producers' division, comprising Class C. Producers as reported as recently organized, with Joseph A. Golden of the Crystal Film Company, chairman, and L. Abrams of Craftsmen Film Laboratories as secretary. The following companies are represented in this division: Biograph Company, Craftsmen Film Laboratories, Crystal Film Laboratories, Erbograph Company, Kalem Company, Evans Film Manufacturing Company, Eclipse Film Laboratories and Paragon Films, Inc.

There was a general discussion regarding the cooperation which the industry is rendering to the various departments of the Government and reports were received indicating that the film and screen had been the means of rendering very material aid to the Federal officials in the dissemination of information in regard to the Second Liberty Loan, the Fuel Administration, War Savings certificates, Department of Agriculture, Aircraft Board, War and Navy Departments and the Red Cross War Council.

The plan for an educational campaign, presented by Executive Secretary Frederick H. Elliott, which is to be nation wide in scope, urging the public to go to the motion picture theaters and in this way do their bit towards paying war taxes, was enthusiastically approved and the directors, by resolution, extended their thanks to William R. Hearst and his syndicate of papers for the offer to furnish and assist in the distribution of a million copies of a herald entitled "Who Pays the War Tax? You Do!"

Reports were presented reviewing the work of the Service Bureau, showing upwards of 5,000 artists and photoplayers had been registered during a period of six weeks. This new department of the National Association was established through the efforts of the producers and has offices in Suite 320 and 321 Longacre Building, 1476 Broadway, under the direction of Wales Winter as general manager and Clifford Robertson as assistant manager. Many companies have taken advantage of the facilities offered by the Service Bureau and the producers were informed that an "extra" department had been opened, which was ready to meet the requirements of the producing companies with studios located in the Metropolitan District.

The report on the Motion Picture Exposition, which is to be held under the joint auspices of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America and the National Association, showed that splendid progress has been made in securing contracts, although solicitations had only been under way for a few weeks. Two floors of the Grand Central Palace have been leased and practically two-thirds of the main floor has been disposed of. President Brady urged upon the officials of every company the importance of supporting this exposition, which was the first to be conducted with a united industry behind it, and set forth many advantages to be derived by making the event a great success.

Helen Gardner to Have Own Company

Former Vitagraph Favorite Announces Intentions of Returning to the Studio at the Head of Her Own Organization.

PLANS are now under way to the end that Helen Gardner will star at the head of her own producing organization. This, strange to say, is not a strictly new experience for this recognized screen actress, who made the acquaintance of the moving picture public six years ago with the Vitagraph Company. It will be recalled that when she left the Brooklyn manufacturer's professional roster, she engaged Charles L. Gaskill as director and proceeded to make her own productions, releasing them independently. The artistic qualities of her acting and the elaborateness of her themes and settings created a very favorable impression at the time and called forth generous praise from all quarters.

Helen Gardner.

It is, therefore, no surprise that Miss Gardner should select as her medium of return before the theater-going public her former triumph, "Cleopatra," which she has embellished and done over in part so as to thoroughly modernize the reissue. It is now being offered the state right market by the Cleopatra Film Company, who promise a trade showing of the enterprise shortly after the holidays.

After "Cleopatra" has been given this showing, Miss Gardner is prepared to appear in person, to a limited extent, simultaneously with the presentation of the feature. This "personal appearance" tour will be terminated, however, as soon as the time arrives for her to begin production on her first picture to be made by her own organization, which is doubtless to assume the name of the Helen Gardner Motion Picture Corporation, with offices in the Godfrey building. Though the personnel of the company has not yet been revealed, it is expected that Charles Gaskill and Pliny P. Craft will be prominently identified with the undertaking.

WAIVE THEATER TAX ON WAR SONG.

Following up permission to use his stirring war song, "Over There," as the musical theme for the Select Pictures Corporation's war drama, "Over There," George M. Cohan has further evidenced his generosity by granting the use of the music free of tax to any theater presenting the picture on its program. This is confirmed in a letter to Select Pictures from Mr. Cohan's publishers, Leo Feist, Inc.

"Over There" is a six-reel photodrama produced by the Charles Richman Pictures Corporation with Charles Richman and Anna Q. Nilsson in the stellar roles. It is a story of every-day life built about the present war exigencies and depicts the mental struggles of a man called to the service who believes himself a coward. The picture was directed by James Kirkwood, and is being distributed by the Select Pictures Corporation.

PRIZMA TO SHOW "OUR NAVY" AT 44TH STREET THEATER.

Prizma, Inc., which makes pictures in natural colors, opened at the 44th Street Theater, New York City, on Sunday evening, December 23, with "Our Navy" done in colors. The engagement is for eight weeks.

New Tax Regulations

Bureau of Internal Revenue Explains How Theater Managers Must Make Returns—Shall Keep Daily Record of Number and Kind of Tickets Sold.

NEW regulations have just been announced by the Bureau of Internal Revenue of the Treasury Department covering the manner in which owners and managers of motion picture theaters shall account for their receipts in order to be in position to make accurate returns of the taxes collected on admissions to their respective theaters. The regulations now provide that no person shall be admitted to any place to which admission is charged unless the ticket, card or pass by which he is admitted bears evidence that the tax due has been paid. This evidence shall consist of the printing or stamping upon the ticket, card, pass or other papers evidencing the right to admission the words "tax paid." Each proprietor of any place to which admission is charged not specifically exempted from taxation by the law must provide himself with such a stamp as may be necessary for this purpose. Such stamp is to be applied to the ticket, card, pass or other evidence of the right to admission at the place where it is issued, the order provides, and any or each of these issued before but used after November 1 must, before it is used, be "validated" in respect to the tax by collecting the proper tax in respect thereof and stamping the same in accordance with the above requirement.

It is also provided that "There shall be kept in each box or ticket office of every theater, place of amusement, or other place to which admissions subject to the tax are charged a daily record of the number and kind of tickets sold and the tax collected thereon. Such record shall also show the number of passes used for admission each day and the tax collected thereon and the number of admissions of children under twelve years of age and the tax collected thereon. Each separate class of tickets sold must be so distinctly indicated as to be capable of ready verification by the Internal Revenue Department. A separate record shall be kept of the number and kind of tickets, cards, passes or other evidence of right to admission on or after November 1, 1917, paid for or issued prior to November 1, and of the tax collected in respect thereof. The monthly return, required to be filed by proprietors of all places to which admission is charged, not expressly exempted from taxation, shall include and cover amounts collected on validation of tickets, passes, cards or other evidence of the right to admission.

"The foregoing regulations as to admissions take effect on December 15, 1917, and all rulings contrary to the above are hereby revoked as to that date." C. L. LINZ.

FILM ACTOR MURDERED.

George D. Gee, the mysterious Chinaman, who was featured in the photoplay entitled "Queen X," starring Edna Goodrich in a sensational but realistic expose of the opium traffic, was murdered recently in his home at 511 Rogers avenue, Brooklyn.

For many years Gee has been an informant of the Government and aided the revenue agents in trailing scores of traffickers in drugs, with the result that a price of $500 is said to have been placed on his head by tongs interested in the opium traffic.

In the film Gee was portrayed as the managing director of the Government campaign against illicit dealers in drugs and the Government officials believe that agents of the tongs recognized him in the film and spotted him as the informant who was responsible for the numerous raids which resulted in the arrest and conviction of illicit drug dealers.

Assistant United States District Attorney Edwin A. Staton, who has successfully prosecuted many offenders during the past few years, attributes the success of the Government to the information supplied by Gee.

MOTION PICTURE MADE IN VERA CRUZ.

The first motion picture to be taken in the State of Vera Cruz, with the exception of those relating to current events, was made recently by the Mexican Film Company, of Mexico City, according to United States Consul William W. Canada, Vera Cruz, Mexico. The subjects chosen were scenes between Spaniards and Indians from "Tabaré," a work by the Uruguayan poet, Juan Zorrilla de Sammartin, and the place selected was a picturesque tropical ranch at Boca del Río, a short distance south of Vera Cruz. The apparatus and supplies were purchased in New York.

What Walsh Found in Goldwyn Studio

Enumeration of Some of the Accessories of the Big Establishment at Fort Lee.

RAOUL A. WALSH, who is to become a member of the directorial staff of Goldwyn Pictures when his contract with another firm is fulfilled, has made an exploratory tour of the Goldwyn studio at Fort Lee, N. J., for the purpose of familiarizing himself with the equipment. Unhesitatingly he pronounces the Goldwyn plant one of the world's finest.

Mr. Walsh was particularly interested in the method of illuminating what is said to be the largest electric lighted motion picture stage in the world. He smiled his approval when he was told that the lighting equipment consists of fifteen wall broadsides, seven Kliegl broadsides, thirty-three overhead Duplex lights, thirty-five floor banks of Cooper-Hewitt mercury lights, six "gooseneck" Cooper-Hewitts, fifty overhead banks of "coops" and three six-inch and four eight-inch spotlights.

The property room came in for a share of the director's attention. Its unusually complete equipment represents an investment of approximately $150,000 in furniture, rugs, oil paintings and other accessories of house furnishing. He was told that there were few things he could ask for that could not at once be produced from property stock. Of particular interest was the wardrobe room, where are hung costumes worth close to $50,000.

NEW PATHE BRANCH MANAGER AT CHICAGO.

Ralph O. Proctor has been appointed and has taken over his duties as Chicago branch manager for Pathe, succeeding C. W. Bunn, now special representative. Mr. Proctor is one of the most competent and best known film men in the Central West. He made his entry into the film business with the old Burton & Webster theaters in Chicago. For two years he remained with them. This initiatory process proved so interesting that he decided to learn the exhibiting game from the bottom up. In consequence, after leaving the Burton & Webster Company, he spent some time as a motion picture operator.

After his term of service and acquiring the rudiments in full he went with the General Film Company, and served in all capacities, ranging from inspector to branch manager in Chicago for two years. He was manager of the office until December, 1915. He then went to Des Moines, as special representative there and in Omaha and Kansas City. He later took charge of the Kansas City exchange until May, 1916.

He received an offer following that to go with Metro, and he was given the managership of the Chicago office. Leaving Metro, he went in as the head of the Standard Film Company in Chicago, which he leaves to come to the Pathe.

WILLIAM FOX TAKES OVER VICTOR STUDIO.

William Fox has taken over the former Victor studio at 638 West Forty-third street, New York City, and already has a company working there. The acquisition was necessitated, according to the Fox management, by crowded conditions existing at the five studios in New Jersey which have been operated during the past year.

The matter of studio expansion has been under consideration for some time, it is announced, but decision has been put off from time to time because, by changing companies from studio work to work on locations, it has been possible temporarily to overcome congestion.

It is understood that even this arrangement affords only temporary relief, the Fox interests having plans under way for further expansion during the coming year which probably will necessitate even larger studio facilities being provided.

WALLACE McDONALD SIGNS CONTRACT WITH TRIANGLE.

Wallace McDonald, well-known leading man, who until recently played important parts with a moving picture concern in the East, has just arrived in Los Angeles from New York and has been added to the large playing forces at the Triangle Culver City studios. Two other players of exceptional ability have also signed Triangle contracts and will be seen in productions just started. Jean Hersholt, a character artist of unusual experience, will be seen in "Little Red Decides," which is now being made under the direction of Jack Conway. Marion Skinner, the other player engaged, is one of the best known character women and grand dames of the screen.

Harlem Strand is Temporarily Enjoined

Appellate Division Decrees That Uptown Theater May Not Use Same Name as Big Downtown House.

AN important decision was handed down by the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court December 20, granting an injunction to Mitchel H. Mark, president of the Mitchel H. Mark Realty Corporation, owners of the Strand Theater at Broadway and 47th street, restraining the use of that name by another theater on 125th street, known as the "Harlem Strand."

The suit was brought some time ago, and when the matter first came before the courts the injunction was denied. Thereupon the proprietors of the Strand Theater, through their attorney, Mortimer Fishel, filed an appeal with the Appellate Division. The latter court, in reversing the opinion of the lower court, went very deeply into the history of the law as regards the protection of trade names and the grounds upon which such relief was obtainable.

The court referred to the fact that Mr. Mark was the first person in America to use the name "Strand" as the name of a theater and opened the first one in Toronto and the second one in Buffalo. The court then refers to the opening of a theater in New York and to its enormous advertising, among other things saying:

"It has erected a building devoted exclusively to the presentation of motion pictures at an expense of many hundreds of thousands of dollars, it being the first theater devoted to such use in this country, and built upon an elaborate scale. Wide publicity was given to the first performance held therein, and peculiar interest attached to it by reason of the fact that it was claimed to be the largest moving picture theater in the world. Thereafter the name of the theater was continually kept before the theater-going public by means of most elaborate advertising, more than $50,000 yearly being spent in New York City newspapers alone, in addition to advertising throughout the country, billboard announcements displayed widely in the city, similar announcements along the lines of the railroads entering New York, wireless bulletins on steamships entering this harbor, paid notices in magazines, trade papers and weekly newspapers, and a general advertising campaign extending as far as Europe, South America and Australia."

The court then took up the fact that as the patronage of plaintiffs' theater was obtained from all sections of the city the defendants, in selecting their name, were unfairly giving the impression that Mr. Mark was connected with the defendant's theater in view of the fact that it called its theater the "Harlem Strand," and it granted an injunction, concluding with these words:

"As the defendants have absolutely failed to justify or explain their adoption of a name so closely resembling that of the plaintiff, and as the obvious effect of their use of such name is to create the impression that it is conducting a branch of the plaintiff's theater or is in some way connected therewith, and as their unlawful assumption of the name in question was had with full knowledge of plaintiffs' claims and rights, we think a case was made out for the issuance of an injunction during the pendency of the action."

This is the first case to come before the courts in which it has been sought to protect the name of a theater. A few years ago Mr. Fishel instituted the first important suit concerning the protection of the titles of plays, being a suit on behalf of Robert Hilliard and Klaw & Erlanger against the General Film Company. He secured an injunction restraining the picture men from using the play entitled "A Fool There Was" as the title of a photoplay on the ground that Mr. Hilliard's play was entitled to the sole use of that title. Since then hundreds of actions have been instituted under the law established in that case concerning title of plays. The Strand case is the first in which the law has been extended to cover the names of theaters. Mr. Mark stated that he intended to prosecute every infringer of this trade name, as he had spent many hundreds of thousands of dollars in advertising, which fact was commented upon by the court in its opinion.

GOLDWYN CASTING DEPARTMENT MOVES.

Following the resignation of Adolph Klauber as casting director, Goldwyn's casting department has been moved from the New York offices at 16 East Forty-second street to the studio at Fort Lee, where all applicants will be received in future. Mr. Klauber severed his connection with Goldwyn to devote his time to personal interests.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of December 23 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"Daughter of Destiny" at the Rialto.

MADAME PETROVA was the principal attraction on the Rialto's Christmas week bill, appearing in "Daughter of Destiny," the first of the "Petrova Pictures," in which the Polish actress made her bow as head of her own producing company. The story is a dramatic vision of world events, which parallels almost exactly the recent crises which threatened to draw Denmark into the present world conflict. Mme. Petrova appears as the daughter of the American ambassador to "Belmark," where she becomes entangled in a web of diplomatic intrigue. Thomas Harding and Anders Randolf are prominent in her support. The picture was directed by George Irving and is released by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, in "The Spirit of Merry Christmas," a scenic showing the sources of water power in Western Canada, and the Rialto Animated Magazine were also on the program.

Mary Ball and the Rialto Male Quartette were the singers.

"The Seven Swans" at the Strand.

The Strand Theater has Marguerite Clark in a photo adaptation of Hans Christian Andersen's well-known fairy tale, "The Seven Swans," for Christmas week. The story is for children of all ages, and deals with the adventures of a certain Princess Tweedledee and her seven brothers. A wicked queen, desiring to gain control of the rich kingdom over which they rule, transforms the brothers into seven white swans, and orders Princess Tweedledee thrown into a dark and gloomy dungeon filled with rats. How she escapes and after three years and a day succeeds in saving her brothers and returning them to their human forms makes a fascinating photoplay. The cast supporting Miss Clarke in this Paramount picture includes Richard Barthlemess, as Prince Charming, and Daisy Belmore, as the witch. A Bray Christmas cartoon, entitled "Santa Claus' Christmas Gift to Democracy," a comedy, a zoological feature and the Strand Topical Review were also shown.

Rosa Lind and Herbert Waterous were the soloists.

Eighty-First Street Theater Bill.

At the Eighty-first Street Theater the pictures were: Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, Ella Hall and Little Zoe Ray in "My Little Boy." Thursday, Friday, Saturday, Sunday, Madge Kennedy in "Nearly Married."

"SHIRLEY KAYE" LOVERS ARE MARRIED.

An interesting romance came to light a couple of days ago in the Clara Kimball Young studio in New Rochelle, when Miss Claire Whitney and John Sunderland, both members of Miss Young's staff of players, slipped quietly away and were married.

Mr. Sunderland is a flight officer in the English aviation corps and came to this country a couple of months ago on leave. He joined Miss Young's company for the production of "Shirley Kaye," playing the part of the young English Earl who falls in love with the Western financier's daughter. The latter role was Miss Whitney's and it needed only a few rehearsals to convince the two that their make-believe love was destined to live beyond the influence of "Shirley Kaye." As Mr. Sunderland's leave of absence had very nearly expired, the wedding was planned hurriedly and the young couple left for a brief honeymoon before the date of his sailing.

EXCHANGE MAN JOINS COLORS.

Branch Manager R. S. Nelson of General Film Company's Denver office will give up his position on January 1 to enter the new National Army. He expects to be assigned to one of the Western camps and will leave immediately to join the colors. In his absence Eugene Gerbase will serve as acting manager. The Denver office will move to its new quarters at 1539 Weltson street the first of the year.

BIGELOW COOPER IN METRO PICTURE.

Bigelow Cooper, who appears as Count Adrian de Roche in the great Nazimova's initial Metro picture, "Revelation," is well remembered by picture enthusiasts as a leading player in Edison photoplays from the one-reel plays to the present-day features.

Brady Speaks for the Exposition

Says Those Who Make Exhibit Will Reach the Public and Increase Business.

By William A. Brady.

THERE are so many good reasons why the progressive producers of film and motion picture equipment will find it advantageous to exhibit at the Motion Picture Exposition in Grand Central Palace next February that it seems to be a point scarcely worth while arguing. Primarily those who exhibit will do so to increase their business, and every concern at the exposition can increase its business if that concern will make the right sort of attack. Let it be aggressive—convey the idea that it is alive and able to deliver the goods and bigger business will result.

Of course, there are those who will attempt to tell you that exhibiting is not worth the effort—not worth the cost of floor space. They are the same ones who seem to think that cheap actors are as good as real artists—the same ones who will not engage a high-priced star for fear it will not pay. They seem to lose sight of the fact that the big star has a following that is worth big money, and likewise as regards the Exposition they seem to forget that it will have its following of the biggest exhibitors and distributors in the industry, hundreds of whom will travel across the country to attend the Exposition. Let the skeptical ones get it into their heads that in taking space they are not merely renting so much space as they might in a storage warehouse—no—they are securing space and also the privilege to display their goods to thousands of interested motion picture exhibitors who are in New York for a few days to look into what is now in profit-producing. It is a case of "catch 'em while they're hot."

Now if this Exposition were merely some private promoter's scheme to make a "clean-up" for himself, as has been the case of some expositions in the past, I should not be as emphatically in favor of it. I should turn around and say, "Let the National Association run a show of its own," which is precisely what is being done in the case of the coming exposition. It is under the joint auspices of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. That ought to be sufficient guarantee for anyone that the exposition will be thoroughly representative of what is best for the industry. The bigger and better it can be made the more business exhibitors will do. Once again the watchword "cooperation" becomes the keynote. By helping the industry as a whole we help ourselves. "Unity of action spells success."

Motion picture distributors and exhibitors can learn something new every day of their lives if they keep their eyes and ears open. There are none of us so familiar with everything used in connection with motion pictures that we can walk through Grand Central Palace when the exposition opens and fails to find something new and advantageous to our business. The automobile and motorboat industries were built up principally through the exchanges of ideas and signing of contracts for distribution at their annual expositions. Hundreds of thousands of the general public visited these expositions and became enthused over cars and boats. Last February the aeroplane manufacturers held an exposition in Grand Central Palace, and it was a very fortunate thing they did, too, for it resulted in many decided advances in the industry upon which we depend largely to win the war. The florists and horticulturists, the chemical industries, the electrical goods makers, the hotel men, all have their expositions and pay the concerns who exhibit, as is evidenced by the fact that they exhibit year after year and that the expositions grow bigger each season.

Now the motion picture industry is wholly dependent upon the general public. The more movie "fans" we can create, the more business we do. All the more reason why we should cooperate in every way to get more of the public interested in motion pictures. Thousands of visitors at the forthcoming exposition will go home and talk to their families and friends about what they saw of exceptional interest. The greatest advertising in the world is word-of-mouth recommendation and praise. That is what all printed advertising aims to inspire. It must be borne in mind that any big metropolitan exposition numbers visitors from many parts of the country, for a large percentage of New York's pouplation is made up of visitors from other cities and they go back home and talk of what they saw in Gotham.

In short, news of an exposition like the forthcoming one goes all over the country and increases the prestige of the motion picture industry and makes more movie fans, in addition to making increased business for film people.

HOW FOX HAS EXPANDED IN THE WEST.

Just two years ago, in December, 1915, William Fox sent his first company of motion picture players to Los Angeles. William Farnum headed this pioneer organization of about thirty persons. The Fox forces now have working regularly on the Coast four dramatic companies and five comedy companies, in addition to the periodic production of spectacular photoplays.

The corporation has expanded in California from a concern originally covering less than an acre of ground there to one now owning five acres in Hollywood, fifteen on Western avenue, and ten acres in locations at Silver Lake, Fernando Valley and Chatsworth. Where there were at first only two stages, Mr. Fox now has eight in constant use, and will undoubtedly have to build more within the near future if the present rapid expansion continues. To reach this high state of development, the corporation spent more than $1,000,000 during the first year following its invasion of the Coast.

TWO MORE STARS ON TRIANGLE SERVICE FLAG.

Two more stars will be added to the service flag at the Triangle Culver City studios this week. J. R. McGlone, who worked in the Employment Bureau, has enlisted in the United States cavalry. Although under twenty-one when the draft law went into effect, McGlone could no longer withstand the lure of the olive drab. Perry Evenvold, who has been Triangle-Keystone director, and Reggie Morris' cinematographer for more than a year, has joined the marines.

WILFRED LUCAS WILL STAGE BLUEBIRD PLAYS.

Wilfred Lucas, one of the most skillful directors in the photoplay industry, has joined the directing staff of the Bluebird studios at Universal City, Cal., and will start shortly upon his first Bluebird photoplay, which will feature Ruth Clifford and Monroe Salisbury. Mr. Lucas, as is well known, is something of a pioneer in the cinema world, having the distinction of being the first dramatic leading man to desert the stage for the motion picture screen.

"THE SEVEN PEARLS" GOOD, SAYS MOSS.

"The Seven Pearls," the Pathe serial featuring Mollie King, Creighton Hale and Leon Barry, released in September, has been a success through every one of its fifteen episodes, according to B. F. Moss, the owner of a circuit of theaters in New York City catering to the best people.

"'The Seven Pearls' had a good story and was well put on," said Mr. Moss when asked to what he attributed the hold this serial had obtained upon his audiences.

HARRIS IN MARINES; SENDS GREETINGS.

To the exhibitors and friends of Sidney Harris, late of Goldwyn, he wishes to etxtend Christmas and New Year's greetings, and regrets his inability to be with them this year owing to the fact that he has joined the marines.

STRAND SERVICE FLAG HAS 21 STARS.

The Strand Theater service flag has twenty-one stars representing the following employees now serving under the colors: Bruce Weyman, 1st American Aero Corps, stationed in France; James McManus, Fordham Ambulance Corps, France; Harry Johnson, 7th New York, Fort Wadsworth; William McFetridge, U. S. Heavy Artillery, France; Vincent Cruise, 2nd Field Artillery, Camp Wadsworth; Arthur Burnett, 7th New York Medical Corps, Camp Wadsworth; Francis Sutherland, Bandmaster 1st N. Y. Field Artillery, Camp Wadsworth; Jack Fosket, 302nd Engineer Corps, Camp Gordon; Bernard Skahill, Naval Academy, Bancroft Hall, Annapolis, Md.; William Lebish, U. S. Regulars, Pershings, France; James Murray, 69th Regiment, France; Robert Foskert, Harvard College, attached for wireless instruction by U. S. A.; Arthur Depew, Jr., U. S. Regulars, France; Percy Eleman, Signal Corps, British Army, France; William Dobbs, 302nd Engineers, Camp Gordon, Ga.; James Clark, 306th Supply Co., Camp Gordon, Ga.; Jack Faeder, 307th Field Artillery, Camp Upton; R. Bustanoby, Military Academy, West Point; Roy Whitelaw, U. S. S. Indiana; William Broderick, U. S. S. McDonough, U. S. Torpedo Fleet British Waters; Charles Blumenthal, Battery E, 2nd N. Y. Field Artillery, Camp Wadsworth.

Organizer Rogers in Portland

Holds Enthusiastic Meeting of Oregon Motion Picture Exhibitors' League.

D. G. ROGERS, national organizer of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, called the Portland, Ore., exhibitors together at the league rooms in the Majestic Theater Building, Saturday, December 15, and enthused them more than they have been for some time.

Mr. Rogers struck a popular chord when he began by saying that the first thing that attracted his attention when he came to Portland was the statement by a man there that the moving picture was worse than the saloon.

"I say that the motion picture industry is as good as the churches," said Mr. Rogers, commenting on the statement. "I say there isn't an institution in the world that gives more good for fifteen cents than the motion picture."

Mr. Rogers spoke of the strong support the motion picture industry was giving the Government in the war, told of the conditions in other parts of the country and showed the Portland men they were not alone making sacrifices for the benefit of our country.

Speaking of the advance deposits, Mr. Rogers stated that the abolition of that unfair institution rested entirely with the motion picture men.

He made many suggestions for the betterment of the league, which the local men will act on. There will be an election of officers about the first of the year, at which time the new plans will be acted upon.

Mr. Ochs Makes a Statement.

The resolution adopted at the Convention of Exhibitors, held in Washington, December 11-12, in which reference is made to the "action of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry in filing criminal charges against the Motion Picture Exhibitors in Brooklyn," etc., is in error, as the National Association has taken no such action whatsoever. What the introducer evidently intended to infer was the action which was taken by the Distributors' Branch and which was not a concerted action taken by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, representing four other branches of the trade.

[The foregoing statement has been issued by Lee A. Ochs, chairman of the convention that adopted the resolution here referred to. His failure to call attention to the error at the time the resolution was introduced probably was due to an oversight.—Ed.]

New England Exhibitors Meet

At Annual Gathering of Massachusetts and Rhode Island Leagues It Is Decided to Send Large Delegation to Exposition.

THE annual meeting of the Massachusetts and Rhode Island branches of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America was held at the Quincy House, Boston, on the afternoon of Tuesday, December 8. About fifty members were in attendance. Ernest H. Horstmann, acting president, was in the chair.

The reports of the various officers for the past year were read and accepted. The four delegates to the recent convention in Washington—Messrs. Horstmann, Black, Lydon and Conn—made detailed and comprehensive reports of the happenings and of the work accomplished in Washington and New York along get-together lines. The reports were enthusiastically received, and a vote of thanks was tendered to the committee.

Sam Grant, assistant manager of the National Motion Picture Exposition, which is to be held at the Grand Central Palace, New York City, February 2 to 10, made a report of the successful outlook, and it was voted to endorse and support the exposition in every way and to send a delegation of at least 100 Boston Boosters to the New York exposition. The following committee was appointed to arrange the details, including special cars, hotel arrangements and special features: Messrs. Gregory, Jake Laurie, Kincaide, Wasserman and Howard.

It is planned now to have the party leave Boston on the Knickerbocker Limited at 1 p. m. of Tuesday, February 5, and spend Tuesday night, Wednesday and Thursday at the exposition. Judging by the enthusiasm and interest displayed by those present the party of New England invaders will number at least 200, including the Boosters, their wives and friends.

It was also voted to appeal to the film manufacturers, distributors and the supply and accessory men to give this, the first joint National Exposition, their fullest support and co-operation.

Owing to the fact that it was reported a number of the members had failed to secure their notices of the meeting in time to attend it was decided to postpone the election of officers until Tuesday afternoon, January 22, at 2 p. m., at the Quincy House. Following the election a banquet will be held in the parlor of the hotel at 6:15 p. m.

Among those present were: Messrs. Lord, Somerville, Montague, East Boston; Eyester, Boston; Moscow, Cambridge; Mailey, Brighton; Black, Lowell; Nelson, Lowell; Conn, Providence; Hodgdon, Wakefield; Daniels, Lynn; Ramsdell, Malden; Benelov, Waltham; Gregory, Dorchester; M. J. Lydon, Dorchester; P. E. Lydon, South Boston; D. Laurie, Boston; J. Laurie, Boston; Howard, Boston; Hartford, Providence; Grant, Boston; Hamilton, Dorchester; Dadmun, Boston; Wasserman, Roxbury; Kincaide, Quincy; Gilman, Dorchester; Drown, Swampscott; Horstmann, Lynn; Giles, Framingham; Somerby, Boston; Brown, Allston; Sumner, Boston; Ryan, Attleboro; Bolen, Providence, R. I.; Walsh, Roxbury; Rollins, Boston; Traham, Centerville, R. I.; Mrs. Ayers, Boston, and Mildred Champagne, Boston.

Michigan State Association of Exhibitors at Majestic Theatre, Jackson, Mich....January 7 and 8

United Exhibitors Open Quarters

Showmen of Philadelphia and Its Vicinity Hold Meeting in New York—William Alexander, Representative.

THE United Exhibitors' Association, Inc., which includes in its membership motion picture showmen in Philadelphia and its vicinity, held a meeting at the Hotel Astor on Friday, December 21. There were thirty-six members present, representing 109 houses with a total of 156 days' bookings. In attendance were the officers elected at a previous meeting. These were: President, Robert W. Kincade, Philadelphia, owner of a chain of theaters; vice-president, Edward J. O'Keefe, Atlantic City, N. J., three houses; secretary, Joseph McCready, Philadelphia; recording secretary, Jay Emanuel, Philadelphia; treasurer, William J. Freihafer, Philadelphia, chain of theaters; also a board of directors of fifteen members.

A committee of five was appointed to negotiate an amalgamation with the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

The meeting was addressed by representatives of the home offices of the various distributing companies.

It is said 80 per cent. of the houses in the organization formerly booked through the Stanley Booking Company, of Philadelphia. In the 109 theaters represented are the J. Fred Nixon-Nirdlinger and the Freihafer chains of houses.

The organization will establish headquarters in New York, which will be in charge of William Alexander.

REEL TAX FIGHT KEEN IN ST. LOUIS.

The Exhibitors' League of St. Louis, through its president, Joseph Mogler, has issued strict orders to its members to "stick to the last" against paying the 15 cents per film assessed against exhibitors by the film companies.

The "war" between the film men and exhibitors over this charge is growing keen there; many of the houses have canceled all contracts for films on which the assessments have been proposed, while some of the film managers have received orders from New York to refuse release of any film to exhibitors who do not pay the assessment in cash in advance or at the time of the release.

Many of the exhibitors have large sums now held against them on the books of the film offices. Collection of the assessments for back films will, in all probability, reach the courts, as the only possible solution of the difficulty. This action is already being discussed among the exhibitors.

NEW YORK LOCAL TO MEET DECEMBER 27.

Manhattan Local No. 1 met at its rooms at West 42nd street, on Wednesday, December 19. The meeting was called to hear the reports of the delegates who attended the joint convention of exhibitors at Washington, December 12. After the hearing of the reports the meeting entered into a discussion of election of officers for the coming year. It was decided on motion that a special meeting be called for Thursday, December 27, at 11 A. M. at the headquarters, 218 West 42nd street. It was decided that at this meeting the advisability of requesting an amalgamation of the three local exhibitors' organizations be taken into consideration, also the selection of new league rooms be acted upon. This meeting will undoubtedly be the most important of the year and all the members are earnestly requested to attend.

MICHIGAN EXHIBITORS' CONVENTION.

The Michigan State Association of Exhibitors, branch of the A. E. A., will meet at Jackson, Mich., in the Majestic theater, January 7 and 8, for its annual mid-winter convention. President S. A. Moran is sending out notices to that effect to all exhibitors, requesting that they attend and participate in the discussion of the most important problems confronting the exhibitors of the State. A large crowd is expected.

EXHIBITORS URGE CHANGE IN TAX LEVY.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of the Northwest, of which James Gilosky is president and Clyde H. Hitchcock is secretary, has issued an appeal to Congress asking it to change the present war levy on the motion picture industry. The association favors paying a tax based on gross receipts rather than one cent on ten or fraction. It proposes to Congress a flat 10 per cent. payment on the entire business of the theater. The meeting was held in Minneapolis, November 30. Present were exhibitors from Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Wisconsin.

FEITLER, TEMPORARY SECRETARY, PITTSBURGH LEAGUE.

M. Feitler, of the Elmore theater, is serving as temporary secretary of the Pittsburgh local of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, which position was made vacant recently by the death of G. A. Sahner. The election of a permanent secretary will probably be deferred until the annual meeting in June. Miss Beatrice Dobson is acting as assistant secretary, and is in charge of the league headquarters, McCance building.

FOX PUSHING SOUTH AMERICAN TRADE.

Photographs which recently have been received here of the branch offices of the Fox Film Corporation in Rio de Janeiro are labeled by the manager: "Just to remind you that this office was the first one established by William Fox in South America."

As a matter of fact, according to the Fox management, the Rio de Janeiro office was one of the first the corporation established outside of the United States. Fox also claims credit for having been the first American producer to invade the South American field with big five and six-reel features. The policy, it is claimed, has justified itself, bringing success where other shorter, lighter pictures had largely failed.

The propaganda work of the Fox institution in South America is done exclusively by persons in the employ of the New York office and is directed from this city. It is contended that the success which attended the branch office policy as applied to Rio de Janeiro was largely responsible for Fox's extension of this plan to practically all of the South American territory.

GIEGERICH WITH PATHE.

Charles Giegerich, who has had long experience in the motion picture industry and principally known as a sales and publicity promoter, is now connected with Pathe's publicity department.

Mr. Giegerich organized the publicity department and designed the trade mark of the Vitagraph—V. S. L. E.—and as publicity director of that company originated and edited its unique house organ and wrote the initial sales letters on the features released by the four contributing producing companies.

For the Pathe Company Mr. Giegerich will devote attention to publicizing Big-Star-Big-Story features and several of the special de luxe productions that Pathe will present during the coming year, beginning with Rudyard Kipling's "The Naulahka." The "Pathe Sidelights," a press sheet of pertinent notes written in a light vein, will also be a part of his weekly contribution to the newspapers.

The Testing of the Business

Shall Existing Evils Be Uprooted or Permitted to Remain and Let Things Take Their Uncertain Course?

THE year 1917 has been a year of testing for the moving picture industry, but only of preparatory testing. The duration of the war and the uncertainty of its close promise vital testing for 1918, if not for the years immediately following. This, instead of making more fearful or despondent the men who have in their keeping the three great departments of the business, should act as a stimulant on every man in it to safeguard the business against all odds.

It is undeniable that the business heretofore has been conducted extravagantly by the producing and distributing departments, while those engaged in the exhibition of pictures have been just as extravagant in their way and just as selfish in their ends.

There has been a lack of sympathy and of mutual understanding, and even of the desire to cooperate for the good of the business, in all departments of the industry.

In the producing end it has been a case of every man for himself and the devil take the hindmost. And this has led to the building up and the support of an expensive distributing system by each of the producing companies which, in combination, impose on the business a burden that cannot be borne much longer.

And, certainly, it cannot be borne, if the war continues two or three years longer.

In addition, stars have been created by the demands of moving picture fans, the annual income of each amounting to more than the average wealth of well-to-do people, while exhibitors have failed to raise their admission prices correspondingly to meet the increased cost of their programs. And here we have an added burden on the industry.

This evil also will be tested by a prolonged war, and it will be shown that it cannot be borne.

In their mad competition for business the exhibitors have accustomed their patrons to a complete change of programs daily, a custom which can be pronounced one of the greatest extravagances in the fifth industry in the United States. This led to a forcing of the producers to double and treble their output, often at the cost of art and finish in their productions, never to speak of the great extra capital involved, or the tendency to make moving picture entertainment cheap and commonplace. The neighborhood theater was the chief cause of this exorbitant demand, and poor showmanship on the part of the exhibitor led to its being granted.

A prolonged war will, most likely, lead to the discontinuance of this evil.

And this brings us to the question, "Is it necessary to await the uprooting of these evils by the enforced rigors of war rather than by the workings of cautious foresight on the part of the men in all branches of the industry?"

This is not a time to be blind to our interests when we know that harder times are yet to come. Is it not a time when there should be a great, combined getting-together of producers, distributors and exhibitors? Is it not a time when our national conventions should be held for the three great departments of the business, and the proceedings earnestly participated in by all of them for the general safety of the industry and the protection of all?

It is certainly not a time when the affairs of this great industry should be permitted to drift and take their uncertain course.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Patrons of the Perfection pictures program are awaiting with considerable expectancy the first release of the series of one-reel comedies written by James Montgomery Flagg, the well-known artist who is noted for his beautiful creations of varied types of girls in black and white and in colors. These pictures, as should be already known, bear the Edison brand and will be released every alternate week, beginning January 2. There are twelve comedies in the series and the George Kleine system expects they will meet with great popularity by patrons throughout the country.

The license committee of the Chicago city council met Thursday morning, December 20, to determine the question of increased licenses on moving picture theaters seating 400 people and upwards. After a brief discussion, at the suggestion of Joseph Hopp, president of Chicago Local M. P. E. L. of A., it was decided to put the matter over until after the holidays for final disposition, when the committee will again meet on the call of its chairman.

The license committee also held a conference with exchange managers regarding the final disposition on the increase of their licenses and a sub-committee was appointed to visit the exchanges of the city and ascertain what would be a proper and fair increase. Ike Van Ronkel, manager of the Jewel Film Corporation, informed the committee that the larger exchanges could afford the increased license, but that it would put the smaller exchanges out of business.

A joint committee of the M. P. E. L. of A. and of the M. P. T. O. Association, comprised of Joseph Hopp, Charles Stuart, Herman Krug and August Zilligen, Jr., called at the office of the city fuel administrator last week, in the State Council Defense Building, 120 West Adams street, to discuss the matter of lightless fronts at night for moving picture theaters. They suggested to Administrator Williams that Monday night be substituted for Sunday night, but were informed that National Fuel Administrator Dr. H. A. Garfield, Washington, D. C., was alone empowered to make the change. The city fuel administrator explained that the Government had no intention to be unreasonable in the matter of lights on lightless nights, as two arc lamps can be used in front of each house, or, if canopy lights are used, that half of them can be kept burning; also that in case the theater has arch lights that a few of these can be kept burning. Administrator Williams was explicit, however, in stating that all house electric signs must be darkened on prohibitive nights.

Luman C. Mann, who for several months past has been in the United States Aviation Corps at Fort Sill, Okla., was given an honorable discharge on December 4, due to ill health. Mr. Mann is now back with the Owl Features Incorporation, in this city, and his numerous friends have been surprised to see him once more in civilian clothes. If Mr. Mann's health permits, he hopes to get into the camera division of the army in the spring. I have read the honorable discharge given Mr. Mann by T. J. Fuller, Jr., acting adjutant and commander of the cadet attachment, which says in part: "In his classes he averaged above 90 per cent. when 100 per cent. was the maximum. His work was highly commended by his instructors. His health, however, was such that he was unable to perform all the duties required of him. I take pleasure in recommending him as a thoroughly reliable and intelligent soldier, worthy of any trust, and capable for any work which does not subject him to physical strain."

The Allen Film Corporation of this city, gave an invitation showing of "Mother" at the Ziegfeld Theater, Wednesday afternoon, December 19. The Grainger Film Corporation owns the rights to this picture in Illinois, Michigan, Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas, Missouri, Oklahoma, Texas, Arkansas, Ohio and Indiana, and the Allen Film Corporation will attend to its distribution in the territory mentioned, the release date being set for February 1. This six-reel feature has been adapted from Eden Phillpotts' novel of that name, the production being made by the McClure Pictures, of New York, under the direction of George Loane Tucker. Elizabeth Risdon appears in the leading role.

F. M. Brockwell, for some time past manager of the Goldwyn Chicago branch office and previous to that associate manager of the Central Film Company, has resigned from his position with the Goldwyn company to become manager of the Paramount Chicago branch office under the direction of Max Goldstein, to take effect January 1. Sidney Goldman will succeed Mr. Brockell as Chicago manager of the Goldwyn branch.

Members of the M. P. E. L. of A. and of the M. P. T. O. Association of America throughout the state of Illinois are decidedly against the enforcement of lightless nights on Sundays, as it will work a big injury to the business. On Sunday nights all store lights are out, which renders the streets entirely dark except for the lighted fronts of picture theaters. To put out the lights in front of picture theaters would make the streets completely dark and render them practically dead, as people do not care for traveling in dark streets these winter nights, subject to hold-ups and other dangers. Exhibitors generally strongly advocate that if there must be two lightless nights, as ordered by Fuel Administrator Garfield, it is preferable to have some other night than Sunday chosen. James A. Garfield, fuel administrator, selected Thursday and Sunday for the two nights a week when the lighted fronts of theaters will be darkened. It is the general desire of the owners of picture theaters throughout the state that the lightless-front nights shall be changed to Thursday and Monday. All dramatic and vaudeville theaters also join with exhibitors in having lightless nights changed to Thursday and Monday.

Fred M. Hartman, assistant national exposition manager, arrived in the city Monday, December 17, having visited Washington, Cleveland and Indianapolis on his way to this point from Manhattan, in the interests of the New York exposition which will open February 2. Mr. Hartman has been very busy in Chicago since his arrival, securing space buyers. I understand that Mr. Hartman has been very successful, both in Washington, Cleveland and Indianapolis, in this respect and that he is doing well in the Windy City.

Harry Birch, the Mutual Weekly cameraman, had a narrow escape from severe injuries or death on Sunday, December 16. While motoring in a big passenger car to Jackson Park, this city, accompanied by five young women who were to pose for the Mutual Weekly, his car was hit by a street car and his right shoulder dislocated. The young women escaped injury, but were badly shaken up.

A. S. Dowd, at one time special representative for Universal's Screen Magazine, Current Events and Animated Weekly, has been appointed sales representative of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, working directly under E. H. Goldstein, general manager of Universal exchanges. Mr. Dowd expects to leave for the Detroit office about the opening of the new year, and after organizing a staff of special salesmen in that city will proceed to Buffalo. He will afterward make a round of Universal exchanges throughout the country. Irving N. Mack, publicity manager for Universal's Chicago film exchange, was recently appointed service manager. He will be given charge of the sales promotion department in this city when Mr. Dowd leaves for Detroit.

Attorneys for Charles Chaplin were granted an injunction from Federal Judge Carpenter last week restraining the Strand Feature Film Company from using a counterfeit Charlie Chaplin film, pieced together with cuts from other films in which the real Charles Chaplin had appeared.

William D. Taylor Signs With Famous-Lasky

WILLIAM D. TAYLOR, the well-known director, has signed up for a long term with the Famous Players-Lasky-Morosco forces. This is Mr. Taylor's third contract with the Paramount people, under whose trade marks he has directed a number of their stars, including Edna Goodrich, Vivian Martin, House Peters, Dustin Farnum and George Beban, and his "Pasquale" with the latter was one of the classics of the screen.

William D. Taylor.

Taylor's success lies largely in his command of every phase of his story before he starts work, and having been a noted actor, he knows how to get the best work out of his artists, and is a genius at bringing out characterization.

Very much of a man, he is highly respected by his colleagues and holds the highest position in the Directors' Association which, with others, he was instrumental in forming.

He traveled far and much and his own experiences in different parts of the world would make, of themselves, good photoplays.

William D. Taylor directed for the Balboa company and with the American at Santa Barbara before joining the Morosco concern, and acted leads with the Vitagraph and with Thomas H. Ince before that, one of his most notable performances being his Captain Alvarez in the feature of that name with the Vitagraph.

Mr. Taylor is at present producing "Bunker Bean," and recently completed a picturized version of Mark Twain's "Tom Sawyer."

ARTHUR KANE ON TRIP FOR SELECT.

General Manager Arthur S. Kane, of the Select Pictures' organization, left town December 17 for a trip to Cleveland, Detroit and Buffalo, which points he was unable to visit during his recent tour of branches in the Middle West, owing to pressure of business in the home office, which resulted in his returning earlier than he had expected.

Cleveland was Mr. Kane's first objective, where he was received by Sam E. Morris, who is Select's Cleveland branch manager, and who also has supervision over the Cincinnati and Detroit exchanges. After a day's stay in Cleveland, Mr. Kane, accompanied by Mr. Morris, moved on to Detroit, where they were in conference with W. D. Ward, manager of the Select exchange in that city.

On Thursday Mr. Kane arrived in Buffalo, and spent the day with Charles R. Rogers, managers of the Select branch there, returning to New York the following day.

"GUS" PHILLIPS IN PROMINENT METRO ROLES.

Augustus Phillips, a Metro favorite, is seen in prominent roles in two new releases under the parrot trade mark, "Blue Jeans," starring Viola Dana, in which he plays Jack Bascom, and "Daybreak," starring Emily Stevens, in which he is seen as Dr. David Brett.

Triangle Companies Under One Roof

Keystone Players Move to Culver City—Davis Makes Flying Trip to New York.

TWICE crossing the continent in less than a month, Vice-President and General Manager H. O. Davis, of the Triangle, has departed for New York to complete plans for extended producing activities at the Culver City plant.

While in the East Mr. Davis will also arrange for the purchase and production of a series of famous plays. The first of these, upon which work will soon be started, is "The Servant in the House," by Charles Rann Kennedy. Mr. Davis expects to return to Los Angeles within a few weeks.

H. O. Davis.

The removal of the Triangle - Keystone comedy players to the Culver City studio from the old Majestic-Fine Arts plant on Sunset Boulevard, Hollywood, has given the Triangle plant the appearance of a circus lot during the past few days. The seven Keystone companies have been transported to their new home and installed on the new large stage which was recently built for their accommodation. Although the move involved scores of players and workmen and tons of baggage and properties, it was accomplished without confusion or lost time.

The feature companies at the Triangle plant started three new plays during the past week and the production department is working a day and night shift to keep pace with the nine directors working. In addition to three new plays just started, three directors are in various stages on their pictures, while two five-reel dramas and a comedy drama have been made ready.

Frank Borzage will have as his next Triangle offering, "Iron and Lavender," from the story by the same name by Hapsburg Liebe. Director Raymond Wells will next do "Work and Its Worth."

Director Jack Conway has started work on "Little Red Decides," a screen adaptation of the story of the same name by William M. McCoy.

Director Walter Edwards has started work on "Real Folks," the story by Mrs. Kate Corbaley which won first prize in a recent contest. The continuity was written by Jack Cunningham.

Olive Thomas has completed her fifth Triangle vehicle, "Limousine Life," under the direction of Jack Dillon.

Director Gilbert P. Hamilton, working with an all-star cast including William Desmond, Charles Gunn, Jack Richardson, Walt Whitman, Eugene Burr, Mitzi Gould, Ann Kroman and Claire McDowell, is putting the finishing touches to his second Triangle offering, "Captain of His Soul," a screen adaptation of Eleanoret Kinkade's story, "Shackles."

Director Thomas Heffron reports good progress on "The Hopper," from Meredith Nicholson's story of the same name.

Director Cliff Smith and his cowboy star are making rapid progress on "Keith of the Border," from Randall Parrish's novel of the same name.

The three stories completed and now in the editing department are "Mr. Butterfly," directed by E. Mason Hopper; "Limousine Life," Olive Thomas' latest vehicle, and "The Three Godsons of Jeanette Gontreau."

With the American Players

Mary Miles Minter Picture Completed—Bill Russell Has Narrow Escape and Gets Black Eye.

AT the American studios in Santa Barbara, Director Henry King has completed the fifth of the present Mary Miles Minter series, entitled "Madamoiselle Tiptoe." The story was written by Arthur Berthelet and adapted for the screen by Elizabeth Mahoney.

Bill Russell has been nursing a beautiful black eye, which was not secured in a fistic encounter. It happened while Director Edward Sloman was filming some automobile chase scenes for "Detective Dan Cupid." Russell was riding in a motor car driven by Harvey Clark, the well known character actor, who is included in the cast. The scene was a narrow road with a mountain cliff on the left, and ten feet from the other side a sheer drop of thirty feet to a river bed below, but not noticeable from the road. Jasper was ordered to turn the car around and drive back to the camera. He lost control in making the turn and drove to the edge of an enbankment, one wheel going over. "Big Bill," who was wearing a heavy overcoat, made a flying leap to safety, but his coat became entangled on the door of the car and brought his well known right optic in violent collision with the windshield. However, he leaped to the road, and so did Harvey, but the machine did not fare so well, plunging over the bank.

A. A. Bonnard, formerly manager of the automobile department of the American, has gained admission to the Aviation Corps and is now training at the San Antonio, Texas, camp.

The American company employes banqueted young Bonnard in Santa Barbara during his short stop-over while he was en route to San Antonio from Camp Lewis, from which point he was transferred.

A Visit to the Sanborn Laboratories.

A representative of the Moving Picture World recently inspected the new plant of the Sanborn Laboratories at Drying Room of Sanborn Laboratories.

Culver City, which is owned and operated by Pat Burke and Clyde Slater.

This cut illustrates the largest drying room on the Pacific Coast, which measures 30 by 110 feet. The equipment in the room consists of six drums, 12 feet by 12, which have a capacity of 18,000 feet of film an hour. A record was recently made at this plant when the negative of a two-reel comedy was received at the plant at 3 o'clock in the afternoon and that night the laboratories shipped ten release prints to the Eastern exchanges.

The Sanborn Laboratories are specializing in release print work. Among their customers are D. W. Griffith, W. H. Clifford Photoplay Company, Diando-Pathe Company, the Rolin-Pathe Company, Marie Dressler Company, the Essanay Company and the Bernstein studios.

Opening of Kinema Theater

Brilliant Audience at a Premier Presentation of "The Woman God Forgot" at Los Angeles' Latest Photoplay House.

THE new Kinema Theater opened in a blaze of glory on Saturday night, December 15. "The Woman God Forgot," the Lasky-De Mille production featuring Geraldine Farrar, received its premier presentation in this city. Never in the history of the Los Angeles amusement world had such a brilliant audience been assembled in a motion picture house. It was a "first night" recalling the most notable occasions of similar import when the spoken drama ruled supreme, and a grand opera could scarcely have had a more magnificent launching. Not only all the bright and shining stars of the California photoplay colony were present, but a great many of the most prominent people of Los Angeles, including the mayor of the city.

The program opened with a trumpet fanfare and the display of the national banner by three jackies in uniform. Then Emil Kehrlein, Jr., the manager of the house, appeared on the stage and made a brief address, dedicating the house to the people of Los Angeles. W. J. Dodd, architect of the theater, followed with a humorous talk about the trials of a poor architect in building a motion picture house, which drew roars of laughter from the audience. Cecil B. De Mille, the Lasky producer, and the director of the photoplay of the evening, then appeared on the stage and spoke at length on the advance of the cinema art in the last ten years, illustrating his speech with an exhibition of films as they were made ten years ago and today. The first picture was a "Spirit of '76" drama, showing the American and English troops in battle. The battle scenes certainly were a parody. For instance, the American army started out from their station in three feet of snow to fight the British and the battle occurred immediately in a June day scene, as Mr. De Mille explained, and then the British retreated from this mild summer landscape into the three feet of snow again. Interior scenes in those days were absolutely unknown and whenever anybody wanted to see General Washington, the poor general had to leave his comfortable room and go out in the snow. As a comparison Mr. De Mille projected a few feet of his own battle scenes from "Joan the Woman," which were received by the audience with thunderous applause.

During a short intermission serpentine rolls were distributed among the audience and the auditorium soon was decorated with the serpentine streamers, like a masquerade ball. Then the lights went out and Cecil B. De Mille's latest masterpiece, "The Woman God Forgot," was projected on the screen.

Admission was by invitation only. Seventh street for blocks was lined with smart equipages. But even the theater, with its twenty-four hundred seats and its ample aisles, could not accommodate all who were drawn to the newest home of the photodrama. The lobby itself—a striking feature of the interior—gorgeously carpeted and tapestried, was invaded throughout the evening and the doorman had a difficult time.

This is the third of the theaters built by Emil Kehrlein, Sr., the others being in Oakland and Fresno. This is the largest, however; in fact, it stands as one of the most ambitious theaters on the Coast dedicated exclusively to motion pictures.

U. S. Corporation in Los Angeles.

Announcement has been made that, in furtherance of its plan of having capable representation in the largest cities throughout the country, the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation has opened an office at 514 West Eighth street, Los Angeles, to supply the Southern California and Arizona territory with its feature productions.

Harvey E. Gausman has been selected as manager of the local Exchange. The first three releases of the new organization are "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," "Those Who Pay" and "The Belgian."

City Censorship Again Threatened.

City Prosecutor Widney has announced he will send his motion-picture commissioner ordinance to the council. This came as a surprise to many around the City Hall, who believed the plan to revive the film censorship in any form had been killed. It is the city prosecutor's idea that many taxpayers desire such a censorship as the ordinance provides, and that it is a question for the Council to decide and not himself.

"An organization is working on a license plan for all amusement houses that would be far more objectionable to film theaters, exchanges and producers than this ordinance," he said. "The plan these persons have is to compel all amusement houses to obtain a license to do business from the Police Commission. This would permit the revocation of their licenses for an infraction of the commission rules, while the censor commissioner would only pass on films and eliminate those that were objectionable. Then, too, the film owner, renter or producer has the privilege of an appeal from the commissioner to the Police Commission."

The prosecutor says the provisions of the censor ordinance are not fully understood. "Three men conducting film exchanges have called on me and, after reading the ordinance, pronounced themselves as in favor of it and stating it worked no hardship on them," says the city prosecutor.

Willis & Inglis Build Studio.

The Willis & Inglis studios in East Hollywood are approaching completion, and one company making two-reel comedies with Fay Tincher, is now working there. These studios formerly belonged to the Kalem company and were recently taken over by Willis & Inglis, who have considerably improved and enlarged the property.

The enlarged outdoor stage now measures 65 feet by 110, and is to be added to, and an indoor studio covering floor space of 50 feet by 100 feet is now completed. The electrical equipment is being installed. A mill is under construction. A laboratory building has been started and an up-to-date equipment is ready for installation. This laboratory will be under the management of Orrin Denny, one of the best laboratory men in the business.

With its well built and equipped property, projection and dressing rooms, scene docks and the improvements now being added, the Willis & Inglis studios will be among the best fitted up studios in Los Angeles.

Fairbanks Will Run Red Cross Rodeo.

Douglas Fairbanks will give a Red Cross Rodeo at Washington Park January 12. Donald Crisp will be in charge of the field, with Fred and Ed Burns as directors of the arena. Fairbanks has telegraphed Sam Brownell, champion bucking bronco rider of the world, asking him to come on for the rodeo, the entire proceeds of which will go toward swelling the Red Cross fund. The prices will range from 50 cents to $2, with boxes selling at a premium. Mr. Fairbanks promises to give $500 for a box, providing ten others will pay the same amount. Almost all the prominent Los Angeles society women are members of the committee, headed by Mrs. J. M. Danziger, and it goes without saying that the eleven boxes at $500 each will be disposed of in a few days.

Sid Grauman's House Nearing Completion.

So rapidly have the artists, sculptors and decorators pushed their work on the new "Million Dollar Theater," at Third and Broadway, that Sid Grauman, the manager, was enabled to announce plans for the formal opening of the playhouse early in January, the final date depending on the completion of some of the delicately wrought interior decorations.

All the detail of construction involved in the rearing of so elaborate a structure as the new theater is being finished on or before schedule time, thus making it possible to open several weeks before the time originally fixed. Already the scaffolding is being torn away from before the massive columns and huge decorative figures in the main auditorium and the debris is being cleared away from the floors for the placing of the cushioned chairs, installation of lighting fixtures and the various paraphernalia of the house.

Lucas to Direct for Bluebird.

Wilfred Lucas has joined the directing staff at the Bluebird studios and will start shortly upon his first Bluebird photoplay, which will feature Monroe Salisbury and Ruth Clifford. During his stage career Mr. Lucas was featured in "Quo Vadis" for two years, produced and played the principal comedy part in "The Heir to the Hoorah," and played opposite Rose Stahl in "The Chorus Lady," which he also staged. He broke into pictures at the time D. W. Griffith was directing at the Biograph. After three years he joined the Universal and later went with Keystone. Rejoining the Universal, he staged one of their first serials, "The Trey o' Hearts." Joining the Triangle he directed and acted in a number of successful productions.

Browning Collides With Uncle Sam.

Director Tod Browning of the Metro studios in Hollywood unintentionally ran against the U. S. Government, this week, while filming scenes aboard a yacht outside San Pedro harbor for a forthcoming Metro production. The arresting officer saw the camera on the rear deck of the boat, and it was not until Browning had been taken before the commanding officer and assured him that the developed and printed film would show no land or fortification, that he was released, upon his promise to send a print of the film to San Pedro within three days. This was done, and the matter was satisfactorily adjusted, but only after Browning had suffered a severe case of "stage fright."

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

J. A. Berst, president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Incorporated, is expected in the city shortly.

J. Stuart Blackton arrived in Los Angeles Tuesday, December 11, to make the third of his Paramount productions at the Lasky studios. Mr. Blackton will start work almost at once on another Sir Gilbert Parker story, "Wild Youth," for which he has selected Theodore Roberts as one of the principal players, while Louise Huff and Jack Mulhall will also have prominent roles.

Constance Talmadge, the Select star, arrived in Los Angeles, Friday, December 14, accompanied by her mother. She was met at the train by a number of friends from the local photoplay colony.

D. W. Griffith is back at his old Fine Arts studios, where he is making scenes for the completion of his great war picture.

Neal Burns, well remembered from Christie and Universal comedies, is now with Mack Sennett.

George Blair, traveling representative for the Eastman Kodak Company, of Rochester, New York, who had been in the city for two weeks, departed for the East December 12.

Perry Evenvold, who has been Reggie Morris' cameraman for over a year, has joined the marines. Bud Wales has taken his old place.

Several broken bones in his right foot as the result of a fight with Lon Chaney, who plays one of the principal roles in "The Girl Who Dared," which is being made for the screen by Allen J. Holubar, have taken James Russell out of the picture.

Director Henry Otto, of Balboa, is putting the finishing touches to the five reel Kathleen Clifford comedy feature upon which he has been working the past several weeks. Mr. Otto will start immediately upon another five-reeler starring Miss Clifford.

Another star will be added to the service flag at the Triangle Culver City studios this week. J. R. McGlone, who has been working in the Employment Bureau, has enlisted in the cavalry.

Mae Murray dropped more than sixty feet from a broken swing in the Majestic theater, Los Angeles, one night this week. And right over the heads of the audience, too, at least the audience was supposed to be there, but it wasn't. The player was making the drop for one of the scenes of "The Eternal Question."

Wallace MacDonald, well known screen player, has just arrived in Los Angeles from New York, and has been added to the large playing force at the Culver City studios of the Triangle Film Corporation. Mr. MacDonald, whose home is in Halifax, has received word that the members of his family escaped serious injury.

Tom Morgan, adventurer and motion picture actor, whose specialty is "doubling" in hazardous stunts, has enlisted in the army.

William Bock, chief technical expert for the William Fox studios, has departed for New York. Mr. Bock came here several weeks ago to inspect the technical department of the western plant.

Robert T. Kane, vice-president of the Paralta Picture Plays, Inc., and at present at Camp Lewis, American Lake, has been promoted to sergeant major.

It was announced that promotion was given as a reward for the able performance of a difficult and peculiar task.

A. H. Woods, theatrical producer, has been in Los Angeles for the last two weeks looking over things. It has been reported that Mr. Woods contemplates producing on the screen several of his stage successes and is looking for a studio site in Los Angeles. Sam Rork, formerly with Mack Sennett, has been appointed Woods' local representative.

Walter Wright, after a vacation of several months, during which he occupied much of his time in laboratory work in connection with an important invention, has returned to the Mack Sennett studio.

At the completion of the present episode now under production by the Mena Film Company, Howard Gaye, the director, will take up the work for the Roman period. Elaborate sets are being built for this chapter of the story. Nero's palace and an amphitheater will be the most pretentious and are now being built, to be ready for the commencement of this work, which will begin soon.

Wallace David Coburn, the "Cowboy Poet," has joined the Universal forces as an actor. He is the author of "Rhymes of a Round-up Camp" and other western stories in verse and prose, and is most intimately acquainted with the life he portrays. Coburn was born in Helena, Montana, and is of Scotch-Irish descent. He is a crack rifle and pistol shot and one of the best big game hunters in the northwest. Coburn now is playing a part in the Universal serial, "The Bull's Eye."

SCOTT IS NOW A FIRST LIEUTENANT.

First Lieutenant L. J. Scott, a recent graduate of the officers' training camp at Fort Sheridan, Illinois, was a welcome caller at the World office last week. Lieutenant Scott was formerly connected with the V-L-S-E in Kansas City and later with the home office of the Essanay in Chicago. It was while in this position he was sent to Canada to exploit the Max Linder pictures. What he saw in the Dominion convinced him it was only a question of time before the United States would be in the conflict. Accordingly he determined to make application for entrance to an officers' training camp as soon as he could wind up business matters. His application was granted and he landed his commission.

How Exchange Combinations Work Out

By W. R. Greene

Story of What Has Been Accomplished in Canada by One Concern with Offices in Six Dominion Cities

THE recent article appearing in the "New York Times" by Samuel Goldfish and the extended telegram later sent by Stanley Mastbaum to the leading producers and distributors has caused a great deal of comment, both favorable and unfavorable, from many in the industry.

Last week there was published in the trade papers a statement made by J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, to the effect that amalgamation of producers or distributors would strangle the exhibitors of the country and would tend to raise the price of films to the exhibitor. This would undoubtedly be true if every producer and every distributor should combine into one corporation, but amalgamation by three, four or even five distributing organizations would save thousands of dollars a week for the companies involved.

A concrete example of the benefits that would be derived by a combination of distributors can be seen right at the present time in Canada. This territory has long been considered the graveyard of most all distributors, as the overhead in operating branches thoroughly to cover the Dominion runs into large figures, and has exceeded the gross income in some weeks of the year.

The Regal Films, Ltd., was organized just a year ago for distributing World Pictures, Brady-made, throughout Canada. A rapid increase in regular service was augmented by the purchase of a number of state right pictures, as well as a weekly service of single reels.

When the Goldwyn Pictures, Ltd., was formed for the distribution of the Goldwyn output in Canada the distribution of these productions was turned over to the Regal Films, Ltd., as it was found that the cost of handling could be brought down to a minimum. The Regal organization was able, on account of being established for some time, to get a great deal of business on the new productions.

The Triangle productions were handled for a long period in Canada by the late A. E. Fenton, who had to discontinue on account of his health, and the Triangle Distributing Corporation took over the offices. It was found that the overhead in keeping the offices open amounted to a high percentage of the gross income, and arrangements were made with the Regal Films, Ltd., to handle the distribution of the Triangle program for all of Canada. The Regal took over all of the latter releases in Canada on November 1, and in the short space of one month was able to reduce the operating expenses on this particular program of features by 75 per cent.

The Regal Films maintain offices in the six principal cities of the Dominion—Toronto, Montreal, St. John, Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver. In distributing three different brands of film, in addition to a large special department, the per capita cost of handling each program is reduced more than 50 per cent. It is a well-known fact in the distribution of motion pictures that any exchange now operating can take on additional business without increasing the overhead expenses to any appreciable degree.

The efficiency of a combination of distributors is shown by the operation of this particular Canadian company. Another good point in favor of amalgamation is the fact that the exchanges handling more than one program have an unlimited supply of features with which to supply the exhibitor. If circumstances should arise whereby a feature of the program the exhibitor is using cannot be supplied on certain dates he can be given a feature from one of the other programs.

There are many exhibitors in Canada who are adverse to using two features a week from one producer, but they would willingly book two or even three programs a week of different producers from one particular exchange if it were possible to obtain a variety of subjects from such an exchange. Each manufacturer has a reputation for putting out a certain class of subjects. One makes a majority of pleasing stories that can be witnessed by any one; another makes strong society dramas; another tends to western dramas, and still another produces thrilling adventure features. The average exhibitor does not wish to run all society dramas, neither does he wish more than the average number of western pictures. If an exchange can give the exhibitor three features a week, each being from a different producing company, the chances are that he will book his entire program from the one exchange.

The city exhibitor has many advantages in doing this. It saves him a good deal of valuable time in having to go to only one exchange for his features and paper, and in returning the film after playing at his theater the other feature can be picked up from the same office. The out-of-town exhibitor gets but one invoice from one office each week, which means that he has only to make out one check for his entire film service, saving time in writing letters to several exchanges. The lobby display for the out-of-town exhibitor who books all of his film from the one office is also sent in one parcel, saving a good deal of excess charges for express and assuring him of getting his lobby advertising in plenty of time for a proper display. The expenses of long-distance phone calls and wires to the exchanges can be cut down more than 50 per cent. by the exhibitor who books everything from the one office.

The exchange has many advantages in being able to book more than one brand of film to the exhibitors. Besides cutting down the overhead expenses per program it also eliminates a large office staff and a number of travelers in the territory. It is possible for a traveler to sell two, three or even four programs just as well as he is able to sell only the one. A customer may not wish to run the class of features offered by a certain program, and if the traveler cannot offer anything else he has to leave the town without a sale. But if the traveler is handling more than the one program of features he has enough variety to satisfy the most particular exhibitor. In this way the expenses of the traveler is brought down to a minimum for each individual line of features.

The distribution of a number of different brands of features tends to increase business on each one. If an exhibitor has a contract for one program he will at some time write into the office for a number of features from the other program, and the chances are that the exhibitor will become a contract customer on the second program. Business among the city exhibitors also takes a big boom when a number of programs are handled from one office. Managers of theaters going into the exchange for posters or features will happen to see posters or photographs on another program, and it is then an easy matter for the office to secure a contract for the second program of features during the week.

A combination of producers as outlined by Stanley Mastbaum might not be satisfactory, but surely an amalgamation of exchanges throughout the country will give the exhibitor better service, and at the same time do away with a good deal of unnecessary waste, which, it is admitted, is reaching huge sums every week. The conditions in distributing motion pictures in Canada are much harder than in any territory of the United States, and if a combination of distributors can be worked out in the Dominion to the benefit of all of the programs there is no doubt a combination of distributors in the United States would be a big boom to the business to all programs involved.

What Small-Town Exhibitor Faces

Virginia Manager Describes Conditions in His Section and Talks Frankly of His Troubles.

Editor Moving Picture World:

I ask permission for insertion in your paper of my view of adjusting the so-called 15-cent film war tax. In the complaint filed by the producers to restrain the Brooklyn exhibitors from canceling their bookings it is admitted that the average run of their features is fifty days, at a price ranging from $1 to $100 a reel a day.

Although I occasionally receive a subject that looks more like it has filled 500-day runs instead of 50 from the way it is shot up, yet we are charged with this same 15 cents a reel a day. Some of the subjects were originally in five reels, and in order to fulfill their promise of five reels they are stretched out to go on five reels with an average of about 600 feet to the reel, yet we are charged for the five reels.

These producers or exchanges admit they get as much a day as $100 a reel and even more. This being the case, is it fair that the small-town, or neighborhood house, which only has from 7:30 to 10 to do business, and whose receipts run anywhere from $3 to $24, should pay the same film war tax as the big fellow who has an all day grind at it and uses the show probably as many as seven times a day, and whose receipts are as much in one day as many of the little fellows will do in a month? Yet each exhibitor is held to pay the same tax. Why not adjust all this difference and give the small fellow (the 80 per cent. man) by charging him say 1 per cent war tax on his film rental on everything up to, say, $75, and over that amount charge one-half of 1 per cent. This would make it lighter on the small fellow and help save the industry, and a trifle higher for the big all-day house which can better afford to pay $2 war tax a day than 80 per cent. of the small fellows can 25 cents a day. In the end the manufacturers or exchanges would realize more out of the war tax than they do today. On the face of the present charge of straight 15 cents a reel to all it isn't right any more than it is to charge the small fellow the same film rental that is charge the big fellow. I don't think there is a big-town fellow in America who would object to this slight increase on his film tax in order to save the drowning small exhibitor.

This is one way to bring about harmony with the exhibitors and producers. What's the need of all this stalling on the part of the various Exhibitors' Leagues when we are all at the mercy of the manufacturers. We have got to submit just like we have done as regards to deposits, return express charges, added cost of paper, etc. Why not fight for a more equitable charge on the film tax?

As to the patrons' tax: Uncle Sam needs the money to help load guns to win this war, and the sooner it's over the better for us all. Let's cut the stalling. Some nights I absorb the tax. That is, where I used to get 20 cents for an extra big picture I charge the same and take care of the tax myself. Sometimes I charge the tax to the higher seats and assume the tax on the cheaper seats so as to help the poor devil who has a struggle to live today in face of conditions, let alone go to pictures. It isn't the war tax that has caused the decline in patronage. It's the dreadful high cost of everything. Take shoes, foodstuffs and fuel. The average wage scale in my town isn't $10 a week.

What's the answer? The people haven't the money to attend.

My business has been paralyzed since the cold weather and snow set in ten days ago. I would have made money to have closed. But how could I when I had contracted for certain pictures and they have my money and tell me you must play the picture on such and such a date or wait probably several months before I could get it again. Then I would have it come in all shot or run to pieces. At that, I see no relief except to work away from these pictures and close my house save to road shows, stock companies and upon Saturday nights.

As to the patrons' tax, why not ask the Government to allow us to exact the present 10 per cent., and we settle with them say at 8 per cent of gross. This will not only save all this figuring on each priced tickets, etc., but will allow us a little pay for the trouble, take care of our film war tax, increased cost of fuel, help, advertising, etc., and declining business. I have inquired in all towns about me here for a hundred miles around and all report desperate conditions. I am an exhibitor in a town of 6,500, a nice, large, modern house, kept clean, comfortable, and play only the biggest and best pictures, as well as Artcraft, Goldwyn, Select and others, yet the town will not patronize the house sufficiently during the week to keep it open. It takes my Saturday's profits to pay my five other night's losses. I am alone in my town, yet held to pay from $30 to $50 a day for service. I simply take the money from the people at higher admissions and send it to the exchanges. They always play safe.

Harden Has Plan to Cure Ills

Atlanta Exchangeman Advocates Grading By Manufacturers Themselves of Productions in Ten Classes.

CHARLES W. HARDEN is president of the E. & H. Film Distributing Company, of Atlanta, one of the largest independent exchanges in the South. Mr. Harden has been in the film distributing business for eight years, and in that time has been associated with several of the big companies. Consequently for that period he has been in close touch with exhibitors as well as with the public. Mr. Harden sends to the Moving Picture World the following suggestions:

I have read, with much interest, all articles in the various trade journals, most of them being in the form of a question asking for a solution of the difficulty that the entire moving picture industry is in today on account of overproduction, cost of distributing and lack of organization.

A number of big men in the industry have come out in lengthy statements telling us what is the matter with the business. That we already know and have known for sometime; what we have been waiting for is a detailed solution of the problem and so far none has been offered except by some fellow who has an axe to grind and wants the whole industry to follow a pet scheme of his own which would probably work out all right for his own personal benefit but would be impracticable for all.

There is no chance for the manufacturers to get together as a whole in one great corporation; that has been suggested, tried and failed. Even if this were possible, where would it benefit the exhibitor, who must be recognized as at least 50 per cent. of the industry, and his success must be assured ahead of everything else. There is no way by which he could be directly affiliated with the manufacturers end of the business, as that has been tried out for the past year by various exhibitors' circuits, and has not proved popular to a great degree.

There must be some other plan, and it must be an equitable one along lines that will assure both manufacturer and exhibitor a square deal in every way. Following, I am going to outline a plan to which I have given much thought. It may be practicable, and, if so, the great minds of the industry will not hesitate to seize upon it, and, if not all practical, there is at least a part of it so, and the plan may lead to suggestions from others that will eventually work out in a satisfactory way. If any part of it is eventually carried out successfully I will feel that my efforts have been rewarded. Practical or not, I think all sides will have to admit that it is at least equitable. The following is a brief outline of my plan:

First, there must be an agreement by all the big manufacturers to submit all pictures produced by them to a board of governors appointed by the manufacturers themselves, who will "in a body" review each picture to be released; each picture will be classed by this board according to star, drawing power of story and length, also as to quality, etc., in order that it be given a rating in accordance with its worth to exhibitors.

There would necessarily have to be a number of classes in order to designate the difference in the many grades of pictures; for instance, a picture that is worth $100 a day might be classed as No. 1, and one that an exhibitor could only pay $7 a day for could be classed as a No. 10, as prices now range from $5 a day up to a hundred or more, hence the necessity for a number of classes which will be necessary to carry out the plan to follow.

This board need not be made up entirely of representatives of manufacturers, but may be augmented by representatives of the exhibitors' organizations; but to eliminate any chance of partialty I think it advisable to confine it strictly to the manufacturers themselves. Then if they rate their pictures too high it will only react on all alike. The next step will be to list every theater of any consequence in the country, getting exact statistics of each house, the average business they do with different stars and pictures, the amount of expense in running their theater (not counting film rental) the amount of their investment, etc. This information can be easily and quickly complied by the exchange managers in each film center, or by a board of appraisers appointed in each film center, who will investigate thoroughly each theater and give them a rating; in other words, each house would know just what his price was for a No. 1 film, a No. 6 film, or a No. 10 film, as each theater would have a separate rating for each film of each class.

In case a theater owner finds he is overrated, on complaint to the local board he could demand an investigation, and if his claim is just his rating could be lowered by that board. In case an exhibitor is rated too low his rating can be raised by this same board after a thorough investigation.

In order to make this pain a success, each and every exhibitor must be allowed to make a reasonable profit in accordance with his investment, there to be no reduction on film account of age. (A film is worth as much in a town where it has not played one year from release date as it is when it comes out of the can, providing, however, the physical condition is as good.) Under this plan, distributors and manufacturers receiving the same amount of rental regardless of the age of their production could afford to keep a good copy at all times. This plan puts a fixed price on all film for all time to come and eliminates cutting prices as well as overselling, which has put the industry in the mire in which it fiuds itself today.

The exhibitor who has a town sewed up, and has on that account bought film at his own price, would nnd himself paying the same price as the man in the town where keen competition has existed and the exchanges have been selling their film at twice what it was worth.

Much has been said about the great cost of distribution, and the writer is under the impression that as much money has been wasted in that branch of the industry as has been in the manufacturing end. I do not think it practical to amalgamate all distributing companies under one head, as there would undoubtedly be complaint of partiality or neglect from some producers. Let each producer maintain a sales office in each film center as now exists, but have them all in close proximity to one another (all in one building of possible). Let each office attend to the sales of its own films with no more connection with the other offices than now exists. However, each company must turn its shipping instructions over to one man who will supervise one great shipping department for all, cost to be pro-rated by the various companies ac ord'ng to the amount of storage space they occupy and the amount of shipments. This will reduce the overhead at least 35 per cent. and eliminate 95 per cent. of errors in shipping, which now are many, and a number of times very costly to an exchange.

A great number of road salesmen could be eliminated under this plan, as well as about one-third the force in each office. All the argument a salesman would have would be the brand of his pictures. This plan may be held unlawful, but I think if all concerned agreed to it there could be no prosecution.

Now we have fixed things for the exhibitor and assured him of a profit, we have arranged to cut the cost of distribution at least 35 per cent. The manufacturer may justly ask what assurance will he have that he can make money on his productions. The amount saved under this plan in distribution will almost pay the profit the exhibitor is entitled to. If he finds his productions are costing too much to be sold at the fixed rating of the theaters, the only thing left for him to do is to cut the salaries of the stars, directors and people who have been getting too much money. There will be no need to fear some competitor taking the star and paying them more money, as they can get no more for the same star in the same class production than the other fellow can.

Think it over.

How It Is Done at the Strand

A Discussion of Methods Which Have Actually Been Worked Out Successfully.

By Harold Edel, Managing Director.

THE "no tip" system in a theater is one of the best little tricks toward retaining the good will of the patron that the manager can institute. In many instances this system makes a lifelong friend of the patron, as is indicated in a letter just received. "After tipping right and left for a number of years, I was agreeably surprised to find that at least there is one theater in the country where service and courtesy are included in the amount paid for the ticket," said this man. Twice during the same evening this gentleman tempted two different ushers, as a matter of habit, with tips and twice he was accorded the same "no, thank you." On asking an usher to get him a front seat he received his first surprise when he attempted to tip for a splendid single seat. Later on asking an usher to get him a program he felt the tip was well warranted, but received the same courteous salute and "no, thank you."

In his letter, this gentleman, a successful lawyer, took particular pains to voice the extent of his enthusiasm and stated that from that time on he could be considered as a walking advertisement for the Strand. Satisfaction is the greatest asset in every business. The business man of today not only sells his commodity, but after he is paid, he sees to it that whatever he sells gives satisfaction. Modern business science teaches us that the art of making permanent and profitable patrons is the only method of attaining real success. The Strand is not content with the mere sale of the admission ticket, but endeavors, in every way, to give such exceptional service with its quality that the patron will not only become a permanent one, but will become so enthusiastic that he will become a walking advertisement. Only exceptional satisfaction can bring about such a condition, and if some exhibitors would devote as much time to pleasing the patron after he is in the house as to getting him into the theater they would soon find an increase in their box office returns.

Creating Interest in an Advance Leader.

In announcing "next week's attraction" by means of a film leader showing the star in a scene of a forthcoming attraction we have found a little way of creating more interest in the leader itself than by merely making the announcement and then showing a piece of film from the photoplay. First, an announcement is thrown on the screen to this effect: "Next week the Strand will present"——— and then is shown the strip of film with the star in one of the scenes of next week's attraction. Immediately the audience will be heard guessing who the star is and what the name of the production will be. "Oh, it's Billie Burke!" exclaim some. "I'll bet that's her new picture, 'The Land of Promise.'" "No, it's a scene from so and so." While the scene is being run off there is discussion as to the star and the production and then the balance of the announcement: "———Billie Burke in 'The Land of Promise,'" is thrown upon the screen and all questions are settled. Thus more interest is created in the announcement of the next attraction than by merely making the complete announcement, after which the audience has little to think about until after the scene is run off and the next film is thrown upon the screen.

Effects on the Stage for Storm Scenes.

In "The Land of Promise" the effects on the stage added considerably to the thrills of the scene depicting a heavy storm. In addition to the usual thunder rolls, we used semi-lightning effects, that is, instead of throwing up a full flash of light, which would take the mind off the picture, we merely gave a suggestion of lightning in the panels on each side of the screen. The scene in question showed an interior of a farm house. Through a window the storm could be seen raging outside. On each darkened panel alongside the screen we used special projectors, presenting falling rain, and with an occasional weak flash of light the psychological effect of a storm outside the walls of the house was obtained. In other words, it made the audience feel as if it were in the room itself with the storm raging all around it outside.

War Pictures Great Drawing Card.

Donald C. Thompson's picture, "Blood-Stained Russia," showing German intrigue as a cause for the treason and revolt, proved a big attraction. In preparing the music for this film many hours were spent by Conductor Edouards and myself, and the result was most gratifying. Real war pictures are "eaten up" by the audiences at the Strand and with proper presentation they not only fill a want in the public's great desire to see how things actually are on the other side, but the showing of these films in itself is an act of patriotism, for they are the greatest propellers of public opinion the exhibitor can offer.

Indian Notes

By S. B. Banerjea.

I HAVE just returned from a tour through Central and Western India, and am delighted to say that I have found cinema theaters in many places where I never thought one could be profitably operated. At Jubleulpun, for instance, I found two cinema theaters, one owned by a European and the other by an Indian. Both were doing fine business in spite of the fact that they were located some distance from the town proper. American films, as may be expected, predominated. A theater in the heart of the town itself could profitably be started. At Benares I found a bioscope theater in a busy center. Its proprietor, an Indian gentleman, was doing a good business. I believe one or more theaters can be established there profitably.

In Bombay a new theater is in course of construction. It has been named His Majesty's. It is owned by an Indian. The existing theaters are doing excellently. At the New Alexandra "Crime and Its Penalty" and several other American films have been shown during the past two weeks. The New Imperial will be showing "Patria" very shortly. Mr. Yadan or Mr. Ducasse would do well to show it in Calcutta without delay. So far the Calcuttaites have not had the opportunity of seeing the acting of Mrs. Vernon Castle. I dare say when "Patria" will be screened she will at once become a Calcutta favorite. At the Empire I saw British films only. The authorities of this theater are proceeding on wrong lines. "Jane Shore" may be an excellent picture in its way, but it is in no way superior to the several American films which I saw in the Excelsior or the New Alexandria. The Mirror of Life, the Eldorado, the Royal Cinema and the Globe, I found, were doing excellently. At two of these theaters a system of prizes has been introduced. Every ticket holder has the chance of winning a good watch or something equally useful. The drawings are held openly so that no complaint of unfairness can be made by anybody.

The final installment of "Liberty" will be screened at the New Cornwallis next week. It has been seen by thousands. "The Pearl of the Army" has drawn big crowds at the Euphimstone Picture Palace. I believe if these two films are shown again hundreds will go to see them.

I have seen Mandan's program for the next season, and am glad to say he is bringing out many of the latest American successes. These are bound to draw crowded houses.

I am glad to find that Mr. Ducasse of the Bijou Grand has shown several American successes; for instance, "The White Raven," "Pennington's Choice," Rex Beach travel pictures, etc.

There will be no Bioscope performance on the Calcutta Mandan this year. I should say that no amusement of any kind will be permitted. Circuses will have to find room in the heart of the city itself.

I am glad to find that the Calcutta "Englishman" has in its Ruja issue published portraits of cinema stars like Chaplin, Holmes, etc. The illustrations are well executed, and reflect much credit on the convictions of the journal. This is the first time in the history of the Indian cinema world that portraits of our leading favorites have been published by a semi-official daily paper, and naturally this new departure has attracted attention. Many of my friends have cut out the portrait page, with a view to preservation.

In my last I gave the text of the Indian cinema bill, which will become the law of the land shortly. It will be news to the readers of this paper that "The Capital" of Calcutta, the leading commercial weekly, has started a crusade against serials like "The Shielding Shadow," "Master Key," etc. It holds serials like these responsible for many evils. The authorities have been urged to prohibit the exhibition of all sensational serials, as these are calculated to produce moral and material injury. Certain other papers would like to see the censors prohibit films which "fly over" the heads of the average Indian cinema-goer. I have a shrewd suspicion that the wrath of "The Capital" and other papers of its ilk will be appeased if British film manufacturers can arrange to produce big serials. In other words, racial question is at the bottom of the frequent explosions to which we are treated. Under the new act regular boards of film censors will be created in every province. But I do not think they will be so senseless as to prohibit serials. I have said more than once that only Mandan, of Calcutta, among the local cinema proprietors, specializes in them. Indians like serials, hence the wonderful success of this Parsee gentleman. In Bombay three or four theaters exhibit serials. These are always crowded. Serials might not appeal to a section of the European public, but that is no reason why it will not allow Indians to enjoy them. It is the fashion with a class of people to blame the cinema as being responsible for increase in crime. A little inquiry will show that this charge is without foundation. I for one have no doubt that should the outcry of "The Capital" impress the authorities the producers of the serial films will be able to protect their interests in this country.

I have seen Mr. Ducasse's new program, and have no hesitation in saying that he will have crowded houses during the next season. During the Puja holidays he will give daily changes of program.

The proprietors of the Picture House also have made out an excellent program. They announce two big serials, viz., "Girl from Frisco" and "J. Dale." They are bound to make money.

Murrae is a far-off hill station, much frequented by Europeans. An enterprising person has opened a cinema hall here and is doing good busines. "Macbeth" drew packed houses for several days.

The Lahore cinema (Puri's) is going strong; as also Mandan's Darjeeling Bioscope. The Bioscope Theater of Calcutta has once again become a variety theater. During the last three weeks it has shown several excellent American films. The Theater Royal of Calcutta gives two changes weekly. American films predominate. The Secunderabad Theater is making a lot of money.

British Notes

By J. B. Sutcliffe.

"UNCLE SAM GETS READY," the timely topic of which we had a premiere at the New Gallery Kinema a few weeks ago, has made an extensive booking list in London not only at moving picture theaters but at a large number of the central and suburban music-halls. Before seeing "Uncle Sam Gets Ready" not a few exhibitors opined to the view that the martial preparation picture had had its day and perhaps on the side of the European forces it has. But the life, vigor and coherency of "Uncle Sam," coupled with the exposition of many original resources in the training of the raw material is in itself sufficient recommendation.

In connection with "Uncle Sam Gets Ready" I saw a rather neat but simple scheme of twisting the initials of the title words on a six-sheet poster; one that offers up possibilities in the exploitation of titles. It was outside a South London hall and commenced in bold black with:

U. S. G. R.

followed by a query mark and on the left hand side an ornamental monogram of U. S. and on the opposite side the familiar device G. R. (Georgius Rex) representing the United States and the United Kingdom respectively. Between the two crests was silhouetted a line of battleships linking the two together, the sunset on the wave revealing the title of the film, "Uncle Sam Gets Ready." Immediately underneath comes the reverse letters:

R. G. S. U.

with two corresponding devices at the bottom corners, the one on the left bearing "Really Great" and the one on the right "Simply Unique."

"Civilization" made its Metropolitan appearance last week at the Polytechnic Institute, Oxford Circus, and is expected to run there many weeks. It has already been exhibited extensively in Scotland and the provinces, where it was disposed of on the county rights basis.

The repertory play, "Hindle Wakes," by the late Stanley Houghton, is being "done for the pictures" on native soil by Maurice Elvey. The play revolves upon the pleasantries and scandals of a Lancashire industrial town at the time of the annual holiday or in the venacular "wakes," and Mr. Elvey has just returned with a company of players from Blackpool, where, among other spectacles of Lancashire factory workers enjoying vacation, he has secured exposures of the famous Tower ballroom. In splendor, size and magnificence the Blackpool ballroom is considered second only to the Casino ballroom at Monte Carlo, having floor accommodation for 4,000 dancers at one time.

The film of the week in London is the Vitagraph Company's version of Robert Chambers, "The Girl Philippa." It appeared a fortnight ago at the Marble Arch Pavilion and since at other West End theaters. It is booked to appear within the next few weeks at every suburb in London.

Andre Charlot, the revue producer, will shortly turn his attention to the moving picture. He has practically completed the script of a feature drama in which Phyllis Monkman will star. Arthur Weigall, author of the revue, "Babbly," is to collaborate in its production.

Export Items

By. E. T. McGovern.

A NEW export firm, the Mutual Export & Import Corp., has entered the Latin-American field, intending to operate in Chile, Peru, Bolivia, Central America, Mexico, Spain and Italy.

Sydney Garrett and Ben Blumenthal have returned from Chicago, where they closed a contract for the export rights on the Selig picture.

The war tax is rather hard on exporters to Argentina, Brazil and Chile. These three countries known as the A. B. C. powers have placed a tax on film imported. This means that the buyer has to stand two taxes on each picture he purchases for exploitation in these countries.

Francisco Elias has recently installed a linotype machine for the making of title cards. Elias makes many of the Spanish titles that are made in New York and his translations are in the best Spanish and French idiom.

"The Fall of the Romanoffs" is now ready for sale in the Spanish-speaking countries and a number of worth while offers have been received from this territory. Arthur Hoerl and Alexander Beyfuss are handling the sales end of this territory.

Felix Malitz and Joseph Lamy are busy with plans for 1918 to enlarge the foreign trade of the Piedmont Pictures.

Edna Williams is handling the foreign rights on the productions of the U. S. Exhibitors Booking Corp. Miss Williams has connected with the Robertson Cole Co., a large export house, and will have exclusive rights on all these films.

The Inter-Ocean Film Corp. has recently sold the exclusive rights on Speer Carbons to Max Glucksmann for Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay and Chile.

Myron Selznick has started to line up the foreign markets on the first Selznick Pictures.

Spokes from the Hub

By Marion Howard

WITH a desire to do something for the cause, the Film Club voted to suspend meetings the balance of the club year and send money to France to one of its members, Mrs. Eugenie Young, over there working with the Duryea volunteers in aiding refugees. A pitiful letter was read from her, resulting in the action taken. Another member, Lieutenant J. F. Winston, a Plattsburg graduate, is also in service. The club board will meet and may call a special meeting at any time if occasion arises.

After quite an absence from the screen, rehearsing, we again see Bushman and Bayne in a strong play, "The Voice of Conscience"—clean, good atmosphere, well directed, and with excellent Southern scenes. Bushman does quite a stunt playing double; and aren't the darkies great! The blind mother was most pathetic and not overdone a bit. Miss Bayne writes me that she expects the fans to like their new picture, "Red, White and Blue Blood." Sounds good!

The Hub is pleased over the selection of Professor Baker as head of the scenario committee of the Government's motion picture department to institute propaganda work rightly directed along lines applying to the war. He is singularly gifted to undertake this, as proven by his years of service at Harvard University.

Another good piece of news is the placing of Benjamin Chapin's wonderfully compelling Lincoln pictures under the Paramount banner, where millions can see them with profit and intense satisfaction. I have seen them here and in New York, and having lived "befo' the war," and having seen Lincoln, know that they have a big mission, especially for the youth of the land. Florence Short plays Nancy Hanks as few could do, and, oh, the lesson of it all!

Do I owe an apology? Looks so, but it was a slip of the types that put Donald Brian instead of Donald Hall in the Vitagraph picture, "Satin and Calico."

There are several screen players here in the speaking play. Among them: Barrymore Brothers in "Peter Ibbetson," also Constance Collier; Julia Sanderson in "Rambler Rose"; Margaret Wycherly in "The Thirteenth Chair"; Henry Kolker and Frank Gillmore in "The Arabian Nights"; Nance O'Neil and W. J. Ferguson in "The Wanderer"; Jane Grey in "De-Luxe Annie"; Willie Collier in "Nothing But the Truth." Leon Gordon is still at the Copley and completing his star part in "The Man Who Stayed at Home" after its run of twenty-seven weeks.

"Our Navy," in colors, is the star attraction at Tremont Temple over the holidays, made possible by the Prizma Corporation.

For light pictures commend me to "The Small-Town Guy," with the inimitable Taylor Homes; "Antics of Ann," cleverly done by Ann Pennington and Harry Ham, full of healthy laughs; "Bab's Matinee Idol," like all the Sub-Debs seen thus far—good; "Nearly Married," another offering of Goldwyn for Madge Kennedy; the Drews in all their pictures.

I saw "The Garden of Allah" the other day for the first time—some picture, but why this perpetration, thrust more than once: "No one but God and I knows what is in my heart"? Nice English, that! My friend, who is quite a fan, asked me if I ever saw Tom Santschi smile—did you?

Elsie Ferguson seems to have scored again, and isn't she dainty without being conscious of it? "The Rise of Jennie Cushing" has been so well reviewed in these columns that I can only add a bit. The kiddies played an important part, and a picture with children and animals catches me every time. Speaking of this combination, what a wholesome picture the Essanays give us in "Pants," featuring that child wonder, Mary McAlister. The house, a large one, too, laughed over the antics of this star and applauded the picture at the close. This is safe to book in any community, so human and so natural is it. All we missed was Mary's dog, with its queer face and black eye.

A fashionable audience greeted Julian Eltinge's latest, "The Clever Mrs. Carfax," put on at the Exeter. We expect much from this unusual impersonator of feminine roles in his shifts to male ones. Here we get more action than in the others, and the opening scene gave delight to the men in front, recalling their college reunions when some one from outside was pressed into service to entertain. Eltinge does his stage dance well and then continues it in the center of the table. After that scene he is less spectacular.

Well, "The Price Mark" had some good features, apart from the unhealthy sex element, too plainly presented for the young to see. There was no attempt at concealment of it, either, and the entire surrender of the heroine after being ruined and her evident content at it all was revolting in a Paramount picture especially. True, there came into her life a clean man and all ends well, yet I wonder if it is quite necessary to encourage justifiable censorship in this way. Thomas H. Ince has given a great picture so far as directing goes, and Dorothy Dalton does finished work way through, well supported. My neighbor thought Conklin with his peculiar face made a dandy villain. There were some fine scenes, picturing Cairo, with its splendors, and great indoor ones in studio and apartment, also good human touches in connection with a crippled boy and the hospital. It jarred some to see Adele Farrington playing the part of a hypocritical confederate of the man in the case. Here is one of the titles—"When an hour has past." Wonder if Ince saw that!

On the same program we had Edna Goodrich's new Mutual, "A Daughter of Maryland," splendid Southern picture, with new touches and situation refreshing to note. William T. Carleton's make-up was so good that few in front recognized him. Stately Helen Strickland was billed as an "old maid sister of the Major," but she could not look the part and was ever a picture of the grand Southern dame, never suggesting "the girl he left behind him." There was good darky stuff in the street scenes, with the kids in front. Carl Brickett as the Yankee landscape gardener stood out clearly in all he did, but best of all were the interior settings, done in some effete old Southern mansion. Good work for John R. O'Brien!

A picture of distinctive class is "The Judgment House," for the introduction, in support of Conway Tearle, of dainty Violet Heming, so long in support of George Arliss. With the name of J. Stuart Blackton as director we were expecting much, and being the first of his Paramount pictures, too, there was added interest. I liked best the closing scenes, though not keen on too much war stuff at this time. Here we had corking battle scenes—best seen in a long time. Those are fine performances, too, of Wilfred Lucas and Crazy Thunder, the Indian.

"Jack and Jill" went well, as do all the Jack Pickford pictures. Plenty of punch here, a prize ring figuring. A good bit of spunky loyalty was shown by the heroine, Louise Huff, who had some funny lines, according to the slangy titles.

One of the funniest situations in "The Game of Wits" is the scene where the desired bride of an old duffer makes him do unearthly things beyond his strength, like donning an abbreviated bathing suit and joining members of a house party at the swimming pool. When you recall the angularity of Spottiswood Aitken and his lack of physical beauty you may know he was some sight. The entire picture was full of new stunts, humor and good situations. Gail Kane has done nothing better, and all credit is due Henry King for his sane work in directing the details.

"Maid of Belgium" proved entertaining enough, especially in the opening scenes, depicting Belgium after the invasion and the turning back of tourists, taking a young demented girl whom they found by the roadside, and transplanting her to their pretentious home in America. There were harrowing scenes incident to the birth of a child, whom the wife passed off on her husband as her own. Space does not permit telling much of this episode, but it had its lesson. Then the ending was rather suddenly shown, following the return of the girl's reason and the visit to that part of the world of her husband, a former Belgian soldier whom we saw in a flashback. Alice Brady was the unfortunate heroine, but somehow she did not seem to fit. We like her better in plays of different theme. George MacQuarrie was splendid as the husband and held himself well in check when his provocation was so great on learning of the imposition of his wife. Story dramatic and worth while.

"Mother"

A Five-Part McClure Production Released by General Enterprises, Inc., Presents Strong Moral Teaching.

Reviewed by Rev. W. H. Jackson.

THE STRONG moral teaching of the five-part production, "Mother," cannot be too highly commended. Cast in the humbler walks of life, it will reach more people than if cast in a society vein and do more good. It will help many mothers in their loves and in their methods, which are not always wise, as this story will show. It will also help many sons, for here they will see a true picture of that motherhood which sets truth and justice on the same pedestal as love.

To secure a good title for a picture is often a great task, and too often the relationship of the pictures and the titles are far apart; sometimes so far as to bear no relationship whatever. Here, however, is a picture and a title which no circumstance or condition can disassociate or separate. It speaks for itself, and requires no further explanation.

The story of this mother in some degree takes its shape from the surroundings of the home over which she presides. In a rugged and wild country, with solid rock and rough woodland, as well as fertile soil, nature seems to reflect itself in the characters of this mother and son—she with a character as solid as the hills around her, and mind and heart as kindly and beautiful as the fertile soil, yielding its fruitfulness with joy; while the son's substance seems to partake of the rugged, wild nature of the rough and rocky woodland, lacking all the profit and joy of fruitfulness. The strong, stern kindness of the mother never wavers; true to her boy she is just as true to herself. No blind love is hers. She is first to see her boy's faults. She seeks neither to cover nor parade them, but with firm purpose and loyal devotion she sets herself the task of proving that the justice of a mother love will ultimately prevail.

The supreme test comes when the son brings home a couple of game birds, which are the result of a night of poaching with a well-known poacher upon a rich neighbor's land. When traced to his home by officers of the law the birds are hidden, and the son lies about his knowledge of them. At the moment when the officers are about to leave the house the integrity of the mother rises supreme. She stays the men and produces the birds. Following the denouncement of the mother by the son the former encourages the love of a girl in the neighborhood in wise and motherly fashion, taking her into her own home as a help and training her according to her own ideas of caring for her boy. In spite of the fact that she knows that, owing to an affliction of the heart, her own days are numbered she possesses herself in patience and "looketh well to the ways of her household."

One of the strong features of the story is the confidence of the mother in the ultimate triumph of her love. At length the fatal attack comes and she passes away with her son's arms around her, her face lighted with the assurance of her victory.

This picture, which should be widely exhibited throughout the country, is a McClure production, and is being released by the General Enterprises, Inc., of 1476 Broadway, New York.

"Tom Sawyer"

Famous Mark Twain Story Makes Fine Screen Material and Arouses Desire for Continuance of Filmization of Standard Works.

AFTER a period of inactivity in film adaptation of standard works of literature, the appearance of the five-part Paramount production of Mark Twain's famous story, "Tom Sawyer," is most welcome. Well-known works of standard authors afford the best material for photoplays, and the wonder is that they are not more extensively used.

Jack Pickford makes an inimitable Tom Sawyer, betraying a natural force which causes "Tom" to live again. The picture is an ideal one for boys and girls, and should find its way to the boy's column.

Pictures of this class are not only safe, but they have a strong moral influence for good. Their frequent use will not only add to the value of the moving picture, but the exhibitor will, by the use of them, be able to increase the number of his patrons. Such pictures make friends for the industry, and have also a tendency to increase the reading of good literature.

"Eighth Annual Round-Up—Pendleton, Ore." (Pathe).

THREE exciting reels of western cowboy sports being released by the Pathe Exchange, Inc., vividly illustrative of the eighth annual round-up at Pendleton, Ore. For those who love the sports of the cattle range this special release will prove intensely interesting. The opening reel introduces eight tribes of Indians in parade at Pendleton, then come the thrilling scenes of bull-dogging steers, riding bucking bronchos, the cowgirls' race and the race with wild horses. In the course of the round-up the knocking senseless of cowmen and cowwomen is passed by with the indifference of an every-day occurrence.

"Making Cord to Bind Uncle Sam's Harvest" (Paramount-Bray).

In the 99th release of Pictograph will be found a well illustrated description of how binder twine is made. Made of sisal hemp, a product of Yucatan, Central America, this useful article is seen to pass through the various stages of its development to the finished product, neatly wound into balls. The picture finishes with scenes in a harvest field, showing the harvester at work.

"My Lady's Veil" (Universal).

The manufacture of that delicate and often fantastically designed article of apparel, "my lady's veil," is illustrated in the Screen Magazine No. 53. Here we learn that the best quality of veil is made from the finest Italian silk, which is converted from a skein to a spool previous to its being consigned to the warping mill. The weaving of the veil on a 16-ton machine, which weaves from 14 to 40 widths at one time, is shown, and also the dyeing, drying, brushing and rolling of the veil on cards. The making of fancy Chenille veils, the ornamentation of which is put on by hand, is an interesting feature.

"Great Natural Industries of Canada" (General Film-Essanay).

According to the fourth number of the Essanay series, "The Wonders of Nature and Science," the natural industry first in importance in Canada is the timber industry. This picture gives a good idea of the vast timber resources of the Dominion and shows the logging methods followed on the Nashwaak River, near Fredericton, New Brunswick. A log jam of one million feet of timber is an interesting feature. Some good illustrations of the paper industry are included in the film, and also interesting scenes, showing the dynamiting of asbestos from its natural bed.

"Training United States Hospital Units" (Universal).

An interesting series of views contained in Screen Magazine No. 53 shows the careful training of United States hospital recruits in the art of bandaging. We also see a messenger bringing news of wounded in the field, recruits beating through the bush in search of wounded, a soldier with a fractured leg receiving treatment, the applying of the splint, etc. The treating of an unconscious soldier suffering from a head injury is also shown. The value of quick action in cases of emergency is one of the points made in the picture.

"Behind the Scenes" (Universal).

An interesting series of scenes will be found in the Universal Screen Magazine No. 53, showing how the wonderland of the stage is whipped into shape by scene painters and their aids. An interesting part of the picture illustrates the various things that happen behind stage to produce the effects which add realism to the play; for instance, what you hear when "Lizzie knocks Pat down the back stairs." An attractive subject.

Visual Education Theories

Motion Picture Bulletin Issued from the Visual Education Division of Los Angeles County, California, for the Benefit of Schools Interesting in Character.

THE VISUAL Education Division of the Los Angeles County Schools has issued a revised motion picture bulletin for the benefit and enlightenment of schools in that vicinity. The bulletin is issued from the office of Mark Keppel, Los Angeles County Superintendent of Schools, and contains information on various points relating to the use of film and stereopticon slide in the school for purposes of education and entertainment. The following extracts may not come amiss for those who have not the immediate opportunity of reading this bulletin:

If a school can afford motion picture projector equipment we do make such a recommendation provided it is understood that its main service at the present time must be limited to general educative results having a social and cultural value rather than to class-room instruction.

If the pictures are educational in nature they should be shown during regular time alloted to instruction and not at recess or after hours.

No school should buy a portable projector without doing so as a result of adequate investigation or competent advice.

It is not safe to use moving pictures without a booth unless slow burning stock is used.

The only practical method of securing slow burning film, in the belief of this department, lies in the line of co-operative purchase by different schools and districts.

The county bureau does not advocate the use of any film which is not of standard width and perforation. We believe that schools throughout the country eventually must co-operate to solve this problem, and that to do so standard film must be depended upon.

The idea of the booth is identical with the idea of a stove. It must be ventilated and must have an exit into the open air for the escape of gases, hot air and fumes. Unless a portable booth is connected by an adequate outlet with the open air it is entirely unsafe and has no protective value whatsoever, being, in fact, more dangerous than no booth at all.

There is no charitable agency producing educational film for the benefit of the cause. The county office is not provided with funds for the purchase of film for free use among the schools. Such an enterprise would be a prohibitive expense.

The one best book on motion picture work is entitled "Motion Picture Handbook." Its author is F. H. Richardson, editor of the projection department of the Moving Picture World. This book is simply written, can be easily comprehended by any intelligent person of sixteen years or over, is very complete, and gives exhaustive information on every phase of motion picture work.

In addition to such information as contained in the foregoing, the bulletin gives a list of feature films merely by way of suggestion and explains exchange and rental matters, giving names and addresses of well-known firms which may be safely dealt with in the matter of equipment and material.

Educating the Children

Saturday Morning Musicale at Rialto Worthy More Than a Passing Comment.

THAT the moving picture theater can be made educative in a musical capacity, as well as by means of actualities transmitted to the screen, is being proved by the management of the Rialto Theater in the series of Saturday morning musicales held there. These musicales, which are being continued throughout the winter months, are being nicely attended by the more intelligent class of patrons that such an experiment is bound to bring forth. Started with an eye to providing educational entertainment for the children, these Saturday morning performances, which consist chiefly of wisely chosen orchestral numbers, rendered by the Rialto orchestra of fifty musicians, under the efficient leadership of Hugo Riesenfeld, have become a delight also to parents and others of more advanced age.

One of these Saturday morning programs attended by the writer consisted of the following numbers, introduced, and in some cases explained, by Mr. Sigmund Spaeth, music editor of the Evening Mail.

1. Hail Columbia
2. Overture Ruslan and Ludmila - - - - - - - Glinka
3. Minuet from Symphony in E-Flat Minor - - - Mozart
4. a) In Winter I Get Up at Night - - - - - - - Nevins
   b) A Pocket Handkerchief to Hem - - - - - Homer
   c) The Cuckoo Clock - - - - - - - - - - Schaefer
   d) I Am Weary of the Garden, Said the Rose - - Hawley
5. Educational Film ("How Birds Feed Their Young")
6. a) Erotique - - - - - - - - - - - - - Grieg
   b) Along Broadway - - - - - - - - - - Riesenfeld
7. a) Sunday Morning at the Plantation - - - - - Kriens
   b) March Negre - - - - - - - - - - - Kriens
8. Pomp and Circumstance - - - - - - - - - Elgar
9. Star Spangled Banner

Hugo Riesenfeld is deserving of particular commendation for the choice of musical numbers composing this program, each of which is significant of a certain type of musical composition. Following the rendering of "Hail Columbia" the overture of a Glinka opera, described by Mr. Spaeth as having been a failure, was played. This overture, culled from this opera as a gem of musical composition, is significant of the Russia of Glinka's day, suggestive of the poetic romanticism, the tragedy and all the cooped-up emotions of a down-trodden people. Then there was the minuet of Mozart, simple in motif and suggesting at different times the light fantastic of the cultured dancer, or the heavy tread of the peasant. The group of songs beautifully rendered by Mary Ball, beloved of Rialto audiences, were in the main children's verses set to music. These were quite within the range of the child mind, and were also much appreciated by older members of the audience.

An educational film, with animated colored illustrations of birds of different kinds feeding their young, was followed by that delightful tone poem of Grieg's, called "Erotique," the (a) number of an interesting group, among which was a composition by Hugo Riesenfeld, descriptive of the impressions of people from different parts of the earth, who suddenly find themselves doing Broadway for the first time. The numbers by Kriens were suggestive of a new era in American music, in which that which has been known as popular music takes, to a certain extent, the form of the American classic.

It is to be hoped that other theater managements throughout the country may emulate the example of the Rialto in this particular, for it must be recognized by thinking people that the frequency and power given to such movements will go far toward giving America her place among the cultured nations of the earth. The ten-cent price of admission charged for these Saturday morning performances make it possible for the children of the rich and of the poor to share alike in the educational benefits to be derived from such a commendable institution.

"The School of a Soldier"

Camp Gordon, Ga., Demonstrates Its Appreciation of the Moving Picture as an Educator by Adding a Three-Reel Picture to Its Regular Course of Training.

AN INTERESTING bit of news from a southern camp, sent in by A. M. Beatty, our southern correspondent, tells of the use of the moving picture as an aid in training the soldier. It is as follows:

The Government has added moving pictures to its soldier training program, and a three-reel picture, "The School of a Soldier," is being shown to one regiment each night at Camp Gordon, Ga. The picture was made at West Point, and West Point advanced cadets, the best drilled men in the world, are the actors. It begins with the various courtesies, showing the correct methods of saluting—a private saluting an officer, an officer saluting an officer of higher rank, and so on. It shows the military reverence to the colors, the proper methods of salute outdoors and indoors, on and off duty. The same as applied to the playing of the national anthem is shown.

The student-officers are then taken through the manual of arms, the various drills, from the setting-up exercises on through the advanced stages, with the different formations. The use of the rifle is then demonstrated in minute and interesting manner. Captain Burke, of the United States Army, is the actor in this demonstration.

The picture is intensely interesting, and is one of the most appreciated training methods yet adopted by the War Department. Every soldier at Camp Gordon will be required to witness the picture, and to study every phase of the training program therein shown by the efficient young West Pointers.

NEW BURTON HOLMES TRAVELOGUES.

Beginning with New Year's Day, Burton Holmes starts his Travelogues in the circuit of cities which includes New York, Brooklyn, Boston, Worcester and Orange, N. J., his subjects this season being distinct novelties, the results of his journeyings this past summer around what he calls "The Militant Pacific." For years Mr. Holmes has sought an opportunity to visit the Antipodes—to see Australia, New Zealand, Tasmania and the lovely islands of the Pacific, renowned in poetry and prose, from the days of Captain Cook, the great explorer, to those of Robert Louis Stevenson and Jack London. He has always wanted to visit Northern Japan, hitherto un-Travelogued. He has also felt that our own Alaska should be brought home to his patrons, that they might mark the changes and development of this gigantic country, measured by a rule which could stretch from New York to San Francisco. This last summer, with Europe closed by the war, gave Mr. Holmes his chance and the coming series here brings pictorial proof of the delights and wonders of his 35,000 miles of travel. Every Sunday and Monday for six weeks Mr. Holmes will be heard in New York City, Tuesdays in Orange, Wednesdays in Brooklyn, Thursdays in Worcester, and Fridays and Saturdays in Boston.

To Brighten Soldiers' Christmas

Merry Christmas in the Camps to Be Aided by Use of Moving Pictures—Camp Mills to Be Well Looked After.

WHAT would the cantonments be without the pictures? While we are talking about the many advantages which the soldiers are enjoying as compared with previous experiences in war times (although many hardships still exist), nevertheless great credit is due the moving picture in that it is a power in every one of its applied properties for the benefit of the soldier. At Christmas time especially it is filling a large place in all parts of the world, and in addition to its entertaining and instructive qualities, it comes nearer than anything else to giving the soldier boys a genuine touch of the true home feeling he so much longs for.

In Camp Mills, the nearest large camp to New York City, plans are being made to give the soldiers as good a time as is possible under the circumstances. The nearby churches are furnishing the singers who shall, by carols and other songs, make bright many evenings at this festive season. Pictures are to fill a large place on the program, and the Rev. W. H. Jackson, of the staff of the Moving Picture World, is in charge of this part of the work, and will see to it that the boys get that which is good, although he has already been notified that Fairbanks must have a good look-in on the program.

The Christmas Red Cross drive is also looking to the pictures for a special introduction, the part of the exhibitor being that of exhibiting the "Trailer" each evening. The ten millions of members required is but ten per cent. of the population of the United States and may be easily realized if all do that which is required of them. Particulars of the "Trailer" may be found on page 1863 of the Moving Picture World.

Strand Exhibits "Blood-Stained Russia"

Patriotism Strongly Evident in Strand Theater Management's Presentation of Vivid Portrayal of Results of German Intrigue in Russia.

A LENGTHY review of the Donald C. Thompson series of Russian pictures was printed in our issue of December 22; it will, therefore, be unnecessary to retrace our steps to cover the same ground. We would, however, like to draw special attention to the attitude of the Strand Theater management in showing these pictures with their original subtitling, which are worded in the strongest possible anti-German language.

In these pictures is also concentrated a rousing inspiration to men and women alike to join in the great fight for democracy. The baldness of their truths makes us wish that their subtitles might be translated into all the languages of the earth, and that they might be given a world-wide exhibition. Could the poor, misguided Russian people, for instance, see these pictures, and read in a few brief, clearly enunciated statements their own pitiful story, German propaganda might lose considerable if not all of its force.

The exhibition of the Donald C. Thompson pictures in any and all theaters in the country constitutes an act of democracy and patriotism on the part of each individual manager. These pictures are being handled by the Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Items of Interest.

An excerpt from an address delivered by Orrin G. Cocks of the National Board of Review before the Commonweal Club of Syracuse contains interesting facts. It reads thus:

The Government, for instance, has been puzzling over the question of uniting the whole nation for the war. Some departments realize that they speak a language which does not reach the majority of the people. They have reached the cultured classes, who do not need to be reached, and have deluged them with facts, arguments, criticisms and information. All the while the motion picture has gone unostentatiously about its work of binding together the common people for this vast enterprise.

"Government officials now have commenced to see a great light. The Red Cross, the Food Administration, the Liberty Loan, the Committee on Public Information, the Treasury and Agricultural Departments, as well as others are trying constantly to use motion pictures. The Government also, in its relation to foreign peoples, recognizes that a far more effective instrument for carrying American ideals and principles than the public press is the motion picture. If this agency had been used from August, 1914, to the present day in the cities, towns and villages of Russia the present attitude of the Russian people would have been decidedly different. There might have been no attempt at a separate peace. Italy, France and the northern countries also need a continuous stream of motion pictures which actually interpret American life and American democracy to the common people."

The latest in animated news weeklies is the "Independent-American Weekly," which will presumably be handled on a state rights basis throughout the country. F. W. Universal Current Events No. 32 contains an extensive footage of film covering the Halifax disaster. The scenes of the film are carefully presented and subtitled, unnecessary exhibition of horrors has been wisely eliminated, while the devastation of the city, and scenes in the harbor showing the remainder of the relief ship Imo have not been overlooked.

A film entitled "Eye Hazards in Industrial Occupations" was recently exhibited at the Russell Sage Foundation, 130 East Twenty-second street, New York City, for the purpose of illustrating a lecture on the prevention of blindness. An attractive subject included in the Paramount-Bray Pictograph No. 99 is entitled "The Diary of a Dog Chauffeur." This subject, more amusing than educational in character, shows a wonderfully intelligent dog named Poughkeepsie Rex driving a motor on a crowded New York thoroughfare. To all appearances he guides the car himself. The more credulous will be not only pleased but astounded at this dog's performance in the capacity of chauffeur.

The Pathe screen magazine, "Argus Pictorial," contains in its fourth number a wealth of interesting material. Fox hunting in Virginia makes an entertaining opening feature for this number, giving characteristc scenes from the chase as it is practiced in that State. "Garden Monsters" is a series of close-up studies of crickets, June bugs, robber flies and other familiar creatures. "Numbers That Draw Pictures" is an interesting subject, demonstrating the way in which a swinging pendulum marks out curious patterns with colored sand. Freuh's "scissorographs" consist of animals and figures cut out in paper form, going through amusing antics.

Marie's Beauty Not of Garden Variety

Sylph-like Comediene, Who Admits Venus de Milo Has Nothing on Her, Takes Issue with Famous Singer.

IN an interview published in a New York newspaper recently Mary Garden declared that she had no use for "beauty doctors, beauty curists and the beauty banditti in general." She went on to say that women who depended upon creams, lotions and powders for their beauty always got left in the end, for cosmetics never caught up a sagging cheek or concealed a facial furrow. Cold water, good food, eaten moderately, no sweets and never a cocktail—this was Mary Garden's prescription for wholesome beauty, the beauty of good health.

Marie Dressler, equally well known among professional beauties, is quite frank in saying that she regards as rubbish the opinions on beauty as voiced by her sister artist.

"Mamie Garden knows as well as I do that we wouldn't be beautiful at all if we were not helped out by the beauty doctor. She calls him a bandit; to me he is a benefactor. I owe my figure, my complexion and my voice to cultivation. If Mame didn't believe in beauty doctors why did she ever take vocal lessons? A singing teacher is as much an improver of beauty as the woman who plasters your face with cucumber cream and turns on the steam spigot.

"Regularly I depend on the very things the prima donna says she scorns. In the morning I have my massage with violet oil, then a honey-and-milk lotion is applied to my face, followed by a secret cream made of fruits and flowers. The powder I use is also a secret. More than anything else I owe the beauty of my face—which is its expression—to this treatment. I dare the Garden girl to use it and not be a changed woman.

"My perfume, too, means a lot to me. I am sending a quart of it to the Goldwyn 'Thais.' When she gets a whiff her senses will reel and her ideas of beauty will get a jolt. Never, never will I tell what is in the perfume. It's so 'different,' as the advertisements say. It is called 'The Soul of Marie.'"

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Real Press Stuff.

JIMQUIN, of L. A., has ranked well as an advertiser, but he had to go to Texas to find the real answer to press work. Jimquin wandered down to El Paso to see what things were like down there. He hooked up with the El Paso Film Service. Before he hooked up he did a little Red Cross work. The local chapter was preparing for a pageant, and they had no press work, so Jimquin voluntered his services, and he writes:

> The first story I brought in was turned down by the city editor. He said it would do for an editorial, but they were only interested in "news." Well that made me mad—not at them but at myself for bringing them in stuff they would refuse and I went right back to my little corner and chewing another inch off my pencil—no we don't use pencils nowadays, do we?—I settled down to turn out stuff that they told me they were glad to get and which was published in nearly ever case in its entirety. Incidentally I learned something in the process. News writing is much, very much, different than write-ups of your show in your paid space or your programs or in fact anything else but "news." I made it a point to tell the editor that I appreciated his turning my first contribution. I did, too, because he made me get a hump on mentally and write stuff that was worth while.

This is the one big lesson in writing press work. If you have a theater you are supposed to get a certain amount of press stuff along with it, and most good natured editors will slap in anything you write. They regard it as part of the price they pay for the advertising patronage. But the fiesta was different. The space was free and the pressman had to pay for the space in news value. He had to write news and not editorial. He had to tell facts and tell them well. It was easy for Mr. Quinn to change the style of his offering to suit, but he had to go up against the press game as an outsider to learn the basic fact of press work. Real press work is not puffery but news. Press work benefits the house precisely in proportion to its news value. It is not sufficient that you get the stuff printed. It is not even enough that you get it read. You must interest, and to interest you must offer attractive news items and not flub. No one gives a whoop in the regions of the unblest about flub. They read it cold and unmoved. What people read with interest is news, or what has a news value. They do not care that Miss Bianca Bluff or the Bingo films is preparing to do something for the soldiers. That is not news, it is merely notice of intention. They want to know that she has done something. Learn to give a news flavor to your press stuff. You'll not only find it easier to plant, but it will help business. This is all carefully explained in PICTURE THEATER ADVERTISING, yet even Jimquin did not get the idea. Remember that the first great rule of press work is this:

Press work is of value only if it interests the reader and inspires him with a desire to patronize the theater.

Goldwyn Advertisements.

Kenneth Macgowan, of Goldwyn publicity, sends in some interesting examples of the use exhibitors have made of the Goldwyn ideas. The most novel is the heading of an issue of the Miami (Kansas) Republican, in which the announcement of the picture at two theaters is made in the "ears" of the heading. This is a small paper and probably the readers are used to strange happenings, but in a larger town, for a special display, this heading position might cost what the publisher charges—for once. The disadvantage lies in the fact that not much room is given for argument, the name of the star and play together with the dates being about all that is possible, but it certainly seems to be a preferred position in the advertising sense of that term. We think that J. W. Llewllyn was the first to use this display, but it has been several years since we saw it—or heard from Mr. Llewllyn, for that matter.

In the second example the advertisement on the left is for the New theater, Baltimore, Md., and that on the right for the Majestic, Portland, Ore. The latter is a good example of an advertisement well held together by its border. There is not much argument, but the facts are set forth, and it all hangs together because of the inclosing rule. Breaking the rule to get through the arm and rug also helps to gain an effect. To have run the rule over to the extreme side of the cut would not have been as effective, for the reason that oddity, within due bounds, always attracts. Pulling in the rule around the cut gives a white margin emphasized by the protruding arm. The display was surrounded by advertising on three sides, and this white space helped much to keep the advertisement distinctive. In the other example the use of rule around the cut isolates it slightly from the rest of the display, but running the text diagonally below helps to hold the cut in the space. Here there is plenty of argument, and if you will look at the cut carefully you will note that there is a line of six point between "Goldwyn" and "Jane Cowl," and again between the name of the star and the title. We don't know how the management induced the printer to permit the relatively unimportant lines to stay in the background, but the impossible has been accomplished. The first of these lines reads, "Presents America's Great Emotional Actress," and the other runs, "In the Romance of a Generation." Both of these lines are of value, yet they have not sufficient weight to justify their being played up to the detriment of house, star, and play. The very fact that they are set so small will cause them to be read, where in a ten-point or larger they would have fought with the more important lines and probably none of them would have sunk in.

Two other examples from the Portland Majestic form an interesting contrast. Both employ the same space, three nines, yet that on the left stands a better chance of making a hit than the one on the right largely because a cut above an advertisement does not seem to be as intimately connected with the advertisement as one forming a part of the display. The quartered advertisement is more prominent and more striking, and you connect the girl directly with the displayed name. In the right hand display the arm dropping down into the type space helps some, but the heavy rule work, on the other hand, seems to cut the two apart, and but for the arm that layout would be ineffective as compared with the other. Note in the examples, "I'll be with you on Saturday," and the larger, "I'll be with you to-morrow." The latter is given larger type and a more prominent display because the nearness of the showing makes it desirable to give the fact greater prominence. Both forms are good enough to rank with Ralph Ruffner's "Now, right now," and are more emphatic than a dated day could possibly be. At that it would be well to run a dated day in small type in case the advertisement should become separated from the heading of the paper.

The last examples show a pair of four elevens. The diamond shape is also from Portland, and the other is from Cleveland. The diamond is not as well done as the other examples from this house. Probably the design looked well in the original drawing, but in reproduction it looks as though an effort had been made to eliminate the name of the star, and this detracts from the suggestion of importance. The name of the star, particularly when the star is more important than the play, should be made as prominent as possible, and here it would seem almost as though they were ashamed of the star. In the other example the effect would have been better had there been a little more white space between "Maxine" and "Elliott," and the two words of the play name. There is slightly more space between the latter than the former, but not quite enough. A smaller "in" better placed would have gained this spacing. The advertisement is compact, the rule work holding it well together, and the general effect is good, but it falls short of punch. There is more kick to an all-type advertisement from the Grand, Madison, Wis., in which some interesting facts about the play in discussion give a force to the announced facts. This is "Baby Mine," and the paragraph runs:

> The only American farce ever played in Chinese in China—120 nights in Pekin. One of the few laughs the deposed Czar of Russia ever had—presented at his order in Petrograd.
> The Farce that captured Paris, Berlin, and London.

Even more might have been done with that last line, but it is put to good use as it stands.

Commenting upon a recent suggestion that the printing of the Goldwyn press sheets are printed on both sides, reducing their usefulness, Mr. Macgowan explains that two copies are sent each exhibitor. Most of these advertisements were suggested by the press department, and it goes to show that where material is offered in available form it can be used. That photographic sheet that Goldwyn gets out is worth several pounds of mats in flexibility of use.

For Neighboring Houses.

This unusual copy from the Victoria, Buffalo, will work well for any neighborhood house. "Built around the corner from you—for your convenience," would make a capital program line for regular use.

> THE VICTORIA FORTNIGHTLY FUN FABLE
> Willie Wise taught himself to like honest-to-goodness photoplays at the film theatre just around the corner from the place he called home.
> Over there they gave him Mary Pickford and all the big ones, along with frisky music and the glad hand when he chucked his ticket in the chopper.
> But They were so good to him in his Neighborhood Theatre that he imagined he was being bunked.
> So one night when the wind was shooting up Ferry Street like a delivery truck he nearly choked himself to death trying to swallow his dinner in one gulp; dove into his class A duds and stood up in the car until it landed in front of an open work building called a Downtown House.
> It wasn't a high class Downtown House either—but one of those cheap joints where the piano sounds like a squeaky sign swinging and the movies look like flies tangoing across the screen. A mob was trying to break down the doors because one only had to pay a dime to suffer 18 reels. Willie wedged himself in beside a dame who read the titles out loud and proceeded to get an eyeful of a play that was made when automobiles were just coming into being. He saw five like these and when they removed the seat from his aching limbs, he was murmuring faintly: "Out at the VICTORIA they can't afford to bunk me—But down here the Sucker Fishing's fine.
> MORAL:—The VICTORIA was built around the corner from you to stay—and the longer it is on the square and keeps you as a friend the longer will it remain to please you.

Handy.

The Rosemary, Ocean Park, Cal., is still using the bi-weekly calendar and the last issue for October was numbered 76, showing it to have been in use for considerably more than 2 years. It is a strip of tinted pasteboard 2½ by 8 inches, printed across the narrow measurement, with dated days and a fortnight's program. A hole is pinched at the top, and this hole is large enough to permit the card to be slipped over the head of a good-sized nail; a point wherein some calendars fail. People might hang the card, but they will not go to the trouble of hunting up a finishing nail to get a small head. The back of the card is sold to a local tradesman. The issue is a handy one, and gives the essential facts in brief space. Eight subjects are clearly displayed with room for considerable added matter as well. Some printers could not properly display a single title in the same space.

His Own Column.

Carroll E. King, of the Johnsonia, Leesburg, Ohio, writes that he runs the photoplay department in the local paper and finds that it pays. He explains:

> Note the "Silent Drama" column. By using a minimum of 30 inches per week and not taking any reduction from the regular price, the editor permits me to furnish my own material for this column, just as long as I do not make it too frank an ad. I agree with him, for by giving it the appearance of news, and running it in the same type face as the editorials, and adjoining them, everyone reads it. I know this because they often tell me things which they saw in the paper. I am always interested and glad to learn about things that they read. See? They are in the dark about this being an ad., thinking that the editor has put in this column for them. I believe that it pays far better than to take my discount on he space used and then buy "readers" with it. In order to get the maximum amount of advertising out of it without naming attractions, I advertise the stars by items about them and when the following program lists their names everyone remembers reading about them. I get my dope from the "World," house organs, press-sheets, newspapers, and make up some myself.

He takes three twelves in the weekly issue, and gets rather more than a column of space, both the advertisement and the "news" column being on the editorial page. There is no direct advertising matter used in the column, but the items largely concern the players on the current program. There is, however, a paragraph in which the editor apparently exults that Leesburg is now getting the same films as a rival town, and that works more good than did the advertising section saying the same thing. The editor also takes the outside column of the first page to announce that the house will give Saturday matinees for the benefit of the farmers who bring the kiddies to town. The matinee takes care of the kiddies while the head of the house goes shopping. A special space, three nines, announces the commencement of the matinees, and another, two fives, calls attention to the fact that on Tuesday nights the first show will be given in time to permit the performance to be witnessed by those who come in for the Grange meeting, and the children can be left for the second show while the head of the house goes to lodge. All told, Mr. King takes 73 inches in one issue.

Some time ago we commented upon the fact that he did not play up the house name. The cut shows the only mention made of the house name in a three nines. It seems to us that this is a mistake, but Mr. King explains that it is the only house in town, and so, any advertising is known to apply to the Johnsonia. At the same time he wants to decrease the size of the house name and play up the fact it is the "home" theater, gradually arriving at the fact this is the Home theater and not the Johnsonia. The argument does not seem to be a good one from either angle. If there is only one house, call it the Home, formerly the Johnsonia. Shading from one to the other takes too long. Cme right out with an announcement to the effect that it is a home theater and therefore the Home theater. For a few weeks use "formerly the Johnsonia" below in a ten-point type, but meantime get the reading public so thoroughly familiar with the name that when opposition does come—as it will some time—the words Home and theater are so inseparably combined that they seem all part of one work. When there is no opposition is the time to prepare for competition, for competition will inevitably come with the success of the first house. Leesburg is still a three-a-week town, but if Mr. King makes a go of his venture he will work up to nightly shows and then the other house will come along. Meantime get them used to the new title.

Universal's Service Helps.

W. A. Bach, of the Universal Film Co., writes that his company is adding service men to the staff of all its chief branches. They already have service men in Toronto, New York, Chicago, St. Louis, Denver and Portland, and by the time he has completed his trip he will have others in San Francisco, Oklahoma City and Kansas City. Mr. Bach adds:

> This means the expenditure of quite a sum of money on the part of the Universal, but both the company and myself are convinced that the exhibitor is the vital point in the industry and we must do all we can to assist him to sell the goods after he has purchased them.

Five years ago this sort of a statement would have been deemed the venture of a visionary or clever appeal to the exhibitor not to be backed up by action, but the times have changed. Business long since found out that to endure it must help the retailer. Today the hardware salesman who sells a bill of goods out of proportion to the real needs of a hardware dealer is more apt to be discharged than applauded. Now the film companies have wakened to the fact that if they employ trained specialists to aid the consumer in moving his goods, there will be a more ample market for these goods. They help the retailer to sell that their own sales may continue. And it is with a genuine pride that we read Mr. Bach's opening and closing paragraphs:

> I thought it would interest you to know that I am having every Service Man installed in our branches purchase a copy of your "ICTURE THEATER ADVERTISING." * * * I have found your little book a valuable work of reference for myself and I am prescribing it as a text book for our service men.

The sale of fifteen or twenty copies of PICTURE THEATER ADVERTISING is not a considerable item, but the appreciation of good judges means a lot. The service sheets of other releasing combinations shows that they have the book, and other publications have studied it. It is not so much that we have written a good book as that the live wires of America have written the volume. If every exhibitor had and used this book, we would be hearing less about poor business.

Another Program.

W. G. Mitchell, of the Regent, Toronto, sends in the first issue of a new house publication. It is a twelve page 6 by 9 on better paper stock than really is necessary. Most of the cuts are newspaper screen and do not work as well on a surfaced paper as they would upon a more absorbent material. That is the whole idea of the coarse screen cut. It is intended for use upon porous paper with an ink that is absorbed by the paper instead of drying upon the surface. In the process of absorption the ink spreads, just as it would upon blotting paper, though in a lesser degree. It is to provide for this spreading that the dots or stipples are further apart. When the cut is used with a surface-drying ink upon hard finish paper, the white spaces far apart make the cut look gray. It would be better to use a cheaper grade of stock, or else a finished cover and cheaper stock inside. The program is well displayed on the double middle page, but it is placed at right angles to the general run of the paper, and to be read the program is well displayed on the double middle page, but i. is placed at program in two columns and let it run properly. This will not affect the advertising frame surrounding it. A little rearrangement will give them all the same preferred next-to-program position. There is a generous proportion of reading matter, but a few full-face heads would point up this section. The matter runs on without dashes or headings. The larger items should carry a one line head each and the notes be separated by dashes. This would permit the text type to be unleaded without leaving blanks, and in that narrow column eight point solid matter would look more important. One mistake, we think, is running the five cent price on the cover page. It deceives few, if any, and it looks tricky, since the issue is clearly intended for free distribution. If the advertising is not permitted to overrun the text, that program should work hard for the house, for it is well arranged and the text is interesting to photoplay fans.

Paying the Piper.

Here are some interesting examples from one of the oldest theaters in the West, Piper's opera house, Virginia City, Nevada, a relic of the boom times. Some of them are a little handicapped by too much copy, but they make an interesting study. The first cut gives two examples of an odd and useful form. The main copy is moved to the right of the space, with pointing fists in the left hand margin calling special attention to two points in the story. In the display for "The Scarlet Letter" the top paragraph gives the old blue law under which Hester was made to suffer. The lower refers to the chief character and her penalty. The second example gets in the two punches of the story, each being advertised in the inclosed space between. The effect is odd and good. Three styles are shown in the other display. That in the centre is straight reading top to bottom, picking out the big situation and working from that. If you have not the time to read it all you can at least get the message from the larger type, and, perhaps, the attractor line will cause you to take the time to read. The sample on the right gives a bank of small type between the essential facts. Here, too, you do not have to read the small lines, but probably will be led to. The left hand section shows a split advertisement. The lower box gives the current attraction, while the top merely tells you to patronize the shows any night. The ballet dancers have no connection with the text, but are put in to fill out. They catch the eye. The orator figure in the Washburn advertisement is more germane.

Most offices carry these small cuts in two or three sizes, and they fit "Skinner's Dress Suit," yet few seem to have been used by exhibitors. The Piper advertising shows an improvement over the last lot sent in some time ago. They keep moving ahead faster than the town probably does. The Piper is one of the classist houses, and their work is of added interest on that account.

Use for Yourself.

The card shown here is being sent out by the Paramount to advertise to the exhibitor, but it is an unusually good card to copy. In the original it is 4 by 6 inches, printed in red, with a blue question mark, and put the house name and address in six-point Gothic in instead. Use "see" in place of "book" in the curve of the question mark, and put the house-name and address in six-point Gothic in the lower left hand corner, and "showing" and the date in eight-point, the former to the left and the date to the right of the stem of the point. With these minor changes it should make good copy for any house using the serial.

One Quit.

The Queen theatre, Owensboro, Ky., has gone out of business as a result of the war tax. The two Bleich houses continues, but Mr. Hedderick seems to feel that to add the tax to the house cost will result in no business. He did not wait to find out. Since all houses are equally subject to the tax and the public well understands that it is a tax on the patron and not upon the house (which pays other taxes) it would seem to be only a matter of a few weeks when the new order of things will be accepted. The man who can pay ten cents for amusement can pay eleven, and three cents should not be an undue strain upon the man who can afford a quarter.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

Getting Facts.

How much information did you bring back from your vacation? If you are a city man presumably you found that milk comes from a cow instead of a tin can, and that apples grow upon trees and not in some farmer's cellar. If your home is in the country it is to be presumed that you found out something about the city, but just how much information have you made your very own? Personally we found out a lot of things about people and things, and some of those facts are going to be useful soon and some we may hold onto for years, but we got a lot of new material, though we are working over old ground. The real author is constantly stowing his mind with facts whether he travels or stays at home. A street car ride will do an observant man more good than will a trip to Europe serve the unobservant. And it is well to remember that you do not always get the city stuff in the city and country stuff in the country. Some of the best city stuff we've picked up lately was found in a town that has a smaller population than it had before the civil war. Most facts are elastic, and almost all are capable of being reversed. You can use as fact as it stands or turn it inside out and get another fact. You can use a fact as such or twist it to make something else, or you can put two facts together and arrive at a third. The more facts you have, the more ideas you can invent, and the more varied the facts, the more varied those ideas become. Be alert, in town or country, and in time you'll not be worried for plot ideas. They will come faster than you can use them and then you can use only the very best and ignore the rest. The most successful authors do not write up all their ideas. They offer only the best of their work, and in this way they keep the market price up. The in and out writer gets a low price on his average. Perhaps he could get as much for only a very few of his best stories.

Still Here.

A correspondent points out that it was the Greeks and not the Romans who besieged Troy and thinks we should not seek to change history. We wrote "Romans" instead of "Greeks," but we know better, though we did not show it in a recent item. And with that for a starter the writer goes on to rhapsodize over the wonderful stories of those days as compared with the present day material. He does not realize that the stories are being acted over and over again today and in his own town. Just because Helen wears a one piece bathing suit and Cleopatra does "interpretive dances" as a means of showing her shape does not mean that the Helens and Cleopatras are less interesting now than they were then, but they require different treatment to make them interesting. Right now we are getting war stories that make Caesar's Commentaries look like the report of a schoolboy scrap, but we are too close to get the full perspective. Right now we get stories that make Cleopatra's dalliance with Antony sound like the story of a burned out love. Cleopatra merely stood one Roman general on his head. There are Broadway show girls who clean out two or three Pittsburgh millionaires in a season and yet have to pay press agents to get their names into the newspapers. There are still good stories, but they are too new to be fully appreciated.

Helpful.

Buying up fiction rights is going to help the man who writes directly for the screen, though it may be some time before this is made manifest. Most of the stories with moon faced, soggy young heroines have been snapped up. A little girl with curls is not considered so essential to the success of a fiction story, and it is probable that after we have had a few Skinners and Cappy Ricks and Judge Priest stories we shall be permitted direct stories about real people instead of sirupy soubrettes.

Use Judgment.

Although we urge authors not to trust to light effects to carry their plays, it does not necessarily follow that they should not write in a light effect that seems to belong, whether writing the continuity or the synopsis only. Light effects will not sell stories without plots, but light effects that belong will help to make plots better. The advice did not mean that all effects should be excluded from scripts, as some correspondents seem to believe. It merely means that you should worry about the plot and let the effects care for themselves, instead of worrying about effects to the prejudice of the plot. Use a little judgment even in taking advice.

Forewords.

A correspondent wants to know if we think that forewords hurt his chances of selling his synopses, and adds that it seems to help sales, but certainly it does not injure the chances of a sale. In the form the questioner uses he has a synopsis of his story, then the cast and what really is the scenario, but which, with the usual misnaming of this business, is known as the synopsis. The cast in detail is wholly unnecessary. It should be eliminated. The foreword as the writer explains it is too long and too dead. There is no use in briefly recapitulating th story unless you can make it attractive, and in his intense earnestness to make the story wholly clear this correspondent takes the life out of the paragraph. The best form would be not more than eight or ten lines directly above the story, single spaced and indented. This will set it apart from the synopsis in full, which should be double spaced. Indenting merely means not writing on the first five and last five spaces on the paper. Set the margin at 5 instead of 0 and the check at 70 instead of 75. Perhaps some examples of briefing will help:

> Persuaded to take a sleeping potion that causes the semblance of death, Juliet is laid in her tomb. Romeo, her affianced, comes to the tomb too soon, and finding that she does not rouse from her death-like sleep concludes that their ruse to evade her parents has brought about her death. He kills himself just as Juliet rouses, and she, despairing, kills herself with the same dagger.

That is the essence of Romeo and Juliet, and that is what will sell the story if it sells at all. Having read that and found it unusual, the editor is more apt to read the rest of the story. If he is told all of the story in the brief he will find nothing new in the full plot, but if he is given merely the main fact the rest will give novelty to the second reading. Comedies should read more sprightly. Suppose we have this:

> Jiggs knew better than to take home a box of salt codfish as the supposed results of his fishing trip, but he did not know bluefish from brook trout, and when he took the saltwater fish home Mrs. Jiggs could see it was poker and not fish. Jiggs thought he had won the pots, but he was wrong—Mrs. Jiggs was the real winner.

This will give the editor the idea of the story and he can dig deeper if the idea pleases him. The foreword, or whatever you care to call it, is not essential, it is not necessary nor perhaps even desirable. Unless it is well done it may even be a detriment, so if you do it, do it well.

Be Interested.

The first requisite to good work of any sort is interest in that work whether it be creative or purely mechanical. The man who digs a ditch with interest digs a straighter and better ditch than the man who is working merely that he may eat, and the man who takes an interest is more apt to become foreman than he who sees in the ditch merely a hole in the ground. In writing you cannot interest others unless you yourself are interested.

Prepare for the Field.

Probably two or three million people are today working over backyard gardens who never planted seeds before. Judging from what we have seen here in town, a large proportion of these gardens are going to be failures, chiefly because the ground was not properly prepared for the seed. It is the same with plays. You must plant the plot-seed in fertile ground or it will not grow. You must first prepare your mind through study before you can grow plays. And study does not mean merely the study of technical rules but general education. Rake over the ground first, fertilize it, mulch it, turn it over, and then try to write and you'll be more apt to gain success.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost, will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

From Australia.

Lesley H. Cornell, Grand Theater, Perth, West Australia, sends the following interesting letter across 3,000 miles of land and heaven knows how many miles of brine.

May I be permitted to ask a question? I am head operator at the Grand Theater, the finest and most costly continuous house in this state. It will have been opened twelve months the 20th of this month [September.—Ed.]. The projectors are "Simplex," and the trouble concerning which I desire to consult you has caused me a great deal of worry and experiment, only to get right back where I started from. When working with a 1½-inch spot, which seems to be plenty large enough, if one may judge by looking, I get a faint shadow at the top of the screen and at bottom of same a faint blueish spot, which latter appears to me to be the tip of the lower carbon. Can remedy this to some extent by increasing size of spot to full two inches, but this means waste of light. The sketches will, I hope, make the matter clear. Have tried spacing the condensing lenses; also have moved condenser various distances from the film, but have failed to entirely eliminate the trouble. Here are my present working conditions: Dallmeyer projection lens, 4-inch E. F.; 3-inch B. F. Distance apex front condenser to aperture, 9½ inches, with condensers close together; distance arc to back condenser, 3½ inches, using 4½ menisci-bi-convex lenses. The throw is 100 feet and the picture 22 feet; use 60 amperes.

Have the operating room very neatly fitted out, a special feature being the large air shaft. In summer I can work comfortably with my collar and tie on, which cannot be done in all Australia operating rooms [or in all United States and Canadian ones, either.—Ed.]. The theater was built at a cost of £5,000 in addition to which the Atex Organ Orchestrelle cost £1,500. In addition, we use an orchestra at night.

There, I am getting away from what I started to ask you about, but I am sure you will be pleased to hear from one of the boys on the other side of the globe. Have been intending to write for some time, but this is my first. Assure you, however, it won't be my last. Sent for third edition of handbook some time ago. It will doubtless be received before you get this. Am regular reader of the M. P. World and study the department each week; also have complete Hawkins' Electric Guide, which I could not afford to be without. Have been in the profession five years, having served two years as apprentice. My first "real" position I held for two years, at the end of which I was sent to take charge of projection at the Grand. My word, Mr. Richardson, but we operators still have lots to learn before we may finally rest on our oars and take it easy, and I for one have tried hard to improve on my knowledge and work. I must say in justice to you and your department ["Our" department.—Ed.] that through it I have gained a vast amount of knowledge. If we only had a man like yourself out here we would be happy. My word but the American men have something to be thankful for in having you there

And now here is a simple little device I have added to my machines. You might set it forth in the department for the benefit of Simplex users. I got a strip of aluminum 1/16-inch thick and slightly wider than a film and attached it as shown in illustration. The idea is to prevent the end of film, either at start or finish, from picking up the oil which works through from the bearing. And now, before closing, would like your opinion as to condensers; do you think the discoloration I get is due to too short focal length lenses, the same being of very poor quality and uncorrected—the only kind we can get here. So far as I know our other shows have the same trouble. We can get no other sizes than 4 and 4½.

Your letter will interest our readers, I am sure, even as it has interested me, though I am afraid I will be unable to help you much because, due to war conditions, whereas your letter was written September 10th it was not received until October 30th, and the fates only know when my answer will reach you. That operating room light shaft is very fine in some ways, but it has two serious drawbacks, viz., suppose you have a fire, and at that particular time the draft happens to be down, as it might be, instead of up. Then, too, at matinees the operating room is flooded with daylight, and that makes it increasingly difficult to see your screen as you ought to and must see it if your projection is going to be all it should be. This is not meant as a criticism, but as pointing out to you the "other side" of the matter.

As to the photo you promised in the postscript, would rather have one of the operating room, showing yourself and assistant (if there is one) in the foreground.

I submitted your optical problem to John Griffiths, who has, as you know, solved many knotty problems in practical projection optics for this department. His reply reads:

Australia's optical system is all out of balance. His X value (distance apex of arc condenser to crater—Ed.) is 3½ inches plus thickness of lens, or about 4 inches in all. His Y value [distance apex of front lens to film.—Ed.] is 9½ inches plus thickness of bi-convex lens, or about 10 inches in all. His ratio, therefore, is a little more than two to one. No wonder he cannot get results. The depth of the cooling plate is about ¾ of an inch and with the condenser so close there would be a shadow cast on the top and bottom of the aperture. This clears up somewhat when he advances his arc, because by so doing he widens the angle of those rays coming from the central points of the condenser, thus shooting them up into the opening. Remedy: Withdraw the lamphouse until the distance between the condenser and aperture is about 18 inches. Then take a piece of cardboard about the size of a slide and puncture in it three pin holes, one in the center and one in each of two diagonal corners. Place this in the slide-carrier and move the arc until the beams focus at the cooling plate. Having completed this, shut off the current and measure distance between crater and condenser. The correct distance for a 60-ampere d. c. should be between 3.25 and 3.5 inches from the surface of the lens. For a 60-ampere a. c. arc it should be between 2.75 and 3 inches. Australia has, I think, direct current [called "continuous" over there, I believe.—Ed.]. His condensers are of too short focal length, therefore, to bring the crater to its proper position. For every ¼ inch his crater distance is too short, as compared to the above named measurement for d. c., add one inch focal length to the front condenser and everything will be O. K. Example: Assuming 60 ampere d. c. If the three beams were in focus at the aperture when the crater distance was 2⅞ inches and the front condenser was a 6½-inch lens, in order to place the crater right for 60 amperes it would be necessary to change the front condenser to (one added inch of focal length for each ¼ inch difference between 2⅞ and 3½) 8½-inch focal length. This would get us a crater distance of 2⅞ plus ½ inch, equals 3⅜ inches. Get me?

Here, friend John. Whatcha doin'? Holdin' out on muh? I'll knock your block off, or bite your northwest ear. Come across, man, come across! Give us the whole dope on this new scheme. G-r-r-r-r-r man, I'm dangerous. Sort of a bad man from Bitter Creek, an' it's unhealthy to fool with me. Unless you kick in with the full dope I'll head Nancy Hanks toward Ansonia and argue the matter with you, unless I freeze to death on the way up.

As to condensers, Brother Cornell, the United Theater Equipment Company, 1604 Broadway, New York City, will supply you with highest grade condenser lenses, any desired focal length, at $5.00 per set for meniscus bi-convex, or $3.00 per set of two plano convex. To this must be added fifty cents for postage. This would make it cost you $11.00 for meniscus bi-convex for both machines, or $7.00 for plano convex. If you order these I would suggest a 7½ meniscus and 8½ bi-convex or a 6½ and 7½ plano convex, with about 18 inches from apex of front lens to film with the first named and 16 with the second, the lenses to be as close as you can get them without touching. These lenses are high grade, but uncorrected. Up to this time we have no corrected condensing lenses in form practical for motion picture projection work. You certainly will not be able to get either good or economical results with your present combination of lenses. I was amused at the three pence P. O. money order for carbon of reply. It was all right, of course, but seems queer to have a three pence money order travling something like twenty-five thousand miles—halfway around friend world and back again.

Compensarc For Mazda Lamp.

Constant current flow, without any considerable variation in amperage is one prime necessity to long life in the new Mazda projection lamp. Up to date the life of these lamps has, according to reports sent to this department, been almost anything else than satisfactory. For instance: the Alcazar theater, El Paso, Texas, by its manager, J .E. Alarcon, says: "We burned out two lamps in the first five days because the compensator would get red hot after a few hours' work. We have therefore gone back to the arc lamp."

Many very similar reports have reached us, and failure to properly regulate current flow seems, from all I can learn, to be the principal difficulty insofar as satisfactory lamp-life be concerned.

But now comes the General Electric Company and submits to this department a new compensarc which its engineers, working in conjunction with the lamp department of the same company, have designed. This device is intended to give close regulation in current. It is described by the company as follows:

> The Type I Compensarc is a self-contained device, requiring no auxiliary attachments, and is rated 750 watts, 110/120 volts A-C primary and 20/30 volts secondary. The working parts consist of compensator, starting switch, rheostat and ammeter. The starting switch, rheostat handle and ammeter all appear on the front of the steel cabinet which houses the compensator rheostat and other working parts. The steel cabinet is arranged for wall mounting at point where the controls will be convenient to the projection machine operator. The starting switch at starting the lamp automatically puts some resistance in the lamp circuit, so that excessive rush of current through the cold filament is prevented. The ammeter indicates at all times the current passing through the lamp and the finer adjustments of currents are controlled at the will of the operator by means of the adjustable rheostat. The operator can therefore easily adjust the rheostat to compensate for the slight variations in the commercial line voltage and thus conserve the life of the lamp.

Since the information was not sufficient to enable me to determine with certainty of just what the device consisted and how it operated, I wrote the company at Schenectady, requesting further data, to which their engineers answer as follows:

> In reply to your request for technical information concerning Type I compensarc, we wish to report as follows: The device is an auto transformer, provided with primary taps for coarse regulation of the voltage to the lamp. The one tap is designed for use when the primary supply is 110 to 115 volts and the other for use when it is between 115 and 120 volts. The fine regulation of voltage is secured by means of a 62-button rheostat placed in series with the primary. The starting switch is connected into the primary side of the device and at the first position inserts in series with the primary a resistance designed to cut down the rush of current which would otherwise occur through the cold filament of the projection lamp. The lamp connections are taken from the transformer at such points as will secure the proper voltage.

The only question arising in connection with this device, it seems to me, is, will friend operator stay on the job and watch things closely enough to maintain the necessary even amperage flow? This remains to be seen. If it is found there is no real necessity for automatic regulation of voltage it will be that much less complication, but I am just a little bit inclined to question on this point. Well, we shall see what we shall see, and if the General Electric finds automatic regulation to be necessary they will no doubt supply it. Meanwhile the compensarc looks very muchly like a long hop in the correct general direction.

New Speer Carbon.

The Speer Carbon Company, St. Marys, Pennsylvania, sends samples of the new carbon it is putting out under the trade name "Speer Alterno," together with descriptive booklet and remarks: "Would appreciate hearing from you at your convenience relative to this carbon. Should you require additional samples or any further information please let us know."

I will require "further information" before I can say much about the carbon. The man who could tell from looking at a carbon how it will perform in practice would be a wonder. Also it would be utterly useless to make a test involving a few of the carbons. This department only supplies information of real value, otherwise it s usefulness would very quickly cease. It is hard to avoid error when every precaution is used. We can therefore not afford to neglect any.

The principal claim for Alterno carbons is that they are noiseless for alternating current. If this be true, and they are equal to ordinary carbons in other respects, they will be welcomed by those operators who are obliged to use a. c. Concerning Alterno the manufacturer makes the following statement:

> The operators' difficulties, which included a wandering light, ghosts in the picture, sputtering of the arc, and a noise almost intolerable, have all been relegated to by-gone days. Operating with the Speer "Alterno" Carbons the work in the booth is simplified and made a real pleasure.
> By the adoption of special materials, both in the body of the carbon and the core, the Speer Carbon Company is able to offer to the exhibitor and operator a carbon with intensely bright, white light producing qualities. The illuminating qualities of the Speer "Alterno" Carbons bring out the minute details of the film and yet have a most pleasing effect on the eye. * * * Regarding the wandering of the arc or the flickering of the light, it can almost be said: "It cannot be made to wander"

We are pleased to know that "work in the 'booth' is at last to become a real pleasure." I trust Alterno will fulfill the very modest claims of brother Speer's advertising man, but I will nevertheless have to be shown as to the "become a real pleasure" end of it at least. Seriously, I shall have to tell the Speer Carbon Company exactly the same thing I told anotner large carbon manufacturer, who recently sent in large claims for a new carbon it is placing upon the market. Personally I do not in the least doubt but that the new carbon has superior value. I am not here, however, to set forth my mere belief in matters of this kind. I must deal in known, substantiated facts. I therefore ask that you send to me the names and address of as many theaters as possible which are actually using the new carbon. I will then select as many as I may wish from the list at random and correspond with the chief operators, getting their opinion of the carbon. In this way I get first-hand, thoroughly reliable data from men actually using the product under discussion and will be in position to tell my readers what the operator himself thinks about it. Incidentally, the list from the other manufacturer has not as yet arrived, though it probably will in due time.

Speer literature advises the use of the "jack-knife" set as best for the new carbons. This is a serious error. Granting that the operator can get a higher c. p. with that set, the fact still remains that no operator can or will maintain steady, even illumination with a jack-knife set. It simply is not done. I have been working for eight years to eliminate the jack-knife, and am sorry to see a carbon manufacturer advising it. That heavy-headed error has worked much injury to screen illumination in the past. I was congratulating myself that at last we had it killed and now the dry bones of its skeleton are rattled by a manufacturer. Shame upon you, brother Speer!

Let us have that list as soon as you can. Cut out that jack-knife abomination, and believe me when I say that I trust that the new carbon will prove to be of genuine value to the industry.

New Screen to Be Marketed.

From the Middle West comes the following:

> In about two weeks (November 11) I propose to market a new screen, which will have a specially prepared surface giving a more distinct picture. This screen will be more easy on the eyes and will give added value to the tones and lighting effects; also it will require but two-thirds the light required by the ordinary screen. I am going to demonstrate this curtain in a couple of Chicago theaters and will expect to do some advertising in your columns. Would you prefer seeing a demonstration before seeing my copy, and if you believed in my new curtain would you also help it along editorially?

You will take notice that this manufacturer claims quite some considerable many things. And maybe he's in position to deliver friend goods too. Who shall presume to deny the possibility? But this is something like the steenth time we have been informed by the enthusiastic maker of a new screen that it was going to fill us with astonishment; that it was the one thing neded to put the industry on its feet right; that ten amperes on its wondrous surface would do more, oh very, very much more than twenty on mere common screens; that it would give depth, brilliancy, have no fade-away and—all the rest of it. But alas, also alack. We sigh to say that in the ointment were flies. Some were good screens, which endure unto this day and have many friends, though not exactly world beaters. Others were really remarkable until time waved his wand just a little way and—they went out of business. Others were never even heard of after the first great noise. And so it goes.

No, friend manufacturer. We sincerely trust you have everything you claim, and have it in a form which will not tarnish—a form which Old Man Time will let alone, BUT that must be demonstrated, and time is one great, little ole demonstrator. Certainly I will give your screen editorial notice, whether you advertise it or not, if you send samples of screen, not less than one foot square, for examination. But I cannot "help it along editorially" until I KNOW it is all that it claims to be, and time alone can determine that point. I hope you make good, however, because such a screen would be for the good of the exhibitor and the industry, of course, and anything which is good for the industry is welcome. I would not, however, adivise other screen manufacturers to abandon their plants just yet. Wait awhile and see what we shall see.

His Third Enlistment.

John E. Barnett writes from Anniston, Alabama, as follows:

> Have time to scribble a few lines, which I trust will find you in good health and enjoying the Big Town, as I certainly would could I but be there. This makes my third enlistment, and if the war continues it will not be my last. Being what most folks call a "crank twister," or a "film lacer," as operators are loosely titled here in Alabama, I just had to write you. I selected the most dangerous branch of field service, the 115th U. S. Machine Gun Company, because it offered quickest results and most sat sfaction if ever we meet the Boche in France. Our craft is fairly well represented. There are quite some theatrical workers, but a majority thereof are operators. I recently joined the Mis-frame heavies which Brother Sherman started. Was then at the Maryland theater in Cumberland, Maryland, where Simplex machines hold the fort against all-comers. I have operated some down here, for Y. M. C. A., using a brand new Motiograph, a jim-dandy mach ne, by the way, using d. c., projecting a 20-foot picture at 60 feet. The boys enjoy pictures, as it is a very healthy, unsuggestive entertainment of new stuff. Exchange supplies five reels three times per week. Our prospects for getting to France are good, and soon, too, I think. Anniston has seven theaters. The "Noble" is a Marcus house, and B. F. Keith has a fine vaudeville-picture house under way. Operators here are just about the average. Should you run across brother Sherman of the News please jog his memory concerning my case before I. A. Board in New York City.

Brother Sherman is no longer with the paper you name. Don't know what he is doing. Seems to have crawled into a hole, yanked said hole in after him and sealed the opening. First time he comes out for air I'll nab him. Good luck to you, my boy. I have a son in the navy. He expects to sail soon and his ship will carry fighting men to France, not once but many times. You might happen to go on his ship. His name is Lee Richardson. He runs the blower engine—or that is his duty now. Another boy who just simply adopted me for his father is already in France, in the aviation corps. I, myself, have some Liberty bonds and have "done my bit" in other ways. But it is something more than awful to have the boys slip out through the bay, one by one, and not know whether or no you will see them again. My own son is, I believe, thank God, at least comparatively safe; so is the son who "adopted" me, being in the mechan cal department and not flying, but there is Fred Bachman, Evers Abbey and many others who—well, I am getting to hate the sight of the narrows and the ocean beyond. It is, I think, even harder to stay behind and watch and wait for news one hopes to never hear, than it would be to tackle the trenches. Guess if I wasn't too ancient to be accepted I'd get on the job and do some lead projecting myself. Good luck, my boy, and may you come back safe, sound and with a sprig of olive in your gun's barrel and a paen of victory ringing clear, that all the world may know that right his triumphed.

Chicago Operators' Ball.

The editor is in receipt of a neatly engraved card, reading as follows: You are cordially invited to attend the Ninth Annual Ball of the Scientific Projections Engineers, Local Number 110 of the I. A. T. S. E. and M. P. M. O., Wednesday evening, December Fifth, Nineteen Hundred and Seventeen. Coliseum Annex.

And I would thoroughly enjoy being there; also had the invitation been received a week earlier I am not certain but that I'd have been on the job—so you see what you escaped. I am writing this the evening before the date of the ball and am wishing for the Chicago men the very best time ever. Whoop-er-up, boys; let joy reign unconfined.

New York Operators' Grand Ball.

On the night of February fourteenth next, New York Operators' Local Union 306 will give its annual grand ball at Palm Garden. Already the ball committee has plans under way which promises to make the affair one of the real events of New York's theatrical season.

Preceeding the grand ball will be a vaudeville entertainment, the securing of talent for which is in the thoroughly capable hands of Will C. Smith, of the Nicholas Power Company. This assures the entire success of that part of friend program. The lighting effects will be in charge of this particular editor, and he intends that it shall be worth looking at. Mr. S. L. Rothapfel, managing director of the Rialto theater, will lead the grand march with one of the brightest stars of the film firmament. And to crown it all a moving picture of the grand march will be made, and will be shown at the ball at about two a. m. in negative form, the positive to be shown later if possible.

Some doings, my boy, quite some considerable doings. The editor has been delegated to act on a committee of which Chas. Unger is chairman, to secure the attendance of Mayor Hylan, and what is more, we expect to succeed. Florence Turner will be there and we hope our old friend Anita Stewart will again favor us; also there will be others.

The editor has been delegated by the committee with the pleasant task of inviting every union within visiting distance to attend in a body, if possible, as the guests of Local 306. If all cannot come, at the very least we hope each union will send a delegation, and I will see to it that invitations, etc., reach you in due time. Come on, boys, get into the picture and maybe run yourself on your own screen, for we expect to get at least some of the film into one or more of the topicals.

It is going to be one great, big rip snorter of a howling good time. You are all invited. Friend Palm Garden is one of New York's most popular ball emporiums, but we intend to show it what a real crowd and a real Big Doings looks like.

Controller Trouble.

Pomeroy, Iowa, sends in the following unsigned letter:

> Am having trouble with my Power's Six A motor drive. Supply is 60 cycle, 110 volt, motor being built to accommodate that current, of course. Have tried to adjust pressure on the friction disc, but it apparently makes no difference. Put on a new fiber wheel about four months ago. Operating room floor is cement and the vibration is something awful. Do you think some felt or cork under the machine legs would improve matters? Heard your lecture at Fort Dodge and sure got some facts drilled into my ivory dome, and they will stay there, too.

You do not say whether or no you have a Handbook, Pomeroy, but presumably you have, and on pages 506 to 510, inclusive, you will find the Power's speed control fully described and illustrated, with full directions what to do under almost any possible kind of trouble. You were very careless in your letter. You did not tell me whether or no installation of the new fiber disc made any difference, and if so what difference? Presumably your trouble will be found in an uneven surface of friction material R 14, plate 2, page 509 of the Handbook. This may be caused by several things, the most likely being the carrying of excessive tension between the friction wheel and friction disc R 13, plate 2, and the leaving of the two surfaces in contact over night. Instruction No. 4, page 508 of the Handbook, says: "It is, of course, necessary that there be sufficient tension or friction between the friction material R 15 and driving disc R 13 to pull the projection mechanism, but anything more than sufficient to accomplish this purpose will merely result in undue wear of the friction disc, friction material and unnecessary consumption of power in the motor * * * and the book then goes on to describe, in minute detail, just how to regulate the friction. Briefly it is done as follows: at the end of the shaft carrying friction disc is a knurled thumbscrew. Loosen its locknut and slack off on the thumbscrew until friction disc and friction wheel are entirely out of contact with each other. Now start the motor and, having first set the speed control lever so that the friction wheel is pretty well in on the disc, slowly tighten up on thumbscrew until projection mechanism comes up to full speed and you are satisfied there is no slippage between wheel and disc." Your tension will then be juts right. This must, however, be done with a film in the machine, and you must be sure there is no excess of tension and no slippage. Instruction No. 3, page 508 of the Handbook, says: "CAUTION: never leave the controlling lever down when the machine is standing still. Always pull lever clear up so as to disengage the friction wheel from the disc. Failure to attend to this will probably result in flat spots in friction material." I think probably your trouble is due to this cause, plus excessive tension between the two wheels. The friction material may be trued up by following instruction No. 1, page 507 of the Handbook, which reads as follows: "Should friction material develop flat spots, or become eccentric in form, it may be trued up as follows: place point of new ten or twelve-inch coarse file on rod R 39, plate I (cross rod back of friction wheel), using rod merely as a rest and let face of file bear lightly on friction material, while motor is running. In doing this be very careful to have the file bear perfectly true and level (hold point of file flat on rod), else you will get the face ground off at a slant and it will not fit face of friction wheel squarely.

No, cork or felt under legs of machine would do no good, since the vibration is presumably in the machine itself, though from your letter it might also be in the floor. It is necessary to be very careful in describing trouble. I am a long way off, Pomeray, and have never taken even a correspondence course in long distance mind reading. If my diagnosis is not right you will have to be more explicit in describing the trouble.

Inquiries.

QUESTIONS in cinematography addressed to this department will receive carbon copy of the department's reply by mail when four cents in stamps are inclosed. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in this department, $1.

Manufacturers' Notice.

It is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be indorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Four huge drums are the predominating features of the drying room. Each of these drums hold 1,600 feet of film and they are kept rapidly revolving by means of individual electric motors. Temperature and humidity of atmosphere are very important in this room. Speed is desirable, but if the films are dried improperly the texture is spoiled and they are likely to reticulate or show granular markings. Therefore, to secure safety while speed is maintained, this room is supplied with a huge air conditioner which automatically supplies air at proper humidity and temperature. This machine strains, washes and warms or cools the air as desired and according to the way its control is set.

In the assembly department films are cut, patched and put together at a long work bench which has a fibre board top—hard and clean. Each workman has an electric pocket set flush with the top of the board and covered with glass which is used to show every detail of the film. For patching and repairing the films are clamped down on a specially designed device like a vise. Special reels are used for winding and unwinding. Each section of the long bench is fitted with steel receptacles for scrap and for finished stock.

This room also contains the inspector's bench, with its special light box, through which the films are run, and a cleaning machine. The latter, operated by motor, runs the films over a system of rollers and brushes dampened with cleaning fluid.

One factor of the department not previously mentioned and located in another part of the building, is the theater—a neat little auditorium with a seating capacity of 300. Every now and then the shop foremen assemble here to view films of an educational character. Distinguished visitors are also given a motion picture program in the theater and are frequently surprised to find themselves on the screen, as they have been taken by the motion picture operator unawares and the film has been developed while they have been inspecting the factory.

The department also produces all the still photography used by the Ford Motor Company for advertising purposes, in all printed matter, etc. Hundreds of portraits are made every week. Two special developing rooms are devoted to 8x10 still pictures, and there are many special devices used in the still photography quite distinct from any of the movie apparatus. Among these machines is a mechanical dryer, which dries prints automatically and in short order by a blower system, so that the pictures do not curl up. The still department produces a large number of pictures of machinery and parts and thousands of lantern slides.

Such has been the development of two years, and it is doubtful if there is any other industrial establishment in the world that has used photography to the extent the Ford Motor Company employs that art in merchandising and in spreading an industrial message. It is the first manufacturing plant to use the motion picture and the only one to maintain such a department as an integral and constant factor of its system. But in spite of the amazing growth of this department the end is not yet in sight. More room is necessary and arrangements are already being made for additional space.

Valuable Book Issued by Eastman Kodak Company.

Abridged Scientific Publications from the Research Laboratory of the Eastman Kodak Company, Rochester, 1917. This is the second volume of abridgments of scientific papers published from the laboratory of the Kodak Company, and contains abridgments of the material issued during 1915-16. It is not intended for general distribution, but is rather of interest to advanced workers along certain lines. The subjects covered are wide in their application to the many phases of photography, and, as will be surmised, are of a technical nature.

These abridgments are highly condensed results of about twenty-five papers giving the results of important investigations into various photographic problems, some of which have a very important bearing upon cinematography

Among the subjects may be mentioned "Projection and Focusing Screens," "Relative Photographic and Visual Efficiencies of Artificial Illuminants," "Proportional Reducers," "Optical Properties of Light Filters," etc.

Pyro Developer for Titles.

In view of the expense of the regular hydoquinone title developer the following pyro developer will give a density equal to the regular hydroquinone-caustic title developer if used for a little longer time, a preferred time and temperature being five minutes at 70 degrees Fahrenheit.

The following is the formula:

	Avoirdupois.
Sodium sulphite, anhydrous	6 lbs.
Pyro	13 oz.
Carbonate Soda, anhydrous	2 lbs.
Caustic Soda, pure	3 oz.
Water	10 gal.

Dissolve the sulphite in some water, then add the other ingredients in order given. If it is required to keep the developer a long time it may be desirable to make up and keep the soda as a separate solution, or, better still, make up a concentrated stock solution with less water and keep the stock solution in a large bottle, with a glass siphon for removing the developer, protecting the solution from oxidation by pouring a layer of heavy cylinder oil about a quarter of a inch thick over the top of the solution, where it will flow in a heavy viscous sheet on top of the solution, protecting it effectually from the atmosphere.

A short piece of rubber tubing drawn over the end of the glass siphon and constricted with an ordinary spring clothes-pin provides a good air-tight stopper, which may be opened by pinching the clothes-pin. When wanted for use dilute with the requisite amount of water and use immediately. As pyro developer oxidizes so rapidly this formula is only recommended for use with the drum system of development, where the small amount of developer used for each fresh drum may be thrown away and a fresh batch used for each new drum.

"Pictorial Photography."

"Pictorial Photography, Its Principles and Practice," by Paul L. Anderson, E. E., is a new book that should be in the hands of every photographer interested in the pictorial aspect of the work. The book, of over three hundred pages, contains over twenty half-tone illustrations, nearly twice that number of line cuts, and is handsomely bound in cloth. Mr. Anderson, a well-known contributor to photographic magazines, has in this book, achieved a most gratifying result by the method employed. While the work is authoritative and technical matters have been treated in a scientific manner, a too strict adherence to technical language has not been permitted to detract from the usefulness of the information imparted. Not only this, but the extremely elementary instructions with which the average book of this character is burdened, has been very sensibly left out. The remarkable part of the work lies in the fact that while Mr. Anderson has a keen appreciation of the pictorial possibilities of photography, he has a clear grasp of the scientific principles upon which the worker must base his efforts if success is to be achieved, knowing that a knowledge of these underlying principles will enable the worker to so command the technique of photography that he may secure the results necessary in the carrying out of his artistic ideas. Special attention has been given to the intimate relationship existing between the two, with the result that the book is an exceptionally informative one, while still being most readable and enjoyable. Published by J. B. Lippincott Company.

"How to Take and Make Moving Pictures."

The above is the title of a handsome little booklet of about fifty pages, filled with most informative matter in keeping with the title. This book is issued by the Ford Optical Company, 1029 Sixteenth street, Denver, Colorado, and sells for the modest sum of thirty-five cents post paid. The book contains some twenty-five or thirty illustrations that adds much to the clearness of the instruction that is given. An idea of the field covered can be gathered from a few of the chapter titles, which are as follows: What is a Motion Picture? The Camera and Its Construction, Lenses and Formulas, Developing the Films, How Films are Printed, Toning, Dyeing and Coloring, Title Making, Misframing, Causes of Unsteady Pictures, Flickering and Electric Markings, Trick Pictures and How a Motion Picture Can Be Made to Pay.

"Cinematography for Amateurs."

This is the latest addition to the well-known English series, "The Amateur Photographer Library," in which the author, Leonard Donaldson, gives us, in twelve chapters, a very comprehensive outline of what is required in the way of apparatus and "know how" for the production of moving pictures in an amateur way. Twenty illustrations and nearly a hundred pages of text are used without waste in telling how to start, with securing the idea for the film to projecting it upon the screen. The price is quoted as one shilling, sixpence, postage two pence, which would mean sending about forty cents to the publishers, Hazell, Watson & Viney, Limited, 52 Long Acre, W. C., London, England.

Berst Closes Big Deal Contracts

Pathe Plays for Tom Moore's Eighteen Theaters in Washington.

J. A. BERST, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, arrived in Los Angeles recently on a trip in connection with the expansion of releasing plans for 1918, and it is stated that the greater program of Pathe Plays will occupy Mr. Berst's principal attention. Stars and studios, it is reported, are both scheduled for consideration and many important developments are expected as a result of Mr. Berst's visit.

On the way to the Coast, Mr. Berst, accompanied by his assistant, G. A. Smith, stopped off long enough in Washington to conclude with Tom Moore, one of the most progressive exhibitors in the country, one of the biggest deals in film history of the Capitol. This calls for the showing of Pathe Plays in all of the eighteen theatres under Mr. Moore's control, a new $2,000,000 company to be known as Moore's Theaters Corporation having been incorporated, through which he will conduct the business of his houses. Preliminary negotiations with Mr. Moore were conducted by D. F. O'Donnell, manager of Pathe's Washington branch.

"I was surprised," stated Mr. Berst upon his arrival in Los Angeles, "to learn the extent of the feeling of unrest among the exhibitors from coast to coast. This statement applies particularly to the large exhibitors, but I understand from my branches that same conditions apply also to the owners of the smaller houses, the backbone of the industry.

"I do not think I exaggerate when I state that the situation is so serious, as to assume the proportions of a revolt. Everywhere I go I find the same situation. The exhibitors with whom I discussed conditions unanimously agreed that the greatest evil in the industry today is the high film rental being charged for unproductive pictures.

"Tom Moore, whom I consider one of the greatest exhibitors in the country, offers a good illustration. Mr. Moore told me that he submitted to extravagant prices for stars as long as he saw a possible profit. But when an attempt was made to force him, through a contract, to show all of the pictures of one company, to the exclusion of all of the other companies, he stated he canceled in all ninety contracts for eighteen theaters. We are pleased to announce that Mr. Moore has arranged to show our forthcoming feature productions.

"Before taking action along definite lines, I will make a careful survey of the producing activities in California. It is conceded that better pictures can be made for less money in California than in the East and I am considering plans which would mean a centralization of practically all of our production activities in or near Los Angeles."

It is reported on good authority that Mr. Berst has under consideration several additional stars for his Pathe Plays program, a new company to produce comedies and another serial company.

Standard Buys A. P. A. Engraving Plant

"Billie" Huffman and His Associates Consolidate By Purchase Two Big Concerns Doing Business in Picture Field.

NEWS of interest to the moving picture trade came to light last week when it was announced from the offices of the Standard Engraving Co. that the Standard interests had effected the purchase of the big engraving plant which had been operated for some time by the American Press Association and that the two engraving businesses, Standard and American Press Association, would be combined under the name of the Standard Engraving Co. The enlarged business will be conducted at the present address of the American Press Association, No. 225 West Thirty-ninth street, New York City, the entire top floor of the big loft building there being used. The present quarters of the Standard Engraving Co. at No. 143-145 West Fortieth street, will be vacated as soon as extensive alterations at the Thirty-ninth street address, made necessary by the consolidation, have been completed.

The Standard is "Billie" Huffman's business and the progress being made by the company is a source of much gratification to scores of people in the moving picture industry with whom Mr. Huffman, Ed. Chilton, and their able associates have been dealing for years.

The move to another address will be the second in the history of the firm, which was organized in 1895 with small quarters at No. 61 Ann street, New York City. When the move to the Fortieth street address was made about twelve years ago it meant the establishing of the first engraving plant north of Thirty-fourth street in New York City.

The present Standard plant, completely equipped to handle all kinds of photo engraving, employs approximately fifty workmen. In taking over the American Press Association shop the company secures equipment which will make necessary the employment of half again as many people and will make the Standard Engraving Co., Inc., the largest plant of its kind in New York City. E. F. Chilton is president of the company and William Huffman, treasurer.

Griffith Spectacle for Picture Theaters

Epoch Corporation Announces Change in Booking Policy for "The Birth of a Nation."

THE announcement from the offices of the Epoch Producing Corporation that it intends presenting D. W. Griffith's wonderful spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," in the representative picture theaters of the country was made this week.

Although the great production which set a new record in motion picture history has been out for nearly three years this will be the first time that it has been played officially by the Epoch Company outside of the regular theatrical bookings in the higher-priced theaters.

This change of policy is in keeping with the new demand for longer features in the regular motion picture houses. There have been many spectacles undertaken since "The Birth" came with its phenomenal rush in the Spring of 1915, but Griffith's great work still stands out as the crowning achievement in this enlarged field of the motion picture industry.

The present plan of the Epoch Company, the corporation which controls this valuable property, is to reach the many million regular motion picture "fans" who have never been able to see this work. Elaborate arrangements are being completed to presen the big story in the same effective manner that marked its triumphs in the two-dollar theaters on tour.

To those in the know it is not necessary at this time to devote much space to the history of "The Birth of a Nation." The concrete facts are that it is the most phenomenal success that has ever been produced in American theaters. It holds records for length of runs and popular responses in every first class or leading theater of practically every city in this country. These triumphs have been duplicated in Europe despite the fact that its appearances there were at the depressed period of the war developments when theatricals were not as flourishing as they have been since. But in spite of its wonderful records the investigations of the Epoch managers show that less than one-fifth of the total population available for picture patronage have seen the spectacle.

Mr. Griffith's methods of presenting his big spectacles in a comprehensive way will be carried over to the picture theaters. The special orchestral score which was synchronized to every moment's action of the thrilling story will be given as it always has been given and the projection and embellishment of its salient features will be handled with the same care.

Special engagements are now booking and full particulars of the new plan may be had from the Epoch Producing Corporation, J. J. McCarthy, general manager, 807 Longacre Building, New York City.

GOLDWYN'S GLASS ROOF PAINTED BLACK.

The Goldwyn Pictures Corporation is trying an experiment in its studio at Fort Lee, N. J., which may bring an important change in methods of motion picture photography where the weather does not permit of sunlight work the year round. The great glass roof of the Goldwyn studio has been painted black and all daylight excluded, making it unnecessary to cover the sets in which companies are working. Natural light, the cameramen say, only interferes with proper artificial lighting, and since they cannot have proper natural lighting at all times they prefer to have it wholly shut out.

MAKE IT READ "WITHOUT A BIG DEPOSIT."

In the two-page advertisement of Jewel Productions, Inc., in this issue the word "big" was omitted by us in error from the statement "without a deposit" appearing in the first paragraph. This should read "without a big deposit."

Sending Films to American Boys in France

Y. M. C. A. Getting Ready to Plan Regular Film Circuits for Army Shows Overseas—Half Million Feet of Film Already on Way

THERE are several organizations whose duty it is to guard the moral tone and to keep up the morale, or the fighting, soldierly spirit of the boys in Uncle Sam's uniform. Most people know already how these organizations, the Fosdick Commission, the Y. M. C. A., the Knights of Columbus, etc., are going to work and what they are doing. Here in America they act more on their own special authority, but in France, where the commanding general is the sale authority, there will be even more perfect coordination and team work with the army organization.

The part that moving pictures will play in the work of these subsidiary camp comfort activities will of course be large. Much has been said of the need and the value of film shows just back of the trenches and in the camps. The English Army was the first to discover this and it has developed a smoothly working system by which regular film shows pass from one point to another along the whole British line. To study what has been accomplished and to report for the benefit of those who are organizing a like service to American troops, George Urie Stevenson has been in Europe for the Y. M. C. A. and has recently returned. Though he would not permit the World representative to see his report, he talked entertainingly and enthusiastically of what he found in England and France in the way of film shows for soldiers and method of providing them.

George U. Stevenson.

Mr. Stevenson was an ideal choice for this service. He has the personal quality to fit him to be of service, and the breadth and ripeness of his experience in the film business in Europe as well as in America will make his counsel most certainly worthwhile. Both as a broad-minded patriot and able executive who knows the film business thoroughly he will be a credit to himself and to the men with whom he works. It will interest his many friends in the trade to know that he volunteered for service with those who were t provide film shows to the army early last summer and connected himself with the War Camp Community Recreation Commission, under Raymond B. Fosdick. He was detached to go to Europe for the Y. M. C. A. The authority of the Fosdick Commission does not extend beyond the borders of the United States.

Before the war Mr. Stevenson was connected with the Trans-Atlantic Film Co., of London, English representatives of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company of America, and has many friends among film men on the other side. When his duties with the Y. M. C. A. took him to England, Harry Spoor, of Essanay, Ltd., who has been active from the start in getting film to the troops at the front, gave him every assistance. A conference was arranged between the Y. M. C. A. organizations of America, England, Canada, Australia and New Zealand and besides an assurance of cooperation was given Mr. Stevenson by all the leading film distributors of England and by the British Expeditionary Forces Canteens, the official organization under the auspices of the British Government, that cares for the soldiers' film shows.

How the Soldiers Came to Ask for Pictures.

In the earlier stages of the war there was not a little confusion in handling material of all kinds. Somewhere in England a film show was shipped to somewhere. It landed at Plugstreet (Ploegstreete) and the Tommies found it. The good show wasn't going to waste, not while there was a man who could put it on—not at this time and place. A man was found and the show was enjoyed. A Chaplin film was included and it added punch to the next day's work of all the Tommies who were fortunate enough to see it. Such a demonstration of the value of that kind of entertainment couldn't be passed over and at once chaplains and commanders began to apply for more of the same kind. If ever an artist justified his usefulness Chaplin did behind the trenches in Flanders. Fate has given such a privilege to but few. To supply more Chaplin films without delay Harry Spoor spent $2,000. It will be remembered that Chaplin was at that time with the Essanay firm.

The need of films was then brought up to the cinema trade in general and William Jury, one of the representative London film men, was appointed on the Imperial Commission, the English counterpart to our Fosdick Commission. Mr. Jury recommended the appointment of Harry Wood, then managing director of Gaumont, to head the new cinematograph department. The War Office gave Mr. Wood the rank of lieutenant and attached him to the British Expeditionary Forces Canteens. Lieut. Wood enjoyed the confidence of the trade and in his accustomed businesslike way tackled the job of organizing a film service that would be worth while and based on sound principles. As a result his show distributing organization has met all the problems of transportation and routing which, as can readily be imagined under the conditions, was a gigantic task. He now has several well-developed circuits working out of a half-dozen depots equipped to the last word with every essential to the intelligent handling of the situation.

Problems of Equipment, Machines, Parts, Etc.

Before the film can be used a complete installation has to be ready and preparation must be made to handle breakdowns quickly and keep the outfit in working order. All the better class of second-hand machines in England were secured and to keep these on the job all the spare parts lying around were also gathered in. This must be taken into account by the Americans, as no spare parts can be bought, except through a stroke of luck, anywhere in Europe. Foresight is needed to have spare parts in places where they can be reached on call. The shows travel on the interlocked system, which means that the group of subjects making up the show moves from point to point as a unit and must not be divided.

Operators and Showmen.

The representative of the Canteens at each station is the showman and looks out for all the local needs. He secures the operator, sees to the apparatus and the seats, if there are any, receives the show and sends it again on its way when the time comes. Most of the operators are enlisted men who volunteer for the work. Soldiers are often moved, and it is quite a job to keep in touch with men able to serve at the crank. In this connection we may add that magnificent work is being done by Paul Kimberly, managing director of Thanhouser, Ltd., in educating returned and disabled soldiers to be operators.

It is practically necessary to have an electric generating outfit for every soldier theater. Oxy-acetylene tubes have been used for projection, but the Governments have such need for these that they are requisitioned as soon as they appear. Besides they are dangerous, as can be seen when we remember that the film itself is highly inflammable and the oxy-acetylene is not the best neighbor for it. Small generating sets such as the Delco are available and should be supplied.

How the Films Are Chosen.

The Canteens take the selections recommended by the British Board of Censors and have Sergeant Sydney Brock stationed in London and he makes choice of the pictures from the Censors' lists. These are sent to the bases and go out along the circuits in say seven-reel shows comprising largely comedy, virile, true-life stories that show life as it is, and with ews weeklies and educationals. Changes are semi-weekly and as close tabs are kept on the shows as though the business were on a commercial basis. The film is used up in the service, and that none of it may return and be in competition with the home trade it is destroyed when of no more use to the Canteens.

The Problem Before America.

Trade relationships and agreements between American companies and those abroad will of course have to be taken into account in sending film to entertain our troops. If this film gets on the European market it will of course spoil the American film trade there. This will be looked out for. The three big problems are getting the material, getting room in ships going to France and getting shows properly circuited to the troops. The British Canteens has offered the use of one of its depots for film distribution to American troops till an adequate service can be instituted on America's own account. This will be a great accommodation and is appreciated on this side of the ocean.

Paramount Chiefs Surrender Positions

Abrams and Schulberg Will Devote Energies to Fostering Closer Relationship Between Branches of Industry.

THE surrender of the executive supervision of the Paramount Pictures Corporation by Hiram Abrams and B. P. Schulberg, respectively president and general manager of the distributing company, was announced last week. The transfer of this authority to others was accomplished in order that the former Paramount executives may devote their efforts and time to the formation and fulfillment of a plan which it has long been the desire of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to put into existence and active practice. This plan consists of a closer relationship between exhibitors, producers and distributors, and a larger bond of common interest between these factors.

The reason for the extended national tour undertaken some time ago by Messrs. Abrams and Schulberg, and but recently terminated, is now made apparent. The intercourse with exhibitors in all parts of the country for which this trip created the opportunity, and the knowledge of exhibiting conditions which the tour disclosed, were obviously intended as the foundations for the future efforts of Mr. Abrams and Mr. Schulberg in this direction.

It may also be recalled that on several separate occasions within the past few months, Famous Players-Lasky executives have emphasized the need and the desirability for a closer communion between producers and exhibitors. It is clearly indicated that through the instrumentality of these two, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation purposes to plant and nurture a deeper and more genuine association with the exhibitor-body of America than has ever before existed between the theater owners and managers and the producers and distributors.

The successors of Messrs. Abrams and Schulberg in the active management will probably be announced next week.

WALLACE COBURN IN UNIVERSAL SERIAL.

Wallace David Coburn, the "Cowboy Poet," has joined the Universal forces as an actor. He is widely known as the author of "Rhymes of a Round-Up Camp" and other Western stories in verse and prose and is intimately acquainted with the life he portrays. Mr. Coburn was born in Helena, Montana, and is of Scotch-Irish descent, being the son of Robert Coburn, one of the very earliest cattle pioneers of Montana and owner of the famous Circle C brand, whose ranches bordered the Assinaboine Sioux Indian Reservation.

EDEL TO INTRODUCE DEPARTURE AT STRAND.

Harold Edel, managing director of the Strand Theater, New York, has announced that another radical departure in photoplay programs will be introduced at that theater shortly, in the form of condensed versions of popular operas. These operas will be staged with all appropriate effects including special scenery, the first to be "Carmen," sung by Andre Enrico, the noted European tenor, as Don Jose, Anita Tagel as Carmen, Rosa Lind as Michaela and Auguste Bouillez as Escamillo.

Producers of "Mother" Give Luncheon

ARTHUR H. SAWYER and Herbert Lubin, of General Enterprises, Inc., distributors of the George Loane Tucker production of "Mother," the six-part screen version of Eden Phillpotts' famous novel of the English moors, sponsored by McClure Pictures, Inc., gave a luncheon, Tuesday, December 19, at Rector's for representatives of the reviewing and advertising staffs of the moving picture publications present at the trade showing on the same date. The guests, twenty-two in number, were seated at an oblong table in the Pompeiian Room, and the excellent impression made on them by the picture left them in a proper mood to enjoy the well-selected menu.

At the finish of the meal the next hour was spent in singing, the selections ranging from "Over There" to "Dolly Gray," and some positively amazing discoveries were brought to light in the way of volume and tone possessed by several of the singers. The names of these favored mortals need not be mentioned, but two of them at least are capable of seeing the boast of Sir Andrew Aguecheek and going it several times better. It will be recalled that the slim knight claimed to have "the loudest voice of any man in Illyria."

The chairs were occupied by Arthur H. Sawyer, Daniel M. Henderson, H. G. Kosch and Bert Ennis, of McClure Pictures; Frances Agnew, C. A. Kracht and J. P. P. Reddy, of the Sunday Telegraph; F. J. Beecroft and Peter Milne, of the Motion Picture News; Lawrence Reid and H. F. Rendall, of New York Review; David Arnold Balch, of the Dramatic Mirror; J. Goldie, Billboard; James Beecroft, Exhibitors' Herald; Charles W. Brennan, Motography; W. G. Beecroft, New York Star; Harry Ennis, Sidney Goldsmith, R. W. Baremore, Trade Review, and Randall M. White, James Milligan and Edward Weitzel, of the Moving Picture World.

Theaters in Out of the Way Places

Manager Wessling Finds Picture Houses Profitable in Small Towns.

W. S. WESSLING, Cincinnati branch manager for Pathe, visited the home office in New York last week and brought with him some interesting news of the picture business in the mining districts in his territory. According to official reports, Pathe's Cincinnati office has succeeded in booking subjects in places almost inaccessible except by way of coal car accommodations.

Mr. Wessling says that in many of the isolated sections covered by his office, picture theaters are found in towns that boast of but one other building, and that is used as a general store, also that at many of these little theaters as high as one dollar admissions are sometimes charged for feature shows.

"When I first went over the Cincinnati territory," said Mr. Wessling, "I was amazed at the so-called picture theaters I found at different railway stops. Many of these mining town theaters consist of plain benches placed before a rude screen. In some cases a sheet is hung loosely against the wall, but they all had plenty of people to draw from and now that they are getting a regular service from our office, they are all doing capacity business.

"About the queerest theater I visited is located in Thurmand, W. Va. Thurmand consists of the railroad station and a general store. The Southside theater is situated in the cellar of the general store and gets its name from the fact that it is entered from the south side of the building."

In announcing the showing of Pathe subjects, the management of the Southside theater, which is controlled by the coal company, distributes hand-bills printed in seven different languages.

STRAND ORCHESTRA TO OPEN M. P. EXPOSITION.

The opening musical program of the Motion Picture Exposition to be held commencing February 2 at the Grand Central Palace by the National Association and the Exhibitors' League, will be given by the Strand Symphony Orchestra.

In reply to an offer made by Harold Edel, Managing Director of the Strand, to contribute the Strand orchestra, F. H. Elliott, General Manager of the Exposition, last week accepted with thanks at the order of the Board of Directors. The entire orchestra of fifty pieces will be used on this occasion and Mr. Edel has already begun work on an elaborate program.

Exhibitor Has Found Strength Says Hodkinson

Must Be Given Place in Industry or Will Wrest It By Attempting Functions He Cannot Perform.

W. W. HODKINSON'S "Open Letter" to Stanley V. Mastbaum and the exhibitors of the country, in which he outlined his idea of the "ultimate type of organization," is being issued in booklet form. In the same booklet, which is being mailed free on request, are contained the text of the Mastbaum telegram and also, what has not been published before, a statement of the Hodkinson principles as applied to the current questions, a list which includes deposits, booking methods, the reel tax, rental prices, stars and exchanges.

Mr. Hodkinson's statement that he considered the "exhibitor investment as the only considerable value in the industry," and that the exhibitor was "the one indispensable element, where the larger profits should center" went even farther than many exhibitors themselves would choose to go.

Asked for an interpretation of his statements, and particularly of his reasons for announcing that he intended to give the exhibitors "who assume part of the functions of distribution a large share of the distribution profits of his organization," Mr. Hodkinson said:

"My plan of partnership with the exhibitor, giving him the major share of the profits of distribution, was not worked out because I wanted to give anything away, but because the situation where the exhibitor is entitled to this share is already here, and I am merely getting a little ahead of the procession by offering this share. The organization of exhibitor's distributing circuits, with an idea of crowding the producers off the map, the deadlock over the tax payments, all mean only one thing, and that is that the exhibitor has found his strength, and must be given his place in the industry. If not, he will wreck it by trying to perform functions which he cannot perform, just as the producers are trying to perform the functions of distribution, which they are unfitted to perform because they are so close to their own product.

"When I said that the aggregate exhibitor investment was the only real value in the industry, I mean just that. It has been upon the basis of that investment that the entire industry has been built, for that capital, that substantial return, has been the basis of all the financing which has been done for production and distribution. Star contracts are worthless. Contracts with executives are worthless. The studio investment is infinitesimal in proportion to the capital required to turn over the industry.

"A man who is not connected with the financing of business may find it hard to understand, but the amount of value tied up in this business is colossal, and is actually out of proportion to the average return—if the capital invested were actual cash. But it is not cash—it is credit. That credit is furnished by the presence of the exhibitor, who by merely being on the job guarantees that the money will ultimately come back from good pictures.

"The exhibitor has never had any returns on that credit, the capital of the business. I propose that he shall have a return for his part in furnishing the credit on which the business is built. That credit need not be invested capital —credit does not require always an outlay of money.

"There are other reasons for this plan of giving the exhibitor a large share of the distribution profits. The most stable elements in the industry are the big exhibitors. Those men have an investment which must be protected. They are today banding together because they see no other way in which to protect their investment. They are rushing in to upset a balance which is vital to the progress of trade, the balance between production and distribution. They must be protected from the harm which they would do themselves. They are justified in their motive, but the producer must be supported as well as the exhibitor. My plan is to give the exhibitor his share of distribution profits while at the same time the producer is protected.

"The producer, in the general scramble, got the first grip on distribution profits. It has doubtless been the saving of a great many trademarks in the business. But those profits do not belong to him. Protection does belong to him, and he must have it, but distribution profits outside of the exchangeman's belong to the exhibitor, who furnishes the credit which backs the great turnover of capital necessary to distribute pictures. Producer protection will never be found permanently in slicing off big distribution profits. My plan is so to rearrange the interests in the business as to give the producer the assured market which will support his good pictures, and the exhibitor the service of good pictures for which he pays. The distribution profits, earned not in the picture business at all, but merely by the credit and capital which the exhibitor furnishes, must go where they belong—and that is to the exhibitor."

Jeanie Macpherson

WITH the advent of big stars and the tremendous cost of production of present day feature photoplays great importance is placed upon the scenario. A young writer whose works have attracted considerable attention is Jeanie Macpherson, who is under exclusive contract with Artcraft and has contributed the stories for some of the biggest productions released by that organization.

Miss Macpherson is a brilliant example of what brains and concentration can do. In three years she has written twenty-four scenarios, either original or adapted from a story or play. She was responsible for "The Little American," in which Mary Pickford scored a great success, and "Joan the Woman" and "The Woman God Forgot," the big Geraldine Farrar spectacles produced by Cecil B. de Mille, and "The Devil's Stone," Miss Farrar's latest Artcraft release, was adapted by Miss Macpherson from the story by Beatrice de Mille and Leighton Osmun. As an artistic work, "The Devil Stone" is considered by Mr. de Mille one of the best pictures he has ever made.

Jeanie Macpherson.

At the present time Miss Macpherson is completing the script on "The Whispering Chorus" adapted from the book by Perley Poore Sheehan, which is to be the basis of a super-production by Mr. de Mille. The famous director is exceedingly enthusiastic over this latest subject, and is devoting considerable attention to the selection of the cast and the technical details.

That the public appreciates the work of Miss Macpherson was evidenced when she visited New York recently, on a vacation, when she was besieged by interviewers for big metropolitan dailies, who paid glowing tributes to her ability in their columns.

LONG MEMORIAL STARTS LAWSUIT.

That the piece of statuary of an angelic figure in bronze on the tombstone erected in Woodlawn Cemetery to the memory of Samuel Long, former president of the Kalem Film Company and one time director of the General Film Company, is an infringement of copyright is the charge made in an action on file in the United States District Court.

Mr. Long died in July, 1915, and his widow had a monument erected in his memory. An angelic figure in bronze formed an imposing superstructure on the monument, but Mrs. Minnie K. Young, widow of William Henry Young, alleges that the design is an infringement of a similar figure which she caused to be superimposed on a monument erected on her husband's tombstone several years ago.

Lozzari & Barton Co. and John Williams, Inc., are named as co-defendants in the unusual suit.

GLADYS HULETTE IN "ANNEXING BILL."

Gladys Hulette and Creighton Hale have started work under the direction of Albert Parker in their Pathe comedy headliner, "Annexing Bill," an adaptation from Edgar Franklyn's story that made a big hit when it was published in Munsey's Magazine. In the cast supporting the stars will be seen Marguerite Greene, Marc Smith, Helen Tracy, Saxon Kling and Frank Nelson.

Important Happenings of the Past Year

Events of Interest Occurring in 1917 Arranged in Chronological Order—It Was a Busy Year, Thank You

TAKEN all in all the year that has just slipped forever into the past—1917—has been a fairly strenuous period in the motion picture industry. Called upon almost at the outset to combat the ardent desire of the lawmakers of various states to tax its receipts or regulate its conduct, those who have chosen motion pictures as a vocation have been continually at their wits ends to circumvent or, in a measure, mitigate such demands. Withal the child is fairly healthy and active and promises to weather the storm—the demands of war and disturbed financial conditions consequent thereto.

During the year, it will be noticed, the dragon of official censorship was severely scotched whenever and wherever it raised its head. Sunday opening made some gains, though the failure of the Walker bill in New York was a disappointment. Funkhouser is still in the harness, but Breitinger's head fell in the basket.

Necessities of war, into which our country has been drawn, laid the heavy hand of taxation on the industry and has caused no little turmoil, but the disturbance will pass and the business prospects for the coming year will enable the motion picture to do its share toward winning the war in more than one way and to its everlasting credit.

The record shows unusual activity on the part of the organized exhibitors of the United States. The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has also been busy and its influence has been felt in every branch of the business.

There have been remarkably few serious failures of motion picture firms. A few weak organizations have sprung up and quickly disappeared. There seemed to be no particular field for them.

Death has taken a light toll this year, for which all may be thankful.

The arrangement of events is by volume and the figures at the end of each paragraph indicate the page of the volume on which story is printed.

By Edward M. Roskam, Film Expert.

THE hardest part of the producing of a motion picture is the cutting and assembling of the print. Hundreds of directors are producing pictures which are really made in the cutting departments. If a director is a good film cutter and can follow the action of his picture on a pair of rewinders, the producer he is working with has something to be thankful for.

Directors who can cut their own pictures are few and far between. D. W. Griffith, Thomas Ince, Edwin Carew, George Tucker and Edgar Lewis are a few great directors who cut their own pictures, but it has taken them years to master this art.

The majority of directors make a child or a pet out of their pictures. To them the eliminating of this episode or that unnecessary scene is like cutting off the fingers or arms of his own child.

If directors would only realize that a comedy situation or a dramatic scene is over after the laugh or the suspense, emotion, or thrill is accomplished by bringing the scene to a hasty close, their pictures would be less of a task to cut and the stories far more convincing.

The use of close-ups in the midst of dramatic action is also a mistake made by a great many directors.

I have seen a woman roughly thrown to the floor and as the man's hand grasped her, the director cut to a close-up of the woman, thereby losing all the dramatic value and suspense of the scene.

Close-ups are effective when used to depict emotion, as introductions, and thoughts. They are necessary for switch-backs or suspense, but should never be used when they break into dramatic action.

There are a few film cutters in this business who try to cut and edit a picture while watching it on the screen in a projection room. By making notes to a stenographer, telling him to eliminate this scene, shorten that one, transpose this scene or that title, and so forth, they think they are cutting the picture properly.

I claim that no man or woman can properly cut a picture unless he looks at it once or twice in the projection room and then personally goes over the entire film by hand, on a pair of rewinders. Then when he comes to an unnecessary scene he can eliminate it, but he must first be sure that the next scene or title will not break his continuity of action. If a scene is dragged or too long he must ponder over that scene, placing himself as one of the characters in the picture in order to think up a proper title, and he must personally insert his title so that it will seem to come from the correct character when projected on a screen.

Dramatic switch-backs are a physical impossibility unless a cutter personally arranges the scenes. If his assistant does this work his assistant is the real cutter, or it is luck if he gets the title inserted perfectly.

I have been a film cutter for the past eight years and although the assembling girls that worked for me are now expert film cutters, I have never let one of them cut a picture with or for me. If film cutting could be taught by dictation I would have started a film cutting school long ago.

A film cutter must be able to write and originate comedy and dramatic titles. He must also know the proper color schemes for each scene in order to cut the negatives properly when the positive print is ready for the laboratory.

NIGEL BARRIE JOINS ROYAL FLYING CORPS.

Nigel Barrie, the well-known young English actor who plays the part of Roger, the husband, in Clara Kimball Young's latest production, "The Marionettes," has passed his examination for entry into the British Royal Aviation Corps, and has left for points unknown to take up his training.

Mr. Barrie has taken leave of Miss Young and Director Chautard and members of the company, some of whom he expects to see "over there," and is followed by a host of good wishes.

"The Devil Stone"

Artcraft Presents Geraldine Farrar in an Exceptionally Fine Piece of Artistry.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

ARTCRAFT'S latest subject, featuring Geraldine Farrar, entitled "The Devil Stone," is from an original story of the Breton coast by Beatrice DeMille and Leighton Osmun. Reduced to scenario form by Jeannie MacPherson and directed by Cecil DeMille, "The Devil Stone" starts with a flavor of romance and with the idea of representing an abstract idea by a symbol. The devil's stone is a magnificent emerald richly set in an ancient diadem. It is found by a fisher maiden on a rugged coast after a storm. Its history is most picturesquely associated in her mind with a fragment of story lore. It had been stolen by a Norse Queen from a Bishop whose convent her troops had looted, and she ordered him thrown over a cliff for concealing it. With his last breath he curses her, declaring that possession of the jewel shall become fatal to all who hold it until it is returned to the church.

The fisher maiden, Miss Farrar, soon after attracts the attention of the miserly owner of the fisheries, and his greed is so excited by a glimpse he is accorded of the emerald that he bends every effort to win the maid in marriage and succeeds. The miser, Tully Marshall, steals the diadem after marriage and plots to get rid of his wife by compromising her with a young man in whom she has taken a deep interest, a reacting plot, for it leads her straight to a great criminologist, Hobert Bosworth, who has no difficulty in locating the thief. The wife discovers her husband gloating over the jewel, recovers it and is attacked by him in a fit of insane rage. She kills him in self-defense, but she effectually conceals her crime and the weapon. She is eventually married to the man of her choice, but the criminologist makes it his business to trace the author of the crime, and he refuses to believe that the husband was killed in self-defense. The girl on whom so much misfortune has been showered by the fatal stone asks leave to return the gem to its rightful owners before exposure is made and is accorded a month's time. She returns it to the church and comes back to pay the penalty with such good faith that she is believed, and her future made forever safe.

Such is the composite story of romance, tragedy and detective skill which, though the content is of vague purpose, is admirably constructed in every detail, showing a very high quality of craftsmanship in its formation for the screen. Thoroughly as this work has been done, however, it is really of secondary value to the exceptional artistry of production. In settings, picture composition, photography and scientific work generally, this production marks a high point in screen visualization. It sets a standard in these respects which will be difficult to follow, so harmoniously grouped are all the elements of success and production.

Miss Farrar has at last given an interpretation in accord with her accomplishments and experience as an artist, her operatic manners yielding gracefully to the more convincing naturalness of screen portraiture. Her eyes and their expressive accessories are ever busy, revealing with great force and intelligence the workings of her mind and heart, her attractive personality tremendously intensified by her swift comprehension of the exactions of her role. She has a strong support, notably in Tully Marshall, never better since the days of "Paid in Full," and Hobart Bosworth, as the criminologist; but she dominates the production by sheer strength of character irrespective of her superior opportunity. The play proved a winner at the Rialto, where it was presented to a packed house in masterly fashion.

"The Pride of New York"

War Picture That Will Make a Hit—Written By R. A. Walsh and With George Walsh as Hero It is a Most Satisfying Melodrama.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

TO THE mind of this reviewer, "The Pride of New York," recent five-reel Fox picture written by R. A. Walsh and with George Welsh in the hero's role, is the best war picture yet. It is a melodrama and has, like most of its kind, a most improbable denouement, but the old truth in the background of the story carries a tremendous punch, because it is the truth. The big thing in the picture is that these scenes and impressions of war conditions both in America and in France are pictured with artistic restraint. The eye sees them on the screen, the mind knows them to be true and the heart is made to feel the depth of them. There is a kind of whole-hearted democracy in the picture that will play no little part in making it a decided popular hit. It is a picture that will be welcome in any theater or church and will get a stirring ovation in the camps of soldiers.

"The Pride of New York" is Young Kelly, son of a builder, who is drafted, and the part is played by George Walsh, so everyone will know what kind of a lad the pride of New York is. The contrasting character is a son of wealth, played by William Bailey. The girl, taken by Regina Quinn, finds out the yellow streak in this son of wealth and becomes a Red Cross nurse, goes to France, is captured by a German prince and has to be rescued by Kelly, who has been promoted to be aviation captain. But this rough outline shows the picture on its weakest side; there are some other things. R. A. Walsh, the director, knows and shows how Uncle Sam sizes up a good soldier with no social backing and also a rich boob with a captain's bars on—for a while. He shows how the American people are taking the war; how the Allied soldiers are taking it in France and how the Boches are taking it. He has some fine battle scenes and has a picture that is taking audiences with a rush.

Five-reel Pathe Play, Produced by Astra Film Corporation, Features Mrs. Castle in Bright Crook Drama.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

"CONVICT 993" makes a strong bid for first honors in the entertaining series of Pathe Plays, with Irene Castle in the leading roles. It is a smoothly developed, fascinating detective story, with an unexpected denouement that gives observers a delightful thrill. Mrs. Castle also rises to her personal opportunities better in this number than in any of the others, achieving almost an emotional appeal at times. Her development along this line is one thing that contributes greatly to the surprise at the close.

The story opens with the prison experience of Roslyn Ayre, the girl portrayed by Mrs. Castle. She has none of the earmarks of a woman crook, but the prison garb speaks for itself. She has the cell adjoining that of a real girl criminal, Neva Stokes. Roslyn declares her innocence to Neva, who accepts the story without believing it, thinking Roslyn is merely trying to cover up her past mistakes by throwing the blame onto others.

A thrill runs through the prison one morning, when the cell bars to Roslyn's place of confinement are found cut, and it becomes known that "Convict 993" has escaped. Neva, left behind, hates her former acquaintance for her good luck.

The next scenes occur in the fine home in which Roslyn has established herself. She wears elaborate and expensive gowns and has formed the acquaintance of Rodney Travers, with whom she is in love. Neva Stokes, after her release from prison, trails Roslyn to her home and begins a system of blackmail. She threatens to expose the escaped criminal unless Roslyn helps Neva and her crook friends in making a big haul at the reception she is about to give.

Roslyn reluctantly consents, after meeting Dan Mallory, the head of the gang. Crooks are substituted for her retinue of servants, the guests arrive for the party and their gems are stolen in the night. Mallory makes a sudden agreement with Roslyn to double cross his gang and escape to America. The gang members get an inkling of this and hold up Mallory and Roslyn. At this crucial moment Roslyn plays her trump card, which reveals the fact that she has been from the first a member of the government secret service.

Harry Benham appears as Travers, Helene Chadwick as Neva, Warner Oland as Dan Mallory and J. H. Gilmore as Bob Ainslee. The story was written by Wallace Clifton and directed by Wm. Parke.

"Thirty Days."

THE theme of "Thirty Days" is not new; in fact, we have seen many comedies based on the same subject; yet this effort on the part of Al Christie and his company of players succeeds in pleasing. The comedy is clean and inoffensive, and has some original touches in the business.

The story centers around a young man's love of his club, and the sad results of his failure to keep his promise to his wife when she decides to take a vacation. To avoid the discomfort of staying away from the club, according to promise, he determines to bring the club to him, and so we find him with his chums in the midst of a game of cards on the approach of his wife's aunt and uncle from out of town. A scarlet fever placard placed outside the door not only saves them from unwelcome visitors but succeeds in getting them quarantined and eventually lands them in jail for a term of thirty days.

"Nearly a Papa."

An amusing situation arises in the development of "Nearly a Papa." A young man during his vacation receives a telegram in which a misspelled word causes considerable trouble in the household. In place of being duly informed that his wife's sister and baby are arriving he is led to believe that "mister baby has arrived." Upon reaching home, after purchasing a number of toys on the way, he is greeted by an empty house in which he finds what he believes to be twins. The discovery that the children belong to two different parties leaves the young hopeful in a much-disappointed mood. Quite entertaining.

"Unknown 274"

June Caprice as Friendless Orphanage Heroine Leads in Melodrama with Satisfying Sentimentality—Plot Is Well Made—Will Be Liked.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE story of "Unknown 274," a Fox five-reel picture in which June Caprice plays a poor raggedy orphan, beaten by the rough matron of the asylum, has freshness of interest and works up to an exciting struggle. It won many exclamations of approval among a fair-sized audience on Broadway, at the Nemo theater. It is the kind of picture that many people like extremely well.

There is a lack of breadth to June Caprice's acting at present, and she is so often cast as an orphan or other forlorn youngster who, by her kindliness and lovable personality, wins her way to good fortune, that it does take something from the value of this picture in the minds of a few who feel that they have seen some of it before. Even with this disadvantage the picture furnished good entertainment to the reviewer on account of the story and on account of the work of many of the characters. There were several in the audience near the reviewer who seemed to give their warmest approval to the work of the pretty leading woman.

June Caprice enters the picture as slavey at a country orphanage. We have seen her in the city, a motherless baby cared for by her father, a kindly musician. He is hurt and loses his memory of the past. The baby is brought to the country by a neighbor and later taken to the orphanage, where she is registered as "Unknown 274." In the next scene she has grown to be June Caprice, ill-treated drudge who makes friends of the children. A man and woman, New York crooks, come to the village and persuade her to run away and be their daughter. They intend to make use of her. She has her father's violin, and back in the city, they take her to the old musician to be taught. He has recovered, but fails to recognize her as his baby. Later the rich man she is set to decoy sees that something is wrong and truly falls in love with June. The crook, whom she calls father, gets jealous and says he wants her for himself. Here begins a struggle. The woman, the crook's partner, calls on the rich man for help, and the door is broken down and the crook knocked sick. The girl escapes to her old friend the musician with the violin and is recognized.

"Jealousy" Is Now "Madame Jealousy."

The title for Pauline Frederick's next Paramount release, following "Mrs. Dane's Defense" has been enlarged. Hitherto, known as "Jealousy," it has achieved the dignity of having "Madame" added to it and is now known as "Madame Jealousy."

Eve Unsell, prolific scenario writer, made the scenario for "Madame Jealousy" from the script furnished by George V. Hobart, author of the allegory "Experience," who wrote the story especially for Paramount. "Madame Jealousy" is announced as something new in pictures and is said to be one of the most elaborate productions in which Miss Frederick has appeared.

"THE HIGH SIGN" is a five-reel story of the romantic type, written by J. Grubb Alexander and Waldemar Young and directed by Elmer Clifton. It falls into that category of imaginative tales represented in fiction by Stevenson's "New Arabian Nights" and Anthony Hope's "Zenda" stories.

It has zest and go from the beginning and leads up to a lively and satisfying climax. Herbert Rawlinson makes an interesting figure as the young college man who palms himself off as a prince on the natives of Burgonia, or at least thinks he has has done so in his vivid dream. Mr. Rawlinson is easily one of the best looking men playing in pictures and works with a pleasant freedom from self-consciousness. "Brownie," or Agnes, Vernon, as the girl of mystery, makes an equally attractive feminine lead. Hayward Mack appears as the real Prince Arno and Edward Brown, after playing innumerable minor parts in former offerings, dons the royal purple and plays His Majesty, the King. He gives some good comedy touches to the part.

As the story runs, Donald Bruce is expelled from college for participating in the activities of a secret society. His room-mate, a prince of Burgonia, has been summoned home after years of study in America. The prince is in love with a supposed American girl and induces Donald to go to Burgonia in his stead. Donald also loves a girl named Hulda Maroff. During the narrative it develops that the prince's favorite is in reality a princess, and Hulda is her first lady in waiting.

Donald never, in fact, makes the trip to Burgonia, but he dreams that he does so, and this dream is worked up in an elaborate way, showing his arrival there, his reception by the citizens and the reigning monarch, the wedding ceremony and subsequent revolution. There are times when the action contains an amusing touch of burlesque, but it is toned down so that the dramatic moments get over with considerable strength.

The settings and photography are excellent in this number and do much to make it appealing. Others in the cast are Nellie Allen, Marc Fenton, Frank MacQuarrie and Albert MacQuarrie.

"The Struggle Everlasting"

Florence Reed Gives Human Portrayal of Vampire Role in Seven-Part Morality Photoplay Written by Edwin Milton Royle—Produced by Harry Rapf.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

HOGARTH'S "The Rake's Progress" and Balzac's "Splendors and Miseries of Courtesans" are the prototypes of Edwin Milton Royle's morality photoplay, "The Struggle Everlasting," produced by Harry Rapf, with Florence Reed as a symbolic character described as Body. The revival of the old morality "Everyman," about fifteen years ago, stimulated interest in this form of the drama and led to the writing of the two stage successes, "Everywoman" and "Experience." This method of pointing a moral, by reducing the passions to an elemental condition and then having them personified by the men and women of the cast, appealed to many minds, in spite of the fact that none of the metropolitan critics found even ordinary merit in either of the two plays. The screen also has essayed to forward the cause of virtue by the use of allegory, and its best efforts have met with a ready response.

"The Struggle Everlasting" was written for the spoken stage, and the screen version is the work of Bennet Musson. James Kirkwood directed the production. Its theme is illicit love. Body, Mind and Soul are the three principal characters. Other persons in the play are Champion Pugilist, Banker, Musician, Actor, Worldly Wise, Wife, Frail Sister, and Slimy Thing. Shorn of its cloak of allegory, the story is a modern "Harlot's Progress." It follows the career of a beautiful young woman from the time she first gives herself to a college student to her death, and shows how she becomes the companion of four other men as her fancy or her cupidity dictates. The story is sordid, and is unrelieved by any touch of comedy, except when the prize fighter loses the championship and is finally reduced to tending bar. However, the author has taken his subject very seriously, and displays a respectable degree of merit in preparing it for the spectator. The subtitles are in the same vein and will assist in inculcating the picture's moral lesson. At the end, the author has Body listen to the good counsel of Soul; and she is fatally wounded while trying to rescue a white slave from her owner. There is every reason to suppose that "The Struggle Everlasting" will be acceptable to a large number of screen patrons.

The novel feature in connection with the Royle photoplay is the performance of Florence Reed as Body. Here is an impersonation of the vampire-woman that is human, and not a thing of unlovely body contortions, exaggerated facial makeup and bizarre gowns. The handling of the theme has permitted the actress to wear an unconventional costume as the mountain girl, but her indication of the nature of the woman she depicts, her method of conveying the thoughts and desires that animate her mind, is from within, and has the natural expression of life itself. Her revelation of the moods of Body seem entirely unconscious, and through all the changes that experience gives she retains a womanliness that wins conviction for her sincerity when she turns her back on her old life. The method of her redemption is rather abrupt, but Florence Reed makes no unnecessary parade of this spiritual change. Her action is the usual one of falling on her knees, but the look on her face is that of a true Magadlene. The art of this actress is as fine as anything the screen has yet revealed.

The production of "The Struggle Everlasting" contains several other impersonations of uncommon merit. Chief among them is the acting of Mind by Milton Sills. Then follow E. J. Ratcliffe as Banker, Irving Cummings as Soul, Wellington Plater as Champion Pugilist, Fred C. Jones as Musician, and Edwin N. Hoyt as Worldly Wise.

A large share of the credit for the production goes to James Kirkwood for the skill shown in every department of his work. Both the exterior and interior scenes are thoroughly artistic, and the direction is never at fault. Lawrence Williams was the photographer.

A KNOWLEDGE of drama is always useful when fashioning a story either for the stage or the screen. The screen version of "Just a Woman," produced by S. & S. Photoplays and directed by Julius Steger, retains the strength of theme of the original and, in the main, tells the story with equal power. At times too deliberate action is permitted to interfere with the developmen of events; but the sincerity of the story and the fineness of its principal character outweigh every other consideration. Where so much merit is to be found, a few minor defects of direction need not be allowed to count against the picture.

The theme of "Just a Woman" is human and sympathetic.

The wife of a mill worker, who fought to save her husband from the drink habit, makes a more determined fight when prosperity brings another woman into the man's life and he consents to have his wife trapped in a compromising position that he may divorce her and marry again. The attitude of Anna, Jim Ward's wife, is explained in one speech when she meets her rival: "You're only part of Jim's spree; when it's over he'll come back to his family." The faithful woman does not think of her own happiness until the divorce is granted and the judge tells her that she must give her boy to his father. Her rebellion takes an entirely unexpected form. Standing up in the courtroom she denies Ward is his father, and defies the law to take the child from her. Anna's struggle is rewarded at last. Jim comes back to her, just as she had hoped and fought for, and the closing scenes show the father and mother proudly looking on as their son goes marching past on his way "over there." In its present form the finish is too long, but the director will quite likely apply the proper remedy.

The atmosphere of the story is correct throughout. Many of the exteriors were taken in Pittsburgh, and the drab existence of the workers in the mills is reproduced with striking fidelity. The acting is highly commendable. Charlotte Walker portrays the spirit of Anna Ward with understanding and skill. A habit of lifting her chin too high prevents her from always screening to the best advantage, but greater experience will overcome this fault. Lee Baker is satisfactory to a marked degree as Jim Ward, and more than average good impersonations are contributed by Edwin Stanley, Forrest Robertson, Cornish Beck, Henry Carvel, Charles Kraus, Paul Perez, and Anna Williams.

KITTY GORDON, the English actress whose husband is the Hon. Captain H. H. Beresford and who is known as one of the best-dressed women on the stage or the screen, is the star of "Diamonds and Pearls," a five-part World photoplay, directed by George Archainbaud. The story has for its heroine a woman who marries for money and narrowly escapes wrecking her life in consequence. The daughter of a proud but impoverished Southern colonel, Violetta D'Arcy, throws over Jack Harrington because she believes he is poor and marries Robert Van Ellstrom, a man of wealth, who can purchase the jewels she craves.

Although given a generous allowance, Violetta loses so heavily at bridge that she is forced to secretly pawn her sister-in-law's necklace. Being still pressed for money, she accepts a check from young Harrington's father, in return for an introduction into society for himself and wife. Later on he attempts to take advantage of the transaction, but Violetta's husband appears on the scene and the two men come to blows. Young Harrington, who is known to Violetta as Jack Rand, also becomes involved. His father tries to shoot Van Ellstrom, wounds his own son and, thinking he has killed him, puts a bullet through his own heart. Fearing the consequences of her folly Violetta is afraid to face her husband, but he goes to her and forgives her, when he realizes that she is repentant and has learned to love him. The material in this picture is of good dramatic quality but it could have been more expertly put together. However, it gives Kitty Gordon a fair acting role and allows her to wear a number of stunning frocks. She meets the requirements of the part with considerable success and looks it remarkably well for a woman who is the mother of a sixteen-year-old daughter. The supporting company is made up of such well-known actors as Milton Sills, who plays Van Ellstrom; Curtis Cooksey, the Jack Harrington, and George MacQuarrie, as Jack's father.

story's situations—sometimes not strongly convincing—to veil them in plausibility. The plot has unbroken continuity and the action carries speedily to incidents giving sustained excitement that truly grips the spectator. The picture's shortcoming is that it is too shallow to touch the deeper human emotions. There are times when most of us prefer to have our entertainment neglect to delve too earnestly into our feelings.

The villain of the plot is one of those teachers of erotic Eastern philosophies, enacted by William Conklin. He has a bad reputation, is now giving a course of lectures and Dorothy is one of his ardent admirers. Her paid companion, taken by Dorcas Mathews, has loved and been wronged by this teacher. Dorothy has been writing fervent letters to him couched in the stock terms of his free love teachings. He wants her to travel with him without marriage, but Dorcas spoils the plan by showing him up to Dorothy, who marries one of her other lovers. A year later the villain tries to get her back by threats. She comes to his house to get the letters, he tries to force her and she strikes him down with an Oriental sword. She leaves without the letters and the police find him dead. Next night—and this is the big scene—she goes back for them. Her husband and the police come to make a search and she is in the room. The action here is full of suspense.

IN THE five-part Empire drama appearing for release on the Mutual program Dec. 24, Olive Tell lives up to her former record of doing things well. The picture entitled "Her Sister" was directed by John B. O'Brien in an adaptation of the Charles Frohman play of the same name, and contains situations of real dramatic excellence. In the cast with Olive Tell are Eileen Dennes, David Powell, Anita Rothe, Mrs. Clarat-Bracy, Harriet Thompson, Martha Dean, Eileen Errol, Madeline Meridith, Charles Edwards, Sidney Blair, Herbert Evans and Eleanor Seybolt.

The story which treats of the fortunes of two sisters who have been forced by circumstances to grasp the best opportunity that presented itself for earning a living. The elder sister enters the establishment of a fortune teller acting in the capacity of Isis, and at the same time strives to restrain her more wayward sister from certain associations of a harmful character. A pretty love story of which the elder sister is one of the central figures leads to a dramatic climax in which she attempts to sacrifice her own happiness to shield her sister. The final working out of the story lifts the finger of suspicion from both sisters and succeeds in placing the hand of justice on the right party.

The production is artistic and appealing, and while some may not like the fortune telling element, its presence detracts little if any from the charm of the picture.

It is a chase upstairs and downstairs, canter and trot, till she gets the bunch outside where she ropes the lot at once and drags them off to the jail.

Cross-eyed Ben has a streak of yellow in him. There's a cry for help and Polly makes a dash over the prairie to save a drowning child after a death-defying leap over the canyon. When she comes back, the bad bunch is out of the coop and she finds Ben in a room with Gonda. Ben didn't know of Gonda's presence—he was afraid of her. Polly's "mother told her" that she could expect just that so she flounces over to the minister's. There are two adjoining rooms at the mission and she and the minister dress before the lighted shades and those outside have another scandal started.

It is a film to count on as a laugh maker. It's a speedy picture in which thrill is followed by burlesque comic situation and the whole is delightful entertainment.

BASQUES with muttonleg sleeves and full skirts that literally swept the earth are worn by Mary Anderson in "When Men Are Tempted," a five-part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, written by Frederick Upham Adams and directed by William Wolbert. The author has not shown any unusual ability in selecting his theme or in piecing it together. His hero is a poor young chap named John Burt, who is in love with Jessie Gordon, and has for a rival Arthur Morris, a wealthy young blackguard. Morris tries to compromise Jessie, and is given a thrashing by Burt. The young millionaire manages to draw a revolver, and there is another struggle over the weapon, which is discharged, Morris receiving the bullet.

Fearing that he has killed Morris, young Burt leaves town in a great hurry, goes West, locates a mine, becomes a rich man and sends a friend of his back East to find out what has become of the man he shot and the girl he left behind him. Morris has recovered and has Jessie's father in his power through tricking him in a railroad deal. His chances of forcing the girl to marry him look promising, but Burt puts in an appearance and turns the financial tables on Morris, and Jessie and John have the pleasure of signing their names to a marriage license. An unexplained point is why Burt never tried to communicate with Jessie until after he struck it rich. He knew he could trust her. Ineffectual is the word to apply to this picture. It is intelligently acted by Mary Anderson, Alfred Whitman, R. Bradbury, Otto Lederer and S. E. Jennings.

"Mother"

Six-Part Photoplay from Eden Phillpotts' Novel of the English Moors Contains Rare Character Studies, Scenes of Rugged Beauty and the Truthful Acting of Elizabeth Risdon—McClure Picture.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

GEORGE LOANE TUCKER has done the screen a service by making a moving picture version of Eden Phillpotts' fine novel of the English moors, "The Mother of the Man." Under the title of "Mother," with Elizabeth Risdon in the leading role, the story has been produced on its native heath and the rugged beauty of the region and the quaint character types transferred to the screen. The skill shown in the acting and the directing has brought the happiest results, the only opening for criticism being found in the endeavor to retain all the characters and incidents of the novel. A little carefuly study will suggest the necessary cuts.

Mother love is the theme of Phillpotts' work. The novelist has treated his subject with the sincerity, depth of feling and perfect understanding of the people among whom he has laid his story that marks all his writings. Not since R. D. Blackmore has any novelist possessed the same familiarity with, and love of, the "Lorna Doone" country. And the story he tells will grip the heart of every true man and woman.

All that Abraham Lincoln said he owed to his mother is shown in the love and devotion of Avisa Pomeroy for her son Ives. The young chap is wild, easily offended and prone to evil. Only the keen insight of a mother saves him. Knowing her days are numbered, Avisa hides her own pain and bends every energy to setting Ives' feet in the right path. When he loses the girl he thinks is the proper mate for him and takes to drinking and poaching his mother gives him over to the law, well knowing that to shield him would only be to strengthen Ives in his yielding to further temptation. After Ives gets out of jail he vows he will never return home, but his mother lays his supper and places a light in the window every night, and one morning she is rewarded by finding him shaving himself before the kitchen mirror. The hardest trial comes when the woman who jilted Ives decides to leave her husband and tries to persuade Ives to go with her. Avisa has need of all her mother wit and determination to prevent this. She succeeds in keeping Ives away from Jill Bolt by showing the young fellow that Jill does not really love him. This is Avisa's last act for her boy. Her heart can no longer stand the strain. She dies in Ives' arms. After her death he turns to the woman that Avisa had hoped would be her son's wife.

To realize the character of Avisa Pomeroy in all its beauty of devotion, kindly humor and shrewd insight into life is an achievement of the highest merit. Elizabeth Risdon accomplishes this with a perfection that is the more remarkable from the fact that the woman she portrays is nearly twice her own age. Her makeup is a triumph, and the touches of character she imparts to Avisa make her a living and lovable reality. A list of the English actors who created the other parts has not reached this country, but mention must be made of the faultless work of the Ives of the cast. With but few exceptions, the remaining characters smack most convincingly of the soil.

then sent to a niece in the West and helps to make a young English slacker fall in love with her, and of sending the young fellow back home to do his duty. The girl goes to her future father-in-law's home to await her lover's return.

In the meantime the father of Andre Leriche, who is the mayor of a town near the firing line, is sure that his boy is doing his duty wherever he is. Shortly after, the town is taken by the Germans and the mayor is condemned to be shot, but a detachment of British soldiers, led by the young Englishman, drives out the invaders and save the French designer's father and the town. Thus it happens that the gown created by Andre plays an important and patriotic service.

Lynn F. Reynolds has directed "The Gown of Destiny" with excellent results. There are several effective battle scenes, and the atmosphere of the French town is correctly maintained. The picture is also expertly acted. Herrera Tejedde fits the character of Andre at all points, and Alma Rubens and Allan Sears make an interesting pair of lovers. The other members of the cast are Lillian West, J. Barney Sherry, Pietro Buzzi, Frederick Vroom, Dorothy Marshall, Kathleen Emerson and Bliss Chevalier.

Katherine Kavanaugh is the author of "Betty Takes a Hand," a five-part Triangle that won the second prize in the late contest. The scenario is the work of Jack Cunningham, and Jack Dillon directed the production. Olive Thomas is the featured player. The opening is cleverly conceived. Two miners who are partners in a claim separate, one buying the other out. Peter Marshall, the man who parted with his half of the mine, never becomes rich and always believes that he was cheated in the deal. James Bartlett, the other partner, amasses a fortune. Later in life Marshall's daughter and Bartlett's son meet and fall in love. The girl's father will not hear to the match, and the manner in which his objections are overcome forms the greater part of the action. Most of the scenes in which Olive Thomas appears are played in a comedy vein, some of them approaching farce. As Betty Marshall she is supposed to have been left in charge of a fine house belonging to the widow of the man who engineered the deal.

Knowing that her father is in need of money Betty hits upon the idea used in "All the Comforts of Home," and hangs out a sign, "Room and Board." The house is soon filled with boarders, who are glad to pay fancy prices for such fine accommodations. When the mistress of the house and her daughter return from a trip to Panama they walk in on a tableful of strange people, and drive them into the street. Young Bartlett is one of the boarders, and greatly disappoints the young lady of the house by marrying Betty.

The picture is amusing, and Olive Thomas makes up in attractiveness what she lacks in acting ability. Satisfactory impersonations are given by George Hernandez, Frederick Vroom, Charles Gunn, Bliss Chevalier, Mary Warren, Margaret Cullington, Graham Pette, June De Lisle and Anna Dodge.

"Sins of Ambition"

Seven-Part Ivan Photoplay Is Well Acted but Is Overburdened with Motives—Wilfred Lucas, Barbara Castleton and Leah Baird the Leading Players.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE author of "Sins of Ambition," a seven-part Ivan photoplay, has selected an excellent theme, but has weakened his story by the introduction of too many motives. The central idea is strong enough to carry the burden of the action, and the rapidity with which the story skips from one motive to another prevents any single situation getting its full value. Generosity is an estimable quality in many cases, but there is such a thing as giving the spectator too much plot for his peace of mind. Another condition that detracts from the strength of the story is in making the leading female character an abnormal type. A mother who tells her husband that he is not the father of her child and utters the lie for the purpose of furthering her ambition to resume her profession as an actress reaches a depth of depravity that puts her outside the pale of common humanity.

Laurette Maxwell, in "Sins of Ambition," is credited with being capable of such an unnatural act, and the spectator is asked to be in sympathy with her when she repents and her daughter and husband forgive her and take her back into their hearts. The thing that brings this about is the killing by her daughter of the man who persuaded Mrs. Maxwell to leave her husband. The young girl tries to save her mother by encouraging the attentions of the villain. The man becomes too insistent and Ruth Maxwell is forced to shoot him in defence of her honor. The mother's testimony frees Ruth.

Aside from the main motive there is a fight with an ice trust, of which the villain is the leading spirit. Another motive is created by having Andrew Maxwell devoted to the perfecting of a universal language which will prevent the recurrence of the present world war. And still another one is introduced by having the sister-in-law of the young man, who is in love with Ruth Maxwell, the president of a charitable organization called "The Outstretched Arms," the good woman being the leader in the fight against the ice trust.

"Sins of Ambition" belongs to the class of melodrama that aims to appeal strongly to the emotions and hold the spectator's interest by force of the variety and vigor of its "punch." From this point of view it will sustain the reputation of its producer. Except that Barbara Castleton overacts several of her dramatic scenes the individual efforts of the members of the cast are uniformly admirable. The leading characters are taken by Wilfred Lucas, Barbara Castleton, Leah Baird, James Morrison, Madaline Traverse, Anders Randolf and Edward Lawrence.

"Smashed in the Career"

Fox-Lehrman Comedy That Filled the House With Laughter —Filled With Many Astonishing Stunts.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE new Fox Lehrman comedy, "Smashed in the Career," has among other properties a swimming pool and a race course for autos and a tall tower for the judges to view the race. It has the expected Lehrman quality in its wealth of dashes, splashes, jumps and almost unthinkable combinations. It is so filled with the unexpected and the astonishing that it baffles any description at all. One noticeable thing will be the costumes of the maids attending the mistress of the house when she is taking her morning dip in the swimming pool—strong armed maids they are to keep the men servants in their place. Then we see the heroine come "fresh" from her dip to greet father. Her affectionate upper-cut of a love tap breaks the rocking chair. This is only a beginning. There is much of it that made the reviewer laugh. The house was laughing most of the time.

"Sadie Goes to Heaven"

Another Pleasing Story Filmed by Essanay, in Which Little Mary McAlister Sustains the Honors Delightfully.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

"SADIE Goes to Heaven," which has been adapted from a story that appeared in "Good Housekeeping" some time ago, is a most fitting vehicle for little Mary McAlister, and it is almost needless to state that little Mary invests Sadie with a glamor which captures the hearts of both old and young.

Sadie is stirred into thinking about heaven by a Sunday-school teacher, who chances to see the poorly dressed, dirty-faced child one day sitting on the bottom step of the flight leading up to her humble home, with her constant companion, George Washington Square, in her arms. This high-sounding name introduces Sadie's pet dog, also a creature of the slums, and just as dirty and untidy as Sadie herself.

Sadie's mother is a washerwoman, whose hard life is shown by her definition of heaven when Sadie asks her what it is like. "Heaven's a place where a woman don't have to sweat her soul out over the wash boiler," is her reply to Sadie's question.

How Sadie contrives to smuggle herself and her dog into the beautiful home of a very rich woman, and how she believes that this home is heaven itself is the chief burden of the story. But when the rich woman discovers the child and is horrified by the appearance of George Washington Square, she orders one of her servants to remove the "beast" at once. It is then that Sadie makes her choice against heaven in favor of her tousled pet in the words: "I wouldn't give up George Washington Square for all the heavens what ever was."

I was much disappointed by some of the interiors in the supposedly beautiful home which Sadie takes for heaven. The cast also is rather weak, outside the parts of Sadie and Hal Hawkins, the latter being very well impersonated by Rod La Rosque.

Release will be made December 24 through the George Kleine System.

"Madam Who"

General Film Company Releases Seven-Reel Paralta Production, Based on Story by Harold McGrath.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS seven-reel offering must be added to the list of successful Civil War stories. Adapted by Monte M. Katterjohn from a narrative by Harold McGrath, it contains plenty of plot and action, as might be expected. In addition, the number has been given very careful attention in the matter of settings, costuming, characterizations and the further details that make for an atmosphere in keeping with the times depicted.

Bessie Barriscale is cast in the leading role, that of a Southern girl whose father and two brothers have fallen in the great conflict. As the story begins, she determines to offer her life if necessary to further the Southern cause. She accepts a commission to act as a spy and goes to Washington to carry on this work. Miss Barriscale gives a convincing portrait of this sensitive, high-bred girl, who matches her wits with the men of the government secret service.

The plot takes on unusual interest from the moment the girl is captured by a body of Northern secret service men and given the choice of death or marriage to one of their number. The situation itself lacks probability, but is made to seem real. The girl finds herself married against her will to a man whose face is concealed behind a black mask. In the course of the story several of the men who know her story and the manner in which she became known as "Madam Who," are killed, including the unwelcome husband. But the girl herself finds happiness at the close of the tale with the young Northern officer with whom she has reluctantly fallen in love.

The final reel of the number pictures in a graphic way the evacuation and fall of Richmond. This shows the thrills and excitement of warfare as it was waged in the '60s, and even in contrast with modern methods it rises to great dramatic heights.

The cast is a big one, hundreds of men being employed in the final scenes. Edward Coxen and Howard Hickman have two of the leading male roles. A word should be said for the subtitles and their accompanying scenes, which have been carefully looked after.

"An American Widow"

Ethel Barrymore Featured in an Amusing Comedy Based on Kellett Chambers' Play of the Same Name.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

FOR the first time since she joined the Metro forces, Ethel Barrymore has been provided with a comedy role, in "An American Widow," adapted from Kellett Chambers' stage production of the same title. It is an amusing offering, affording her opportunities more in line with the parts portrayed in her stage successes and in contrast with her previous dramatic screen roles. The production is in five reels.

Elizabeth Carter, a wealthy widow, with everything she can wish except a title, prepares to marry the Earl of Dettsminster, when she is informed that, according to her late husband's will, his fortune will revert to a nephew unless her second husband is an American. She therefore hires a struggling playwright to marry her, with the understanding that there will be an immediate divorce so that she may then marry the Earl. After amusing complications and experiences, by the time the divorce is obtained the playwright, who has achieved success, discovers he really loves his wife and his affection is returned. The Earl elopes with an actress and it is discovered that the codicil has been forged by the unscrupulous nephew and his lawyer, who is also the executor of Elizabeth's estate.

As Elizabeth Carter, Ethel Barrymore is cast in a congenial role, which she handles admirably, and she is supported by a competent cast, including Irving Cummings as Mallory, the playwright; Dudley Hawley as the Earl, and Alfred Kappler as the nephew, together with Earnest Stallard, Arthur Lewis, Pearl Brown and Charles Dickson, the latter being particularly satisfactory as Elizabeth's old friend and adviser.

Frank Reicher directed the production, and the photography, settings and other details are in keeping with the Metro standard.

"The Blue Bird" a Photographic Marvel.

Filming Materlinck's "Blue Bird" is a stupendous undertaking, requiring every photographic trick ever conceived and the originating of many new ones.

It has remained for Artcraft to visualize these poetical visions, and under the direction of the great French artist and producer, Maurice Tourneur, the allegorical and symbolical epic is presented pictorially to civilization in a language understandable by all and depicted so clearly that a child can understand it.

"The Unmarried Look"

Metro-Drew Comedy in Which Mr. Henry's Unmarried Look Is Both His Good Fortune and His Misfortune—Fine in Comic Values.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE psychology of the Metro-Drew comedy "The Unmarried Look" is unquestionable. The production is one of the funniest of Drew comedies and will be enjoyed especially by the benedict class of the male population. Sydney Drew as Mr. Henry does some of his best work, and Mrs. Drew is sweet and more thoroughly feminine than ever in this number. One of the points of the picture that will be enjoyed is the presentation of various types of men with a "married look" as compared to Henry of the "unmarried look." But in spite of all the troubles (and successes) which the "unmarried look" causes Henry, he finally rises to the "very crown" of the hat business. For be it known Henry is a seller of Cupid hats, and is called upon to flaunt his graces before the feminine sex with whom he has become very popular, even to the near disruption of his domestic happiness.

One day when Mr. Henry left the house in an unusually buoyant spirit Mrs. Henry's suspicions caused her a very bad half hour, at the end of which she decides to call at the Cupid Hat Palace and investigate matters for herself. Here she finds hubby busy with a fair customer, and be it said to Henry's credit that his interest in the fair sex other than his wife is merely a matter of business.

The final straw falls when at home once again Mrs. Henry is obliged to take a phone message from one of these fair customers with whom hubby has made a lunch engagement, and is under the painful necessity of informing her that she is Mr. Henry's wife and not his mother. A tempest in a teapot ensues in the Henry household upon which the curtain is wisely drawn. We are then led over a skip of several years, when we find Henry a happy father. He has now climbed to the "very crown" of the hat business, as before stated, and has become an absolute nuisance by way of his pride in his possession of a son. For even should he forget to state that he has a wife, he never forgets to acclaim the fact that he is the possessor of a baby son

"Brown of Harvard"

Six-Part Essanay Screen Version of the Successful Stage Play, Arranged and Directed by Harry Beaumont, a Pleasing Picture—Distributed by George Kleine System.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

RIDA JOHNSON YOUNG and Gilbert P. Coleman, the authors of "Brown of Harvard," showed great insight by selecting a subject that appeals directly to youth. The life and energy of the college boys with which the play is filled and the sports and pranks in which they delight keep the action moving swiftly, and the young at heart, whether sixteen or sixty, will respond to the truthful pictures of college life. The serious motive of the story will not fare as well with many of the spectators. Moreover, most of them will receive it tolerantly for the sake of the amusing qualities possessed by the play.

The six-part screen version, arranged and directed by Harry Beaumont and produced by Essanay, is superior to the piece in its original form. The outdoor scenes and the college boat-race is much more effectively done in the picture, notwithstanding the fact that scenes from a real race are blended in with those made especially for the play.

The story of "Brown of Harvard" is of "The Cinderella Man" grade. The hero is one of those perfect mortals found only in fiction. Rich, handsome and generous to a fault, Brown goes through life achieving the impossible with that delightful ease which so captivates the feminine heart. Beloved by Evelyn Ames, a most attractive maiden, Brown nearly loses the girl through the conduct of her brother. The spoiled young cub secretly married the sister of one of the students who is working his way through college. The brother imagines that Brown has wronged his sister and there is all kinds of trouble for everybody until the final explanation. When the brother withdraws from the race at the last moment Brown takes his place as stroke and helps send the boat over the line a winner.

The acting of the cast is entirely satisfactory. Tom Moore as Tom Brown, Hazel Daly as Evelyn Ames, Warner Richmond as Claxton Madden, Kempton Greene as Wilton Ames and Sidney Ainsworth as Victor Colton have the more important roles.

Wyndham Standing with Petrova.

Announcement was made this week by the Petrova Picture Company that Wyndham Standing, the prominent English actor of stage and screen fame, had been added to the cast of the third Petrova production, now being picturized under the direction of Frank Crane. Mr. Standing comes of a long line of distinguished stage players.

The member of the Standing family who will be seen with Madame Petrova in "The Life Mask," which has been chosen as the third starring vehicle for the Polish artist, has appeared with all of the leading stage celebrities of the present day and has to his credit many notable characterizations in screen productions. Thomas Holding, who has played opposite Madame Petrova in the first two pictures bearing the mark of her own organization, will continue as leading man.

"The Girl by the Roadside"

Violet Mersereau Star of Five-Part Screen Version of Varick Vanardy's Novel, Has Congenial Role in Rather "Sugary" Photoplay.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

IN "The Girl by the Roadside," a five-part Bluebird made from a novel by Varick Vanardy, Violet Mersereau gives a performance that is always consistent with the character. As Judith Ralston she is called upon to portray a young girl who is found by the roadside by a young man in an auto just after her horse has thrown her and left her with a sprained ankle. Boone Pendleton, the rescuer, is on his way to his hunting lodge. Finding that he has run short of gasoline and a heavy storm is about to break, he takes Judith pig-a-back and tramps off to the cabin. They pass the night there, with due regard for the proprieties, and the next morning two officers come in search of the girl. Boone helps her to escape, but does not learn where she intends going until he accepts an invitation to visit a country home and finds Judith there.

Judith has a brother who earns his living dishonestly, his wife aiding him. The girl is ignorant of this. The three were stopping at a country hotel when she first meets Boone. A Secret Service man is after the Ralstons. He arrests the brother and his wife while Judith is at the lodge, but they escape and reach their home. The detective gets on their track, arrives at the country place and corners Budd Ralston down in the cellar, where he has a counterfeiting plant. Just as the Secret Service man goes to seize Budd that gentleman slips through a sliding panel and disappears. He has already promised Judith to reform, and Boone is on hand to comfort the girl and assure her that they will be married as soon as it can be arranged.

The mystery of Budd Ralston's misdeeds is not explained until the very end, and this helps to sustain the interest, but most of Judith's scenes are of the "sugary" sort and call for a youthful appearance, a kittenish manner and the ability to look natty in a cross-saddle riding costume. Violet Mersereau fills all these requirements and admirers of this school of fiction will find her performance very much to their liking. Allen Edwards is breezy and natural as Boone Pendleton, and Robert F. Hill is an excellent type of Secret Service man. Cecil Owen, Ann Andrews, Royal Byron, Kenneth Hall and Sam B. Minter complete the cast. The scenario was made by John C. Brownell and Theodore Marston directed the production.

Toto in "The Movie Dummy."

Following the announcement that Pathe would release the first Toto two-reel comedy on January 13, a statement this week contains the news that the picture in which the famous comedian will make his initial bow will be "The Movie Dummy," instead of "A One-Night Stand."

The change is made because quick service in shipping prints to exchanges can more easily be accomplished on "The Movie Dummy" than on the other "Laugh Festival" since, having been produced earlier, it was placed in work first. The second Toto comedy will be "The Junkman," the third "Fare Please," and the fourth, "A One-Night Stand."

In "The Movie Dummy" Toto is supported by a splendid cast. He himself plays the Dummy, "all wool and a yard wide." Kathleen O'Connor, an extremely attractive little blonde, is "Imogene, the ingenue, the three-sheet favorite," and Marie Mosquini is "Vera the Vamp—not so bad as she paints herself."

General Film Company.

MAKE YOUR EYES BEHAVE (Essanay).—A one-reel comedy, featuring Arthur Higson and Rose Burkhardt. This deals with a flirtatious husband and his very portly wife. The scenes occur in a park, on a bus and an automobile and wind up in the police station. This is quite amusing throughout and has some laughable knockabout scenes at the close.

AFTER THE MATINEE (Sparkle).—A knockabout number of the eccentric type, featuring Billy Ruge. He and his partner in the law business become mixed up with an actress and their wives discover them. The action is of the rough and tumble sort and contains some amusing moments.

THEIR MODEL CAREER (Jaxon).—Stull and Ruge appear in this number as two flirtatious individuals. The latter suddenly inherits his aunt's cloak and suit business, which they conduct in an amusing way. Some of the models make a rather breezy appearance, but there is nothing that will greatly offend.

HOW IT WORKED (Jaxon).—A comic number, featuring Burns and Stull as "Pokes" and "Jabs." The plot concerns a henpecked husband, whose wife returns home suddenly to find him having a good time. She breaks up the party in typical burlesque style. Not very new in plot, but quite amusing in spots.

SMASHING THE PLOT (Sparkle).—A comic number, featuring Billy Ruge. He plays the part of an Italian organ grinder who becomes involved in a bomb-planting plot. The girl saves a bridge from destruction and her lover's life. This makes a fair subject of the knockabout type.

MADAM WHO (Paralta-General Film).—A strong seven-reel number, adapted by Monte M. Katterjohn from a story by Harold McGrath. The plot is laid in the fourth year of the Civil War and leads up to the evacuation and fall of Richmond. The number is well made in every respect, the settings and atmosphere are good and the characterizations strong and convincing. The cast is an elaborate one and the plot and action are excellent. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Artcraft Pictures Corporation.

THE NARROW TRAIL (Artcraft).—A thrilling western subject, featuring William S. Hart. It is reviewed in last week's issue.

THE DEVIL'S STONE, Dec. 17.—An intense romance of strong situations, produced with exceptional skill and featuring Miss Geraldine Farrar at her best in the leading role.

Christie Film Company.

THIRTY DAYS (Christie).—Not a new subject, but entertainingly presented. A husband, fond of his club, fails to keep his promise to his wife not to visit it during the period of her vacation. He gets into trouble which eventually lands him in jail by disobeying orders and pretending that his household is a victim of scarlet fever, while he and his pals transfer club life to his home. A full review will be found elsewhere.

NEARLY A PAPA (Christie).—An amusing production, featuring Jay Belasco and Betty Compson. The situation of the story arises out of a mistake in a telegram which leads a young husband to believe that he is a father. A full review of the picture will be found elsewhere.

Fox Film Corporation.

THE PRIDE OF NEW YORK, Dec. 9.—A Walsh patriotic five-reel melodrama that will be a decided hit, especially with the soldiers. The audience at the Fox Academy of Music in New York showed clearly that it was appreciated. It is noticed at more length on another page of this issue.

SMASHED IN THE CAREER (Fox-Lehrman Comedy), Dec. 9.—Plenty of dash and full of unexpected comic situations mixed with wit, burlesque, comic characterization, and irresponsibility. It made a large audience bellow. For a longer notice see elsewhere in this issue.

UNKNOWN 274, Dec. 16.—A June Caprice picture in five reels. The plot works up to an exciting struggle between the villain and the girl when her simplicity has led her into danger. June has a typical role as slavy in an orphanage and wins out by her heart qualities. There is excellent heart interest in it, and it is well played and directed. See longer review elsewhere in this issue.

General Enterprises, Inc.

MOTHER (McClure).—Six-part screen version of Eden Phillpotts' novel of English rural life, George Lorne Tucker has directed the picture with skill and Elizabeth Risdon plays the title role with remarkable feeling and effect. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Greater Vitagraph.

WHEN MEN ARE TEMPTED, Dec. 24.—This Blue Ribbon Feature was written by Frederick Upham Adams and Mary Anderson is a member of the cast. The story is not very convincing. It is given a longer review on another page of this issue.

Ivan Productions, Inc.

SINS OF AMBITION (Ivan).—Barbara Castleton, Leah Baird and Wilfred Lucas are the leading players in this seven-part photoplay which shows the unnatural length to which one woman goes when inspired by a mistaken ambition. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

George Kleine System.

SADIE GOES TO HEAVEN (Essanay), Dec. 24.—This is a very pleasing and amusing story in which Little Mary McAlister will please everyone by her remarkable realisms in the leading role. A detailed review is given on another page, this issue.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

BLUE JEANS (Rolfe Metro) Dec. 10.—The seven-part screen version of the celebrated old melodrama with its famous sawmill scene retains the life and vigor of the original. Viola Dana is excellent as June, and the entire cast and production are highly creditable. A longer review was printed in last week's issue.

WAGES NO OBJECT (Drew), Dec. 10.—An original subject has been found for this amusing Drew comedy which appears to be slightly behind some of the others in comedy values. The necessity of engaging a cook for the Minor household is brought about by the temporary desertion of Mandy for her home in old Kentucky. An answer to an advertisement in which it is stated that a home rather than high wages is the object of the party, brings a neat, refined, capable person, whose middle name is "gloom." After a week of tear-steeped service, Mrs. McGuire, as she is named, is palmed off on a western friend.

AN AMERICAN WIDOW, Dec. 17.—This five-reel picture is based on Kellett Chambers' play of same title. It is an interesting comedy, the first in which Ethel Barrymore has appeared, and deals with the heroine's attempt to frustrate her husband's will and marry an English earl. She finally falls in love with a struggling playwright, who has aided her by becoming her second husband and then divorcing her. Reviewed elsewhere in this issue.

THE UNMARRIED LOOK (Drew), Dec. 24.—One of the very best of Metro-Drew comedies. Mr. Henry of the unmarried look, in this number is seen selling Cupid hats, and is successful, by means of his marvellous ability, to read human nature. He has learned, among other things, that frequently the amount of a sale depends largely on the amount of champaigne the seller is able to spill. Mrs. Henry, becoming unduly suspicious of Mr. Henry's associations with his fair customers, decides to look into things, and in doing so "nearly spills the beans." A full review will be found elsewhere.

Mutual Film Corporation.

JERRY'S DOUBLE CROSS (Cub), Dec. 20.—The young lady has again appeared in the Jerry comedies, but the story in this number is an improvement on the last in which this attractive little actress appeared. In this instance Jerry's future father-in-law keeps an antique store in which a sale of fake articles marked with a double cross is to be held. Jerry buys a vase and, in breaking it on the head of a clerk, who has offended him, the nice sum of ten thousand dollars is discovered, which he promptly pockets, at the same time walking off with the girl on whose account he had all but committed suicide.

THE LOST EXPRESS NO. 14 (Signal), Dec. 19.—One of the most interesting of the episodes of this serial is the fourteenth, entitled, "Unmasked." In this episode Helen, in spite of a feeling that the Gaston Pitts of the present is not the same as in the past, marries him. A great deal of suspense is created by the preparations for the wedding and the rescue of the real Gaston Pitts, brother of Theodore, better known in the character of "Harelip," running neck and neck. The fact that the marriage takes place before news of Gaston's rescue can reach the Thurston household makes an exciting circumstance.

THE LOST EXPRESS NO. 15 (Signal), Dec. 26.—This is the final episode of this serial and is entitled, "The Return of the Lost Express." In it the Baron is shot while trying to get away with some loot, and tells the whereabouts of the Lost Express. Theodore Pitts, in a struggle with his brother, is mortally injured. It closes in rather an unsatisfactory manner, in spite of the fact that it holds the interest of the spectator by thrilling events as in former episodes.

HER SISTER (Empire), Dec. 24.—An attractive five-part adaptation of the stage play of the same name, featuring Olive Tell. The production directed by John B. O'Brien, is artistic in quality, and Olive Tell's interpretation of the principal role will be enjoyed. A full review will be found elsewhere.

MUTUAL WEEKLY NO. 156 (Gaumont), Dec. 23.—Excerpts from a letter from a boy in France with the Red Cross Ambulance Corps forms an interesting part of this number of the Weekly. Scenes in Chicago showing preparations for the soldiers' Christmas, and also the arrival of a Christmas tree ship are interesting. Other items treat of the happenings in Europe and at the American camps.

MARY'S BOOMERANG (Strand), Dec. 25.—Billie Rhodes is charming in this amusing comedy in which she gets in wrong trying to prove to a friend that no man, even her friend's husband, is above being tempted by a pretty girl. She writes the husband, with his wife's sanction, to meet her at a certain hotel. The husband sends a friend in his place, who, upon treating the young lady to supper, is forced to send for the man for whom the invitation was intended to settle the bill. Funny complications occur which are finally smoothed down when misunderstandings are explained.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

NAN OF MUSIC MOUNTAIN (Lasky), Dec. 17.—A remarkable cast surrounds Wally Reid in this fine story of the early west. An extended review will be found in last week's issue.

LOVE LETTER, Dec. 24.—A five-reel picture with Dorothy Dalton in a part that gives her a chance to do some commendable acting. She is ably supported by cast and director, and the photography is exceptionally fine. The story has good continuity and the big scene is very tense. There is a longer notice on another page of this issue.

TAMING TARGET CENTER (Mack Sennet Comedy), Dec. 30.—A two-reel Mack Sennett comedy with some rich burlesque turns and one or two hair-raising stunts like a marvelous leap on horseback over a canyon and a chase on horseback through a hotel, upstairs and down. For longer notice see review on another page of this issue.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

THE FLOWER OF DEATH (Pathe), Dec. 30.—Episode No. 6 of "The Hidden Hand." New attempts are made upon Doris and Jack Ramsey in this number. No sooner have they escaped from the church than Dr. Scarley pours poison into a night blooming cereus. He intends to kill Jack with this, but the servant places it in Doris' room, and the girl is almost overcome by the poison as a result. Later the "Hidden Hand" prepares a bed of boiling lime, over which Doris is suspended as the instalment closes. The number contains much action of an exciting, melodramatic sort.

CONVICT 993 (Astra-Pathe Play), Jan. 6.—A strong five-reel crook story, written by Wallace Clifton and directed by William Parks. This features Irene Castle as Roslyn Ayre, and opens with her serving a prison term. She escapes from prison and is afterward blackmailed by a girl she met while behind the bars. She joins the latter's gang of crooks and this leads to their undoing. The plot is more or less familiar, but is handled skillfully and has a genuine surprise at the close. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

S. & S. Film Corporation.

JUST A WOMAN (S. & S. Film Corp.), December.—Eight-reel screen version of Eugene Walter's stage play, directed by Julius Steger, the story has a strong heart interest and is well acted by a competent cast headed by Charlotte Walker. It is given a longer review on another page of this issue.

ANIMATED WEEKLY NO. 3 (Universal), Dec. 19.—Ice boating on Shrewsbury River, N. J.; Red Cross activities, women acting as stage hands, scenes from stricken Halifax, labor for blind French soldiers, and cartoons by Hy Mayer are features of this number.

CURRENT EVENTS NO. 32 (Universal), Dec. 22.—Recruiting in Australia makes a strong feature of this number; also the scenes taken in Halifax after the explosion. Other features are women letter carriers in New York City, drilling field artillery at Yaphank and newspaper cartoons from prominent dailies.

THE HIGH SIGN (Universal Feature), Dec. 31.—A five-reel number, written by J. Grubb Alexander and Waldemar Young and directed by Elmer Clifton. Herbert Rawlinson and "Brownie" Vernon play the leads, supported by Edward Brown, Nellie Allen, Marc Fenton and others. The story concerns a college youth who dreams that he goes to the kingdom of Burgonia, where he passes himself off as a prince and marries a princess from an adjoining state. The action is lively and reaches a pleasing climax, and the settings and photography are attractive. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

BUSTED HEARTS AND BUTTERMILK (Nestor), Dec. 31.—A two-reel subject, based on a play by Lincoln J. Carter, featuring Adele Farrington, Hayward Mack and others. This is a broad burlesque on the vampire type of melodrama. The characterization of the vampire is well done, but the costume may be subject to some criticism. The burlesque touches are very funny, showing the way the husband is lured from his wife and becomes a buttermilk fiend. The wife struggles with poverty by playing solitaire. The closing scenes occur in the den of the vampire and her followers. An entertaining subject, though broad in tone.

CARNIVALS AND CANNIBALS (L-KO), Jan. 2.—A two-reel comic, featuring Mert Sterling, Al Forbes and Russ Powell. The number contains much amusing nonsense, picturing the adventures of a young country couple at a county fair. They visit the various amusement concessions and then fall asleep in a canoe and dream they have been captured by a band of cannibals. The humor consists of little tricks and mishaps. Children will undoubtedly like this number.

KIDNAPPED (Universal Special), Jan. 5.—Episode No. 6 of "The Mystery Ship." Important changes in the plot occur in this number, some of them a little too casually to keep a good degree of interest and suspense. Betty and Gaston, after their long enmity, unite forces and return to Los Angeles, in pursuit of Harry, who has fled with the treasure. The latter has joined interests with "The Spider" and his gang. The action is entertaining, but considerably lacking in dramatic effect in contrast with that of previous numbers.

THE RED ACE (Episode No. 12, "Overboard"—Two Parts—Universal Special), Jan. 5.—This continues the efforts of Virginia and Winthrop to overtake the fleeing spies. They succeed, by a daring trick, in boarding the vessel on which the spies are coming to the United States. The situation creates much suspense and winds up with a hand-to-hand struggle. The interest is very strong as this serial continues.

World Pictures.

DIAMONDS AND PEARLS (World).—Kitty Gordon and Milton Sills have the leading parts in this five-reel photoplay which shows a woman's attempt to win happiness by sacrificing everything for wealth and position. It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

Biograph Studio Available for Producers

Many Large Productions Have Been Made There During the Past Year—Room for Ten Companies.

THE big Biograph studio, at 807 East 175th street, The Bronx, as well as its adjoining laboratories, is at the service of producers who are looking about for motion picture manufacturing facilities. The stages, all equipped with overhead and side lights, together with a large assortment of scenery, etc., are available by the week or longer. Thomas A. Persons, who has had large experience in studio control, especially with the Selig company, is manager. Mr. Persons says there is ample room for ten companies to work comfortably.

The completion of Harry Rapf's production, "The Struggle Everlasting," starring Florence Reed and directed by James Kirkwood, is the sixth production staged there by Harry Rapf during the past year. His former productions were "The Argyle Case," "The Silent Master," "The Mad Lover," "The Forced Honeymoon," all featuring Robert Warwick, and "To-Day," with Florence Reed.

Aside from directing some of the Harry Rapf productions, Ralph Ince has produced "The Co-respondent" and "The Battle Cry," with Elaine Hammerstein.

Mme. Petrova is at present busy with her Petrova pictures and has already completed two productions at this studio. Clara Kimball Young produced three subjects during the past year. Others who have made pictures in the studio during the past year are "Fatty" Arbuckle and Harry Weber.

Mark M. Dintenfass is now producing Ambassador Gerard's "My Four Years in Germany," under the direction of William Nigh.

"HIS FISHY FOOTSTEPS" (General Film).

The second of the Finn & Haddie Comedies, "His Fishy Footsteps," is released this week by General Film Company. This concludes the fifth series of Jaxon comedies, which will be followed immediately by a series of six Finn & Haddie comedies. Billy Ruge, the inimitable comedian who has been starring in the Sparkle Comedies, appears this week in "Double Cross," a rollicking screen comedy with some unusually entertaining situations.

Silverman Explains Further Details

Presents New Twist to Current Efficiency and Economic Combinations Aimed Primarily to Advance Interests of Exhibitors in His Territory.

MAYER SILVERMAN is hard at work perfecting the initial details of his proposed organization, which is to combine his exchange, The Liberty Film Renting Service, Pittsburgh, Pa., with a circuit of sixty or more motion picture theaters located within the normal booking radius of his exchange, into a joint buying and distributing corporation, whereby the securing and distributing of feature state rights productions may be conducted not only with efficiency, economy and time-saving, but also at an actual profit to the mutual stockholders that subscribe to his views and take stock in the new enterprise.

Mr. Silverman points out that he does not desire to own the controlling stock for himself but is willing to retain only about 15 per cent. thereof, and aims at a constant buying fund of about $15,000 with which to make purchases of productions measuring up to the accustomed standard, and provide for the maintenance of such basic expenses as would be part and parcel of the exchange, minus all its present heavy and avoidable encumbrances. No one exhibitor is to be allowed more than 3 per cent. of the stock, which again will prevent any one man appropriating the voting power and control. In many other ways, too, Mr. Silverman has aimed to protect the stockholders.

Meetings are being called by Mr. Silverman, in which all interested exhibitors have been asked to participate.

Insomuch as the movement presents a new twist, the Moving Picture World, without attempting to deviate from its truly neutral course in all matters of this kind, herewith prints for the attention of its readers the following explanatory letter in which the Pittsburgh state rights exchangeman sets forth his ideas in brief form:

"We desire to co-operate with exhibitors in our territory for the purchase of state rights productions, regular weekly releases, comedies and so on, in order to eliminate the excessive overhead expenses of traveling salesmen, excess advertising, disparity of ideas regarding the booking of productions, and to cut the excessive time limit required in booking pictures independently.

"We have been in the moving picture business for ten years—always independent. It is almost necessary for us to add an excessive overhead in order to meet the expense as above described. We will eliminate this expense by combining approximately ninety-day bookings, using two subjects among our own exhibitors, who will be taxed with the entire cost of the production plus overhead expenses. Our additional profit will be derived from exhibitors outside of our combination who book and run our subjects.

"We will incorporate only to the value of our stock. We are not figuring on any exorbitant ideas, only on a pure, simple, business-like basis, by booking up the subjects we have open in our territory. We will be enabled to give back to the exhibitor in dividends the sums derived from the bookings, almost a sufficient amount to pay for his initial investment. Accrued dividends will be available to our exhibitors every two or three months.

"We will not publish the names of member exhibitors in connection with this idea until we have at least twenty checks on hand, for the reason that should we not be enabled to go through with this proposition we will return their checks and endeavor to do business as heretofore.

"I am informed that there are already several of these circuits in operation and have knowledge of several being promulgated in various sections of the country. In our advance notices sent out to exhibitors in this territory you will note that we called attention to these various ideas of producers and manufacturers, but in not one of these do they figure in the exhibitor. It is true I am backing a great deal of my reputation as a fair-minded exchange man to induce a number of exhibitors to join with us and am agreeably surprised at the attitude taken by the majority of theater-men whom I have approached.

"The old methods of doing business followed out by certain feature exchanges who figure on volume and end up with a loss must necessarily be eliminated. The release of certain subjects on a state rights basis as high-priced productions which are generally without great profit to the exhibitor, will, of a necessity, be eliminated. The exhibitor must receive state rights productions at a reasonable figure to allow him a living profit, and I do not think that there is any method that has so far been advanced that can equal my proposition."

JOE LEE OFF ON SWING.

The Joseph F. Lee Buying Agency is on the tongue of many of the independent exchangemen throughout the country this week and next, as it also was last week, for Joe Lee, founder of the movement and its head, is off on the swing around the circuit, as promised in an interview with the representative of the Moving Picture World, chronicled on page 1650 of our December 15 issue. Already Mr. Lee has been in Chicago, Kansas City and other distributing centers in that belt, and is due, or perhaps has already arrived, on the coast, where he will doubtless spend the holidays.

Mr. Lee is an energetic worker and one who does not fail to line up any proposition that he may espouse, so that the trade may well look forward to a full statement of his accomplishments upon his return to New York, which is expected before the middle of January. As it is, the Joseph F. Lee Buying Agency is already organized completely, and the trip of its founder is really in the nature of a last moment consultation before embarking upon its career. In addition to the details contained in the issue above referred to, our readers are hereby advised that much data on this proposition is to be found on page 1710 of our September 15 edition.

EARLY G. E. PLANS FOR 1918.

Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin, moving spirits of General Enterprises, Inc., announced this week that their plans for the new year embraced continued activity in the field of state rights, together with a widening of their present scope, so as to embrace the production of special features during the year 1918. Herbert Lubin, who negotiated the contract between Madame Olga Petrova and Superpictures, Inc., has closed arrangements whereby William Christy Cabanne, author and producer of "The Slacker" and "Draft 258," will head Cabanne Superpictures, Inc., in the production plans of which Mr. Lubin will play a prominent part. The formation of this new organization is now in course of process and work on production will start early in January.

The next big film spectacle to be exploited by General Enterprises, Inc., as a successor to "The Warrior" will be seven reels in length and will offer as a star one of the leading female screen players at present high in public favor. In addition to the plans outlined above, the McClure production, "Mother," is at present being successfully exploited by Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin, and they have recently acquired the rights to "The Liar," a six-part society melodrama, starring the former Universal favorite, Jane Gail, and directed by William Haddock.

The present offices of General Enterprises, Inc., at 1476 Broadway, will be enlarged so as to include a projection room.

"Mickey" a Comedy Plus

Trade Showing After the Yuletide Season—Mack Sennett Furnishes Interesting News Regarding Production.

THE Western Import Co., who control the world rights to Mabel Normand in "Mickey," gave out the following interview with Mack Sennett relative to the reasons why "Mickey" was so costly.

"Wastage in the production of motion pictures is a favored topic among writers. They scold the industry very severely for flinging money away. Pioneers are always wasteful. In the old buffalo days on the plains, hunters cut ont the tongues and rump steaks and abandoned the rest of the meat to the wolves. Just so the pioneers in any mining district take only the richest of the ore. It is the men who come afterward who sift the gold from the ore dumps."

"I have no doubt that in time the production of motion pictures will be as carefully systematized as a packing house where they sell every part of the pig but the 'squeal.' At present we are progressing too rapidly in big things to occupy ourselves with stuffing up little leaks."

"At the same time the wastage is less than appears to the superficial observer. Compare the production of "Mickey," the big feature picture which we are about to release, with a big theatrical productions. Before a big theatrical show sees Broadway it has been rehearsed for weeks. By the time it appears in New York the chances are that not more than one line out of ten remains of the original manuscript. We can't put a motion picture out on a trial run. When it leaves our hands its mistakes are irrevocable. What appears to be an appalling wastage of film is our substitute for the tour of trial performances in the small towns. When we hit upon a comedy idea we go over it in council and pick it to pieces. We weigh it, we taste it, we do everything but take the filling out of its teeth; finally we decide to tear it to pieces again at rehearsal. Finally it goes to the camera. At this point occurs the apparent wholesale wastage. We take each situation from half a dozen angles. If we get two or three 'hunches' we take them all. When we finished 'Mickey,' we came to the projection room with enough film to make five or six big pictures. On an average we cut out four or five feet of film for every foot that we made. In fact, the cutting of 'Mickey' could be compared with the Chinese Ling Chee (the death of a thousand cuts). Some of the scenes from 'Mickey' have been made twenty times. This was not because the first time was not good. We were determined that no matter how much time it took or how much film was used up, 'Mickey' must be as near perfection as human effort could make it. 'Mickey,' the adorable little girl around whom this story was woven, is as real to me as though she were a living person. If I let 'Mickey' go out upon the road to seek her fortune, knowing there was one more thing I could have done for her, I would feel as though I had starved a child. Robert Louis Stevenson said that good writing consists not in writing, but in rewriting. Our way of rewriting 'Mickey' was to take a lot of film and use a little of it."

Incidentally, this Mabel Normand seven-part comedy is slated for its initial trade showing in New York after the holiday season.

STERLING HEAD IN CHICAGO.

Arthur F. Beck, president and general manager of the Sterling Pictures Corporation, spent the greater part of last week in Chicago on a deal of a state right nature. "Observation of conditions" is the way sales and exchange manager H. R. Ebenstein explains Beck's trip, though there is reason to expect an announcement of greater details upon his return.

McGOVERN WITH W. H. PRODUCTIONS.

Elmer J. McGovern has joined the ranks of W. H. Productions Company in the capacity of production editor. He is supervising the completion of the program of twenty-eight two-reel Keystone Comedies. These are considered the pick of the entire Keystone output, and in them are featured the world's famous comedy stars—Charlie Chaplin, Mack Sennett, Sydney Chaplin, Fatty Arbuckle, Mabel Normand, Max Swain, Chester Conklin, Ford Sterling and Charles Murray.

W. H. Productions Company, as evidence of its policy to help the independent exchangeman and the exhibitor, created a stir, indeed, among the trade last week by announcing the offer to dispose of this series of comedies at the rate of $80 per reel, with the war tax prepaid.

Mr. McGovern, who will supervise the editing of these productions, has had considerable experience in the industry. He has occupied the following executive positions: assistant to Adam Kessel of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, general manager for Frank Powell Productions, Inc., and studio and casting director for the Vitagraph Company. He is also author of a number of successful photoplays.

Carl P. Lothrop is also a new addition to the staff of W. H. Productions Company. He was born in Braintree, Mass.; was educated in the public schools of Braintree, in Thayer Academy, College of Liberal Arts of Boston University, Boston University Law School, of which he graduated with a degree of LL.B., of 1910. He has practiced law in Boston for the past eight years, and has been connected with big business for the past ten years, having been retained in a special advisory capacity relative to Massachusetts income tax law and the United States income tax law.

OLDKNOW RETURNS TO FAMILIAR POST.

With the addition of William L. Russell, prominent Pittsburgher, to the executive forces of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, Frank Hall, president and general manager of the concern, has completed his organization, as stated elsewhere in this issue.

Mr. Russell henceforward will make his headquarters in the York York offices of the booking corporation, in the Times Building, and will serve as treasurer in place of William Oldknow, the prominent southern film distributor, who has been acting in that capacity pending the selection of his successor.

Now Mr. Oldknow will transfer his activities again to the South, where he will continue to serve as general manager of the Consolidated Film and Supply Company. He also will have complete supervision over the distribution of U. S. subjects in the territory below the Mason-Dixon line, for which task his long experience in the southern field eminently equips him.

By the acquisition of William L. Russel the U. S. will greatly increase the efficiency of its sales forces, for Mr. Russell bears a high reputation in the Middle West as an organizer and developer of large mercantile interests. His familiarity with conditions beyond the Alleghanies also fits him for the important position he will undertake.

All this comes about after Mr. Oldknow had announced his resignation as executive of his southern interests and had received an elaborately engraved testimonial from thirty-nine members of his organization. The return of the popular exchangeman to his familiar haunts is indeed a logical move on the part of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation.

ABRAMSON ASSEMBLING CAST FOR "MORAL SUICIDE."

Ivan Abramson, in his new post as president and director exclusive of the Graphic Film Corporation, is at present devoting his full time to the selection of the cast that is to interpret his gripping, original, seven-reel production, "Moral Suicide." Extreme care is being exercised by Mr. Abramson in this matter as he is particularly anxious that his first creation for the Graphic company should be as perfect as possible not only as to fidelity of types for the various parts, but particularly in that each performer selected should possess the full quota of unmistakable histronic talent that the respective roles call for. The Graphic head favored the writer with a skeletonized reading of the scenario, and he must confess being very much impressed with the power and vibrancy of the theme. He agrees that the director cannot be too careful in the selection of the talent. The names of some now under consideration give full evidence that Mr. Abramson intends to mark his independent re-entry to the producing field with an all-star cast. Announcements as to engagements should be forthcoming before the holidays have passed.

HOFFMAN ENGAGES ANOTHER GAINSBORG.

Eduardo Gainsborg, who has been engaged by M. H. Hoffman to take charge of the San Francisco Foursquare Pictures exchange, left last week for his destination. Mr. Gainsborg is one of the recent entrants into the film industry, but his progress has been sufficiently rapid to win his appointment to one of the most important posts in the Foursquare Pictures organization. Mr. Gainsborg is a Columbia College graduate, a man of keen discernment, and his methods will be those of the experienced man of affairs, who applies sane business methods to the distribution of motion pictures.

Frank Hall Organization Complete

The United States Exhibitors' Booking Corporation a Tribute to His Capacity.

ONLY three months ago and in that period expanded into a distributing organization covering the world, with three special attractions already on the market and others soon due, the success of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation is a tribute to the energy and business acumen of Frank G. Hall, its organizer.

In record time he completed his sales forces to cover the domestic field with special representatives stationed in independent exchanges in every large city in the United States, after which he contracted with the firm of Robertson Cole, of New York and London, one of the largest importing concerns in the world, to distribute the U. S. output in the foreign territory.

Frank G. Hall.

Today the U. S. is in direct communication with exhibitors all over the globe, and has set so high a standard in its first group of pictures, embracing "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," "Those Who Pay," and "The Belgian," that it has established itself in the front rank of the independent distributing concerns.

Mr. Hall's success as a state rights operator in New Jersey impelled him to expand his efforts. A year ago he organized the Civilization Film Corporation in the commonwealth across the Hudson, through which he marketed such productions as "Civilization," "Joan the Woman," "Enlighten Thy Daughter," "The Garden of Allah," "Beware of Strangers," "On Trial," "The Bar Sinister," and others.

The growing demand among exhibitors of his State for special productions to show at intervals in their theaters for the purpose of stimulating business, impressed Mr. Hall with the need for a concern that specialized in such productions. The outcome was the formulation of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation. At present it is the intention of Mr. Hall and his associates in the booking corporation to distribute about twelve such producions a year.

HUGHES VISITS MANHATTAN.

M. C. Hughes, district manager of the Metro Film Service, Ltd., with headquarters in Montreal, Canada, spent three days last week in New York. He was in conference with the home office of Foursquare Pictures, whose Canadian exchanges—operated in conjunction with those of the Metro Film Service—are being cared for by J. J. Unger, general manager of that organization.

"Foursquare Pictures may regard with satisfaction the prospective business which we are lining up in Canada," said Mr. Hughes. "Its features are of a quality which the Canadian exhibitors and public desire, and we expect a satisfactory volume of business for the coming year."

FRANK SENG SENDS CHRISTMAS MESSENGER.

The trade undoubtedly paid more than passing attention to the Parentage Messenger Christmas edition, which was last week circulated from the offices of Frank J. Seng, exploiter of "Parentage," the production with a purpose, produced by Hobart Henley. The eight-page holiday booklet is the work of Victor B. Johnson, general advertising manager of the Seng enterprises, and only goes to reinforce the reputation for able work that this gentleman enjoys.

LILLIAN WALKER SIGNS WITH CREST.

Lillian Walker, star of "The Grain of Dust," now being sold on the State Rights basis, has just signed a contract, by arrangement with Lester Park, with Carl E. Carlton, president of the Crest pictures, to make four more productions. Miss Walker will begin work as soon as the first of the four scenarios is determined upon.

GARFIELD REPORTS SUCCESS.

Herman J. Garfield has taken occasion to advise the Moving Picture World that he is meeting with success in his tour throughout Ohio, Indiana, and Kentucky, in behalf of the "Submarine Eye," which is controlled in that territory by the Submarine Film Corporation, of which he is general manager.

SPECIAL SALES-DRIVE ON "MOTHER."

A vigorous sales-drive has been inaugurated for the George Loane Tucker production, "Mother," by the departure from New York, this week, of Herbert Lubin, Harry G. Kosch and M. R. Fink, of General Enterprises, Inc., which firm controls the territorial distribution for the six part state rights offering.

Mr. Lubin left New York Monday afternoon, December 17, for Chicago and further across the continent to California. The G. E. executive has established headquarters at the Sherman House in the windy city and arrangements for a special showing have been made there on December 19.

Elisabeth Risdon, star of "Mother," at present playing a leading role in "Misalliance," played Chicago last week, and Mr. Lubin took advantage of the coincidence to have the young star appear at the showing.

Harry Kosch also left the city Monday, bound for Boston, Mass., where he will preside at several screenings of the George Loane Tucker production and close contracts for the New England territory.

Mr. Fisk, at present in the South, reports widespread interest in the Tucker picture and is also taking care of the arrangements recently completed whereby "Mother" will be shown in the various penal institutions as an aid in the uplift work now being vigorously pushed by many prison authorities.

During the absence of Messrs. Lubin, Kosch and Fink from the offices of General Enterprises, Inc., Arthur H. Sawyer is looking after the interests of the pictures controlled by the firm, namely: "The Warrior," "Mother" and "The Liar."

"BIRTH OF DEMOCRACY" SPECTACULAR.

A pretentious form of advertising and publicity will be connected with the release of "Birth of Democracy," Franko-American's spectacular film, which has been bought for New York state and northern New Jersey by the Merit Film Corp.

A special showing of the film will be given the first week during January at the Theatre Francaise, New York, and some of the most prominent foreign government representatives, as well as American administration representatives, are being invited.

Large publicity in the dailies throughout the country is being arranged for, especially because of the fact that some of the foremost editors have expressed the desire to give this production enthusiastic support, considering the picture both from the patriotic as well as entertainment standpoint.

In the metropolitan district the Merit Film Corporation is making special arrangements between the exhibitor and the public school to give special morning and matinee performances in the respective districts where the schools are situated.

The picture, from its dramatic value should, of itself, make a wonderful success. Lydia Borelli, having the leading part, is so well known as a star of clearest lustre, that her appearance in the picture itself would guarantee the dramatic work.

The objection that several would raise of its being a foreign picture, in this case will be entirely discarded, because the picture of necessity must needs have been made in foreign countries, for the settings, the streets, the building, and all connected therewith, being chiefly Parisian, and of such suburbs as are around Paris, made it a matter of necessity to take the picture in France.

"THE STRANGER" NOT A PROSPECTOR.

The January first release of the King-Bee Films Corporation, starring Billy West, is to be called "The Stranger" instead of "The Prospector," as previously announced.

In this picture Billy West will be seen in some new stunts, according to President Burstein, that will prove a genuine novelty in comedies. This is the second comedy made by the King-Bee company in California, and is said to be as funny as "The Slave," which is claimed the best release made by this company since it started making two-reelers.

Billy West and his associates went into the Rockies to screen "The Stranger," and what Director Gillstrom made poor Billy do caused him to take "osteopathic" treatments for ten days.

ELLMAN MANAGER OF WOLFBERG HEADQUARTERS.

J. L. Ellman, for the past few months publicity director for the Harris P. Wolfberg Attractions, has been appointed manager of the home office, Pittsburgh.

He succeeds Howard Stahler, who is in Maryland opening up that territory with "The Crisis." The Wolfberg Attractions now also distribute "The Mad Lover," "To-Day," "Persuasive Peggy" and "The Deemster."

"THE SLAVE" WITHOUT SUB-TITLES.

The King-Bee Films Corporation announces that their first picture made in California, entitled "The Slave," is so funny and the story so easy to follow that sub-titles might hurt the action, and they will release this latest Billy West King-Bee comedy without any sub-titles whatsoever.

It has been conceded by all authorities that sub-titles are of great importance in the presenting of a film story, and here is one instance where the action and the humor are said to dove-tail so perfectly that sub-titles are of no help.

"Triumph of Venus" Soon

Seven-Part Production Bearing Classical Greek Theme Will Introduce Betty Lee to Stardom.

EDWIN BOWER HESSER, general manager of the Victory Film Manufacturing Company, is busy engaged with the presentation of "The Triumph of Venus," starring Betty Lee. The story itself deals with Grecian gods and goddesses, fair nymphs and natural and super-natural beings. Captain Hesser, in addition to producing this spectacular seven-reel photo drama, is its director and author.

Although this story was written several years ago, Hesser did not undertake to produce it until he found a girl suitable to portray the character of Venus, and in the selection of Betty Lee he claims to have discovered a modern Venus de Milo. Supporting Miss Lee in this photo-drama are William Sherwood, Phyllis Beveridge, Hassan Mussalli, Grace Hamel and Baby Bonnie Marie Katz, who plays the part of Cupid. The company of nymphs consists of a bevy of pretty girls. All are expert swimmers and perfect specimens of womanhood.

Edwin Bower Hesser.

This is Captain Hesser's second production of the year, the first being "For the Freedom of the World," which was purchased and exploited by Goldwyn.

Mr. Hesser, who is but twenty-four years of age, has had a varied career and has traveled the world over. When a mere boy he held positions as dramatic critic on several dailies in New Jersey. When wireless was the craze he became an associate editor of the Aerogram. This post gave him an opportunity to write stories of travel as he went from place to place. With the coming of the motion picture Captain Hesser entered the silent drama industry. At one time he was the press representative of the Kinemacolor Company of America and manager of the Kinemacolor theater in New York. From publicity work Hesser entered the scenario writing field. He next learned the motion picture camera and became an assistant director. Soon he entered the field for himself. Realizing the value of publicity in the motion picture field he soon organized the Hesser Publicity Bureau, which handled the road tours of the Boston Opera Company and the Royal Cwent Chorus from Wales.

With the sinking of the Lusitania Captain Hesser dropped his commercial work and entered the Canadian army. Rejected at first because of physical unfitness, he remained in Canada, and owing to his ability to campaign and organize was commissioned lieutenant in the 212th Overseas Batalion. His ability was soon recognized and he was made a captain and appointed Brigade Director of Recruiting and Publicity for the American Legion. This strenuous campaign again brought on ill health, which prevented his engaging in active duty in the present conflict, and brought him back to civilian life. While in Canada the Hesser Bureau was devoted chiefly to recruiting campaigns, but Metro pictures were also introduced in that territory in a six-months' campaign mapped out by the Captain, who further announces that the next production of the Victory Film Manufacturing Company, following "The Triumph of Venus," will be a patriotic super-feature entitled "For the Glory of the Stars and Stripes."

FARNHAM REPORTS PROGRESS.

The alliance of independent manufacturers, namely, the Ivan, Frohman Amusement, High-Class, Triumph and Ogden companies, who through their spokesman, Joseph H. Farnham, addressed the joint exhibitors gathering in Washington on December 12, as recorded in our last issue on pages 1919 and 1967, with a manufacturer-exhibitor joint co-operative booking proposition, has been in frequent session with the heads of the two exhibitors' bodies, namely with Lee Ochs and Louis Blumenthal of the M. P. E. L. of A., and Charles Pettijohn and Frank Rembusch of the A. E. A., during the past week. No decisions have as yet been announced but should be forthcoming very shortly.

TOLMAS SUCCEEDS GILMAN.

B. R. Tolmas, a prominent Pennsylvania film man, has joined the sales force of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation in that district, having charge of the marketing of U. S. subjects in Eastern Pennsylvania. He succeeds F. H. Gilman, who will assume charge of another territory for the same concern.

Sales of the Week

Herebelow a Compendium of the Selling Activities Recorded in the State Rights Market the Past Seven Days.

W. H. PRODUCTIONS COMPANY is maintaining its record in the consummation of sales on their product. During the past week the following deals have been made: To Tom Moore, Washington, the rights to the second and third Hart features, viz.: "The Bandit and the Preacher" and "The Hell Hound of Alaska" for Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia; To A. Dresner, Exhibitors' Film Exchange of Washington, the rights to Wm. S. Hart as "The Two-Gun Man," in "The Bargain," for Maryland, Delaware, District of Columbia and Virginia; To Masterpiece Film Attractions, Cleveland, Leon D. Netter, manager, the rights to Wm. S. Hart as "The Two-Gun Man" in "The Bargain," "The Bandit and the Preacher" and "The Hell Hound of Alaska," for the State of Ohio; To the Keystone Distributing Corporation of Philadelphia, the rights to William S. Hart as "The Two-Gun Man" in "The Bargain," "The Bandit and the Preacher" and "The Hell Hound of Alaska" for eastern Pennsylvania; To T. E. Larsen, Oklahoma City, the rights to Wm. S. Hart as "The Two-Gun Man" in "The Bargain" for Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

A. Weinberg and Maurice Fleckles, of the Renowned Pictures Corporation, announce the closing of the following deals in which the Harry Raver production, "The Public Defender," is the central figure: To Reginald Warde, exporter, 729 Seventh avenue, the rights for the world, exclusive of the United States and Canada, and to Hirman Abrams' exchange, the Boston Photoplay Company, Boston, for the six states of New England.

The Ivan Film Productions, Inc., announce the following state right sales this week: To the Liberty Film Renting Company, for western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, "Babbling Tongues" and "Sins of Ambition"; to the Eastern Feature Film Company, for New England States, "Human Clay" and "Sins of Ambition"; to the Merit Film Corporation, for New York State and northern New Jersey, "Human Clay" and "Sins of Ambition"; to the Electric Theater Supply Company, for eastern Pennsylvania, southern New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia, "Human Clay"; to Peerless Feature Film Exchange, for eastern Pennsylvania, southern New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia, "Sins of Ambition."

Almost simultaneous with the announcement that Renowned Pictures, Inc., had purchased the United States and Canadian rights to the Keenan-Edeson-Hanlon production, "The Public Defender," comes the report from Messrs. Weinberg and Fleckles that Walter E. Greene has secured the rights to the Raver picture for Greater New York and the entire state. Modern Feature Photoplays, Inc., Greene's New York exchange, of which Charles Streimer is manager, will release "The Public Defender" by January 1 if possible.

BRENON PRODUCTIONS START 1918 AUSPICIOUSLY.

By the first of the year three big special features which Herbert Brenon has made will be launched simultaneously throughout the country. "The Fall of the Romanoffs" opens in New York in January and will be exhibited throughout the state for the first three months of the year. During that time it will also start its drive throughout the United States.

"Empty Pockets" will be released during January at the most important houses on the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, followed by runs in every state in the Union.

"The Passing of the Third Floor Back," with Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, which has just been completed at the Brenon studios, will be shown for the first time publicly in New York next month, following which it will be generally released.

These three pictures are entirely different from each other. "The Fall of the Romanoffs" deals with history. It proves the theory of the value of the screen as a historian, making realities live before one's eyes. It is being state-righted. "Empty Pockets" is a melodrama, adapted for the screen from the novel by Rupert Hughes.

The third picture, "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," presents for the first time Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, the noted English actor, who came to America for the sole purpose of appearing in the screen in Jerome K. Jerome's drama.

"The Passing of the Third Floor Back" is a timely offering. It carries a noble message to mankind. It brings a ray of hope and kindliness into these troublous times.

COAST GETS "ZEP" SPECTACLE.

The Pacific Coast will have its first view of "The Zeppelin's Last Raid" at the Mack Sennet Theater, San Francisco, shortly after the first of the year. The fame of the new Ince production has spread rapidly beyond the Rockies, and special representative James Gausman, for the coast district of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, reports heavy bookings. The engagement at the popular San Francisco theater will be made the occasion of a festival.

The Sennett theater has obtained the first-run privilege to the Ince production. It is understood that following the showing in that house the picture will be released to all exhibitors on a wide-open booking policy.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

The "Sign Invisible" Sold

Edgar Lewis Disposes of His Latest Subject to the First National Circuit.

AFTER a busy and enjoyable summer's work up at Lake George during which time they made two features, Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Lewis, looking tanned and strong, are back in New York for the brief stay necessary to closing the sale of one of the negatives to The First National Exhibitors Circuit.

Mr. Lewis is justly proud of the fact that he is one of the few directors producing entirely on his own capital. "The Bar Sinister" was his first picture under his own banner, but he is well known to the trade as the man behind such releases as "The Barrier," "The Great Divide," "The Nigger" and many others as well known.

Edgar Lewis.

The production just sold to the "First National" is from an original script by Anthony P. Kelly entitled "The Sign Invisible" and is built on a big theme—the dominant and ever present powers of Providence and Nature. The locale of the story is the Canadian Northwest—land of towering mountains and human men and women. Into these surroundings wanders a heartsick, embittered man of the world who has lost faith in himself, renounced his Creator and learned to despise mankind. The story of his chastening is dramatically told by a big cast headed by Mitchell Lewis, who was Poleon in "The Barrier"; Victor Sutherland, Edward F. Roseman and Mabel Juline Scott will be recalled as having had prominent roles in the same play.

Speaking of his summer's experiences Mr. Lewis said: "We built our town at Black Point on the shores of Lake George, where we did "The Barrier." It was pioneering with a vengeance. We had to erect not only our sets but living quarters for all hands. We installed our own power plant, electric light and water system. Our post office, Fort Lewis, was officially recognized—we had telephones and everything—except politics and police."

Aaron Jones, of Chicago, and Robert Lieber, of Indianapolis, both came to New York to pass judgment on "The Sign Invisible" before the big deal was completed.

Mr. and Mrs. Lewis are shortly leaving for a rambling vacation trip through the South and West. A visit to the producer's birthplace in the "Show Me" State will break the journey which has California—which Mr. Lewis has never visited—as its objective.

FAMOUS PLAYERS TO MAKE "LA TOSCA."

After much time spent in negotiations and elaborate preparations for the production, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation announces it has secured "La Tosca," and that Pauline Frederick will appear in the role of Floria Tosca. It will be a Paramount picture and will be done on a most elaborate scale of excellence.

It would be difficult to find, in the whole range of drama and opera, a piece that has won more signal renown than "La Tosca." Written by Victorien Sardou upward of thirty years ago expressly for Sarah Bernhardt, it was in this play that she made one of the greatest successes of her career. It was recognized far and wide as a play of extraordinary power, inasmuch as it possessed dramatic intensity of the most compelling and enthralling character, and also because it reflected the high lights of human passions.

The possibilities of "La Tosca" as a screen drama can hardly be overestimated. It is as perfectly adapted to the films as if it had been written for them, because it is one thrill on top of another, emotional in the extreme, and with opportunities for every member of the cast.

Many "O. Henrys" for New Year

Four Directors Hard at Work East and West on Future General Film Releases.

ONE of its numerous series successes which General Film Company will continue to release during the new year will be the Broadway Star Features "O. Henry" stories now nearing the close of their first year. According to present plans, these features will be continued for some months to come, as there is still a large number of the "O. Henry" stories capable of being adapted for picturization. Ambitious plans are now being worked out for an extensive "O. Henry" program of entertainment for the great army of followers of the "O. Henry" pictures.

The enormous increase in the demand for these short length features has made it necessary to keep four directors and as many companies busy producing them. Three directors, Ashley Miller, Martin Justice and George Ridgewell, will continue to produce these stories in the New York studios, while on the west coast Director David Smith is at work on a new series of Western and Central American stories by the famous author. Some of the "O. Henry" stories to be released at an early date, according to present plans, are "The Clarion Call," "The Hiding of Black Bill," "The Fifth Wheel," "The Moment of Victory," a story of the Spanish-American war; "The Count and the Wedding Guest," "The Thing's the Play," "The Compliments of the Season" and "The Trimmed Lamp." Many others are being adapted for the screen and will be ready for production shortly.

General Film Company expects to begin the new year with a program of "O. Henry" stories which will excel the many popular successes released last year. No other series of short length features in many years has scored such a success as the "O. Henry" pictures, which are continually adding to their fame as box-office attractions.

JEWEL CARMEN IN NEW FOX PRODUCTION.

C. M. Franklin is now directing Miss Jewel Carmen in a new William Fox production with an Alaskan locale. Work was begun last week at Hollywood, Cal. Miss Carmen's first production as a star, "The Kingdom of Love," released December 23, was made under the direction of Frank Lloyd, who directed the William Farnum de luxe production, "Les Miserables," now being shown at the Lyric theater, New York.

Mr. Franklin, with his brother, S. A. Franklin, has been confined since his association with Fox principally to the direction of the Francis Carpenter-Virginia Lee Corbin and the Georgie Stone-Gertrude Messinger companies, making such productions as "Jack and the Beanstalk," "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," and pictures based on the story of "The Mikado" and "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves."

Francis Carpenter and Gertrude Messinger are included in the cast of the new Carmen production, as are Carmen De Ru and Lloyd Perl.

Goldwyn Completes First Year

Will Celebrate Opening of Second Twelvemonth by Release of "Thais"—Another Star Coming in Spring.

ALTHOUGH slightly more than twelve months old, Goldwyn is but one third that old in a releasing sense, with eight Goldwyn pictures thus far presented for public patronage. The first eight months of the company's history were devoted to organization and production. This time spent in advance preparation enabled Goldwyn to spring full-fledged into existence, with a number of completed productions on its shelves and completely eliminated rush work on productions to enable the makers to release well-rounded instead of hurriedly completed pictures.

Coincident with the attainment of its first birthday Goldwyn is releasing on December 30 throughout North America its greatest production and its most celebrated star—Mary Garden in "Thais" by Anatole France. This marks Mary Garden's first appearance on any screen and is the highest achievement technically and dramatically of the new company.

"Thais" represents a new note in production, and Miss Garden on the screen turns out to be the same sensational success that she had been on the operatic stages of two continents.

Goldwyn in its first year established close relations with a score or more of America's most popular and successful authors and playwrights, who did not stop when they had sold their novels or manuscripts to the organization, but followed their stories into actual production to help impart to them the solicitous care and many refinements which have been apparent in all of the pictures thus far released under the Goldwyn imprint.

Long before the completion of "Polly of the Circus" and its release in September, Goldwyn had organized the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation and dotted North America with its offices, through which are now handled not only the Goldwyn productions but special productions of other individuals or companies wishing to avail themselves of the selling capacities thus afforded.

Goldwyn Distributing Corporation today operates offices in nineteen American cities; Goldwyn Pictures, Ltd., of Canada, operates offices in six cities of the Dominion; Goldwyn representatives have opened offices for the organization in Australian cities, and at this moment England is witnessing the entry of the Goldwyn productions into the theaters of the United Kingdom.

In the year ahead Goldwyn will be an even more active producer than in the first year of its existence. In addition to its group of popular stars, embracing Mae Marsh, Madge Kennedy, Mabel Normand, Mary Garden and Jane Cowl, another star of world-wide fame will enter the Goldwyn studios for the first time early in 1918, and still other stars are to be announced before spring. An average of four companies will be kept at work constantly in the big Fort Lee plant which is under lease to the company.

In every sense Goldyn is satisfied with its first year's achievements and with the business returns therefrom. It is a well-adjusted, smoothly-organized mechanism capable of still bigger things and it foresees in the coming year a great improvement in business conditions and public patronage which will mean enlarged returns for exhibitors and itself.

STRONG SUPPORT FOR BEBAN IN "JULES."

Many of the best players in the Paramount roll have been assembled for the supporting cast of George Beban's starring vehicle, "Jules of the Strong Heart," which is to be released by Paramount, January 14. Jules Lemaire, the title role portrayed by Mr. Beban, the Lasky star who has scored tremendously in the past in delightful Italian character roles, is a good-natured, singing, happy-go-lucky French-Canadian trapper. Jules is seen in the atmosphere of a lumber camp in the big north woods, surrounded by an interesting group of rough, but stout-hearted, men of the timber lands.

Raymond Hatton appears as Ted Kendall, timekeeper of the camp, of a higher type than the lumberjacks, but inured to the life of the big woods. Charles Ogle is the boss of the camp, Tom Fransworth, a large, stalwart lumberman, competent, powerful and firm, but just. Guy Oliver plays the heavy character, Big Jim Burgess, a rough and overbearing lumberjack, crafty and cunning in his dealings with men, and caveman-like in his wooing of the boss' daughter. Ernest Joy is Jack Ligitt, a coarse, rough type of lumberman, leader of discord. Horace B. Carpenter appears in a more likable role, that of Reddy, a rough and uneducated lumberjack. Edward Martin is the Factor, head of the Hudson Bay trapping colony, a large man of rough, rural type; while James Neill appears as Sommerville, a trapper.

"THE CLARION CALL" RELEASED.

One of the snappiest and brightest of the "O. Henry" stories released in many weeks is "The Clarion Call," one of the current releases of General Film Company. This is a story of New York in which a detective and a crook engage in a game of wits which results in a surprising last-minute victory for the former.

Walter McGrail, Bernard Randall and Alice Terry are featured in "The Clarion Call," which is the first "O. Henry" picture in which the latter has appeared. "The Hiding of Black Bill," a dramatic story of a Western sheep rancher and a desperado, will follow "The Clarion Call."

Edison Will Release Flagg Pictures

Twelve "Social Satires" to Be Released as Edison Perfection Pictures.

JAMES MONTGOMERY FLAGG has thrown his combined genius into a series of what he calls twelve "social satires," twelve humorous stories involving twelve attractive American girls. The stories are being produced in the form of a single-reel motion pictures under Mr. Flagg's personal direction, at the Edison Studios, and are to be released separately under the general title, "Girls You Know."

Mr. Flagg's recognized ability to paint truly feminine girls is an assurance that the stars he has selected to enact the types in his series of satires will in each case be truly attractive.

Jas. Montgomery Flagg.

The first picture of the series, "The Screen Fan," will be ready for release on January 2, and will be followed on January 16 by "The Bride," and on January 30 by "The Superstitious Girl," with succeeding releases at two week intervals. Some of the remaining subjects to follow are, "The Man Eater," "The Blase Miss," "The Gold Digger," "The Regular Fellow" and five others. The humorous situations in the pictures are made even more laughable by the sub-titles which will be recognized as typical of Mr. Flagg's wit.

One of the interesting attractions in connection with the series are the posters reproduced from original water color drawings drawn from life by Mr. Flagg, of the twelve girls featured in the satires, and in addition to these drawings, the Goldberg Studios have made a group of highly effective photographic poses of the stars, prints from which will also be available for lobby display.

The series will be released as Edison-Perfection Pictures and distributed through the George Kleine System.

"HELL'S CRATER" (Universal).

W. B. Pearson's romantic narrative, dealing with events in "the days of '49," has been produced and directed by the author with Grace Cunard the star, and will be released as Universal's five-reel offering to exhibitors for the week starting Jan. 14. Director Pearson took his company as far into Death Valley as prudence warranted to make the scenes of desolation and barrenness that are necessary to many incidents in the story.

Scene from "Hell's Crater" (Universal).

Supporting the star, George McDaniel will play the leading role with Ray Hanford and Eileen Sedgwick prominently involved in the action. Dance hall and gambling scenes, methods employed in winning gold from the earth, and several sensational "fight" episodes are promised to put a "punch" into the melodrama that matches the nature of the offering.

Mutual's New Year's Schedule

Edna Goodrich Heads the List in "Her Second Husband"—Other Interesting Numbers.

EDNA GOODRICH, famous beauty and star of the speaking stage, is announced by the Mutual Film Corporation in the photodrama, "Her Second Husband," in the New Year's schedule of releases. The play, which was filmed under the direction of Dell Henderson, is said to afford Miss Goodrich the most sympathetic role in which she has yet appeared on the screen. The cordial reception accorded the other Goodrich productions, "Reputation," "Queen X," "A Daughter of Maryland" and "American Maid,'" augurs well for this latest picture. It is available December 21. In the supporting cast are such capable actors as William B. Davidson, Richard R. Neill and Miriam Folger.

Billie Rhodes appears January 1 in a hilarious Strand comedy, "Her Awful Fix," which will bring many a laugh from below the diaphragm. The story concerns Mary, who rejects the matrimonial advances of a young doctor to marry Tom. On her wedding day she becomes quarantined in her chum's house when the young doctor pronounces a case of prickly heat to be smallpox. The complications that ensue are exhilarating and amusing, but all turns out happily when an older doctor gives a true diagnosis.

The Mutual Weekly is replete with topics that are timely, covering incidents and events of international interest, keeping pace with the kaleidoscopic changes that are making world history.

As a sample of the timeliness and efficiency of the Weekly can be cited the fact that James Barr-O'Neill, Gaumont-Mutual cameraman, got into Halifax, N. S., and took 500 feet of film covering the worst aspects of the disaster, arriving in New York twenty-four hours ahead of any competitor.

Mr. O'Neill was five miles from the harbor front at the time of the explosion, at the house of a friend, the windows of the house being shattered and several occupants cut with glass. His camera was buried in the debris of his hotel, which was wrecked by the explosion, but he succeeded in putting it in working order and getting some thrilling pictures. This is an added feature of the Weekly released December 17. The release of December 31 will be just as up to date on current affairs.

GENERAL FILM RELEASES JUDGE BROWN STORY.

"Bud's Recruit," a timely patriotic story in which "Bud" wins a recruit for his country in the person of his older brother, a slacker, is the first and current release in the series of nineteen of "Judge Brown Stories" to be released by General Film Company. The novel manner in which the young patriot serves his country makes this two-reel subject a timely feature for the average exhibitor's program, and sets a fast pace for the succeeding subjects in the series. Advance inquiries received by General Film indicate that the "Judge Brown Stories" will be most popular because of the appeal they will have to women's organizations and individuals interested in obtaining clean pictures.

With the exception of the first release, the "Judge Brown Stories" are founded on real incidents noted by Judge Brown in his long fight on behalf of his great army of juvenile friends.

Judge Willis Brown with Some of His Charges.

They are clean, wholesome and highly entertaining stories in which the captivating humor of boy life plays a prominent part. The titles of the first five subjects announced to date indicate something of the nature of the treat in prospect for picture fans from six to sixty years of age. "The Chocolate of the Gang," the second subject, deals with the efforts of a little colored boy to gain admission to a boy's gang which had rejected him because of his color, and provides two reels crowded with infectious humor. "The Preacher's Son," "The Accusing Toe" and "Two Boys and Two Lies" are other subjects which have been completed and will be released shortly.

"A MODERN MUSKETEER" IS FINISHED.

The next release of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation will be Douglas Fairbanks in his latest rapid-fire photoplay, "A Modern Musketeer," written and staged by Allan Dwan and based on the story by E. P. Lyle, Jr., "D'Artagnan of Kansas." The last scene of this production was filmed at the Lasky studio in California recently. The prints will be made at the Famous Players-Lasky Eastern laboratory and distributed to the various Artcraft exchanges shortly.

In "A Modern Musketeer," Douglass Fairbanks holds up the mirror of the past and compares the chivalry of olden times to that of the present day. In this photoplay the acrobatic player interprets the role of Ned Thacker of Kansas, a young man who inherited the spirit of D'Artagnan through pre-natal influence, his mother having been an ardent reader of Dumas. The self-reliance of the modern woman as compared with her sister in past generations is strikingly shown, for in many cases the chivalry of the modern D'Artagnan is mistaken and his gallant attempts to assist ladies in distress lead to rebukes from the independent maidens who are on the alert to squelch flirtatious pests. Ned finally meets his fate in the person of Dorothy Morane, a tourist, played by Marjorie Daw, and in scenes of super-heroism done in dashing Fairbanks style saves the girl from a horrible fate and wins a bride.

"A Modern Musketeer" has been selected to open the new Rivoli theater by S. L. Rothapfel, its general release date being the last day of this month.

"WHISPERING CHORUS" SCENARIO COMPLETED.

The scenario for the initial photoplay of the Cecil B. DeMille-Artcraft series, "The Whispering Chorus," has just been completed by Jeanie Macpherson, and the production of this story will be commenced immediately. This scenario is an adaptation of a novel with the same title by Perley Poore Sheehan, which will be published simultaneously with the release of the picture, and Miss Macpherson expects it will prove her best work since she began writing for the silent drama.

Unusual care is being taken in handling every branch of the production of this film, from the writing of the scenario to the final assembling of the picture. Every detail affecting the staging of this photoplay will be given extra attention in an effort to make this a picture as near 100 per cent. perfect as is possible. In selecting the cast Director De Mille devoted the greatest time and care he has ever accorded such work, searching for the exact person for each character. Kathlyn Williams, Elliott Dexter and Raymond Hatton are among the prominent film artists already chosen for this picture play which will disclose the work of an all-star cast.

Work on the building of big sets for "The Whispering Chorus" at the Lasky studio in California is now well under way and an extra large staff of mechanics is busily engaged under the direction of experts. The producing organization for this picture expects to leave Hollywood for the Mississippi River regions shortly, where the exteriors will be staged.

"THE WIDOW'S MIGHT" (Paramount).

Florence Vidor, who came out of a Texan convent and flashed her beauty on the screen in a number of Paramount successes, is the leading woman opposite Julian Eltinge in his third Paramount release, "The Widow's Might." Others in the support of Mr. Eltinge are Gustav Von Seyffertitz, James Neill, Mayme Kelso and Valerie Thew, baby daughter of Harvey Thew.

An actor of Mr. Eltinge's ability has to be provided with unusual stories and productions, and it is said that "The Widow's Might" is the most unusual and interesting of anything he has previously done, and if he returns to the stage Mr. Eltinge contemplates having a spoken version of this story written for his personal use.

In the first part of the picture, Mr. Eltinge is seen as a Western rancher and resorts to robbery to save his property. How he is trapped in a fashionable hotel and is forced to don a woman's garb, gains possession of the only wig of a fashionable society woman, meets the girl he loves who at first suspects him of being the mother, and later the father, of a foundling, is brought about in a series of intensely interesting situations.

This production also gives Mr. Eltinge an opportunity to wear everything known to femininity from the morning negligee to evening gowns.

"CAVE MAN'S STUFF" (Nestor).

Gale Henry will be co-star with William Franey in the Nestor comedy to be distributed through Universal exchanges Jan. 7. "Cave Man Stuff" is the illuminating title, and Tom Gibson wrote the story. Under the direction of Allen Curtis a large and lively company, including Lillian Peacock and Milton Sims as chief supporters to the co-stars, has worked out an entertainment that is promised to maintain the standard set by previous Nestors.

Incidentally it may be noted that the determination to discontinue Nestor comedies as Universal releases has been rescinded—for the present, at least. The negatives that were in stock when Universal first notified exchange managers that Nestors would be dropped have been sorted over and the supply has been found to be so abundant and of such good quality from an entertainment standpoint that the brand will continue on the market for some time to come.

"NAULAHKA" DESIGNED AS ARTISTIC CREATION.

Rudyard Kipling's remarkable story of romance and adventure, "The Naulahka," which has been produced as a Pathe photoplay de luxe, has been staged in a way to make it a pictorial exposition as well as a spectacular drama of American life and East Indian intrigue. The still photographs that have been issued in advance of the production promise scenic views that in richness and variety of subjects will be decidedly artistic and unique.

In staging "Naulahka," Director George Fitzmaurice paid

special attention to the backgrounds against which he directed the action of the story, with the stated object of creating as perfect an illusion as nature, artistry and the modern cinema camera could make it. In writing the story, Kipling carried his readers from Colorado to the Orient and it is reported that in the picturized version the spectator is carried over the same ground on what could easily be termed a sight-seeing journey, if the absorbingly interesting story could be forgotten while viewing the films.

Director Fitzmaurice, who lived in India for over nine years, located spots in America that so closely resembled the East Indian country that by getting the proper focal range, American topography appears in the film as views that might have actually been photographed in the far East. In some of these scenes, East Indian landmarks, well known to Mr. Fitzmaurice, were duplicated under his personal direction to further advance the truthfulness of the atmospheric qualities of the feature.

"I have worked hard to make Mr. Kipling's story a thing of art as well as action," said Mr. Fitzmaurice, "and I believe I have succeeded and I am now confidently awaiting the judgment of the exhibitors and the public."

ARBUCKLE A REFORMER IN "OUT WEST."

Fatty Arbuckle's next Paramount-Arbuckle comedy has received the title "Out West." The release date has not been set. In his new comedy Fatty plays the role of reformer, successfully, albeit humorously. Thrown off a freight train into the heart of the Western desert, Fatty lands eventually in the village of Mad Dog, described by the fervid scenario writer as "the toughest, wildest and wooliest town in the West." Here our intrepid hero mixes up with more bad men than Nick Carter ever imagined in his wildest flights of fancy, and after finally cleaning them out, sets out to reform the whole Mad Dog village, with the help of a pretty Salvation Army girl, several hundred feet of film and a barrel full of comedy situations.

Arbuckle's current release, "A Country Hero," has made a hit everywhere it has been shown. The scene in which Buster Kearton dances as Fatima, using a long black stocking as a snake, has received credit as being one of the finest hits of burlesque ever filmed.

PETROVA SUBJECT GOES TO RIALTO.

In order properly to emphasize the importance attached to the presentation of "Daughter of Destiny," the initial release starring Madame Olga Petrova in a series of productions bearing the stamp of her own organization, Managing Director Samuel L. Rothapfel of the Rialto arranged an especially elaborate program for the week of December 23. He arranged an unusually beautiful series of lighting effects as an introduction to the Petrova production.

As a preliminary to the appearance of Madame Petrova at the Rialto during Christmas week the star herself officiated at a little ceremony recently during which she hung upon the walls of the lobby a likeness of herself in oils done by a famous artist.

SHOREY SIGNS FIRST HODKINSON CONTRACT.

The first actual closing of a contract for the Paralta Plays took place in the offices of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation December 17 when George N. Shorey, of Knoxville, Tenn., booked the full Paralta series for his Queen theater. When the Hodkinson Corporation closed arrangements last week whereby it makes use of the exchange service of the twenty-eight General Film exchanges, the files of applications for the Paralta Plays were sent to the exchanges, but as Mr. Shorey is in New York his application was made out and accepted in the head office. Under the Hodkinson plan of exhibitor protection, every contract rate as well as every contract must be accepted by the head organization, and each contract bears a national serial number. Mr. Shorey is therefore Number 1 in the Hodkinson exhibitor family.

MISS ATKINSON BADLY BURNED.

Florence Atkinson, playing the role of Mme. Jesse, the vampire, in "The Marionettes," which Clara Kimball Young is just finishing, was badly burned at the Thanhouser Studios, New Rochelle, where the company is working. Miss Atkinson's hair became ignited from the flame of an alcohol lamp while making up in her dressing room, the flames extending to her clothing before assistance could reach her. Emile Chautard, Miss Young's director, and W. G. Belew, studio manager, reached Miss Atkinson just in time to save her from serious injury. As it is, Miss Atkinson is minus most of her beautiful hair and badly burned about the hand, arms and shoulders. She was immediately removed to her home in New York, where it is reported that her injuries will not terminate seriously.

REID'S NEXT PICTURE ALSO A WESTERN.

Following his appearance in "Nan of Music Mountain," Wallace Reid will be seen in another Western production, "Rimrock Jones," from Dan Coolidge's novel of that name, scenarioized by Harvey F. Thew and Frank X. Finnegan, and produced under the direction of Donald Crisp.

Both in settings and numerous characters who appear in the production, there is a picturesque portrayal of the still rugged West, and where a man finds more than the usual number of opportunities to prove the fibre of which he is made.

"MEN WHO HAVE MADE LOVE TO ME" (Essanay).

In George K. Spoor's Ultra-Feature, "Men Who Have Made Love to Me," Director Arthur Berthelet obtained after much scouting about the country just the summer settings he desired. such scenes as the country club at its mid-season activities, the lake surrounded by foliaged trees and flowering bushes are striking and artistically perfect.

Miss MacLane, herself an ardent admirer of motion pictures, expressed wonder over the tireless efforts of directors in obtaining, at whatever cost, just what they want.

"Men Who Have Made Love to Me" is a correct reflection of the peculiar woman writer who has aroused the whole country by her remarkable writings. The picture interprets the sensational, sentimental and satirical high lights of six amazing romances in the life of Miss MacLane. Although the true names of the suitors are withheld, the stamp of sincerity and realism is there.

It pictures six episodes in the life of a strangely magnetic woman, that might occur to any woman. The lovers are each of a different type and the players who assume their roles selected from various parts of the country, many of them taken from important roles in stage productions.

Ethel Barrymore to Make Comedies

Talented Member of Stage Family to Adhere to Line That Made Relatives Become Famous.

ADMIRERS of the talents of Ethel Barrymore will rejoice to hear that her future screen appearances will be devoted to feature comedy productions under her present management, Metro Pictures Corporation. This decision has been reached on account of the great success of her latest Metro offering, "An American Widow," which Albert Shelby Le Vino adapted from Kellett Chambers' play, and recalls the fact that some of the greatest triumphs of Miss Barrymore on the speaking stage have been in comedy ever since the days when "matinee girls" were in vogue and she was their favorite actress.

The Barrymore family has always excelled in brilliant, sparkling representations of the humorous side of life, and it was as a comedienne that Miss Barrymore won the hearts of those theatergoers who have ever since been her loyal friends, by such characterizations as the leading roles in "Captain Jinks of the Horse Marines," "Cousin Kate," "Trelawney of the Wells," and more recently "Our Mrs. McChesney." Metro's screen play, "An American Widow," has demonstrated that the quality in these can be successfully transferred to the screen.

Comedy has been the vehicle of Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, who in their Metro-Drew comedies have made themselves known throughout the world. Sidney Drew is Miss Barrymore's uncle. Some of the finest works of John Drew, another uncle, have also been in comedy vein. John Barrymore, her brother, has done admirable work in comedy, both on the stage and screen, and the same is true of her other brother, Lionel Barrymore. Her father was the celebrated and much-loved Maurice Barrymore, whose humor was a delight both on and off the stage, and her mother was the charming Georgie Drew. Another relative, Georgie Drew-Mendum, has a valuable comedy gift. The versatility of her famous grandmother, Mrs. John Drew, mother of John and Sidney Drew, is a matter of theatrical history. With such a heritage, and with her own personal beauty and charm, Ethel Barrymore takes her place as comedienne by right divine.

"MORGAN'S RAIDERS" (Bluebird).

Wilfred Lucas produced his first Bluebird at Leonia, N. J., with Violet Mersereau the star. Having finished the picture, he changed his personal location to Universal City and was assigned to the screen management of Ruth Clifford. It was his fine work in creating "Morgan's Raiders," to be released on the Bluebird program, Feb. 4, that decided Managing Director Carl Laemmle to send Mr. Lucas to the West Coast.

Violet Mersereau, it is asserted, has the best role she ever played in this Bess Meredyth story, previously referred to by its working title, "The Wild Cat." In the nature of the character Miss Mersereau appears first as a hoydenish child, who is changed by the necessity of vital emergency into a girl of purposeful demean and heroic conduct.

"Morgan's Raiders" is an illuminating title, as the story deals with events that transpired during the Civil War in which Morgan's band of daring horsemen performed sensational exploits. In the action Miss Mersereau is compelled to don boy's clothes and does some daring horseback riding that proves her right to join the Morgan band.

Director Lucas found ideal locations on the Ramapo Hills, where the rough scenery of Northern Kentucky is majestically duplicated in forests, rocks and mountain vistas. Unusual care was taken in the selection of Miss Mersereau's support, essential roles having been assigned to William Cavanaugh, Frank Holland, Edward Burn and Barbara Gilroy with Frank Artego performing many sensational feats of reckless riding.

COMING GOLDWYN RELEASES.

Goldwyn, announcing three new releases that follow the release on December 30 of Mary Garden in "Thais," still further emphasizes and increases its production standards with the following pictures:

January 14, Madge Kennedy in "Oh, Mary, Be Careful!" by George Weston; January 28, Mabel Normand in "Dodging a Million," by Edgar Selwyn and A. M. Kennedy and directed by George Loane Tucker; February 10, Mae Marsh in "Fields of Honor," by Irvin S. Cobb and Edgar Selwyn.

In "Oh, Mary, Be Careful!" Goldwyn has obtained for Miss Kennedy one of the most popular novels of the past twenty-four months and with the deliberate intention of diversifying the work of this star, who came into public favor with "Baby Mine" and "Nearly Married."

The government's request for the postponement by Goldwyn of the release date of "Joan of Plattsburg" is more than offset by the production of a remarkable picture under the direction of George Loane Tucker, "Dodging a Million."

In "Fields of Honor" Mae Marsh does some of the best emotional acting she has revealed in the past two years. This is a vivid emotional drama by Irvin S. Cobb and Edgar Selwyn and was directed by Ralph W. Ince, a director of marked popularity and maker of many notable screen attractions.

SELECT BUYS "THE KNIFE" FOR ALICE BRADY.

Select Pictures has acquired another Broadway success for one of its stars. "The Knife," which was one of the past season's hits and the attraction chosen to open the New Bijou theater, has been purchased for Miss Alice Brady and will be her next production. Competition was exceedingly brisk among the film companies for the motion picture rights. Select's acquisition of the picture rights represents lavish expenditure.

"The Knife" is another gripping play from the pen of Eugene Walter, author of "The Easiest Way" and "Paid in Full." It is a melodrama of the highest class and in tensity of theme and action lends itself particularly to screen adaptation.

The story centers about a Southern girl reared in all the superstitious fancies of the South. The play provides Miss Brady with big moments and ample opportunities for tense emotional acting.

Production has already been started and the star with her director, Robert G. Vignola, and part of her company have just returned from a flying trip to Florida, where the opening scenes of the story were filmed.

"THE SONG OF SONGS" BEING ASSEMBLED.

The last scenes of Artcraft's adaptation of the famous play, "The Song of Songs," have been taken, and Director Joseph Kaufman is now assembling the picture. Miss Elsie Ferguson is starred in this production, and has a role very similar to the one she played in "The Outcast," which was the crowning achievement of her stage career.

In "The Song of Songs" she interprets the part of Lily Kardos, a girl of unusual beauty, who begins life as a salesgirl for an Oriental store with branches on the boardwalk of Palm Beach, where she attracts the attentions of wealthy men. Her career is a series of dramatic incidents, and the girl rises from poverty to riches as the wife of ex-Senator Calkins, who, in a jealous rage, drives her away though she is innocent of wrongdoing. She plunges into the fast life of the set in which she is thrown, and later meets a man with whom she falls in love. Through the intervention of this man's uncle, the shadows of the past are brought up and she is unwittingly led into a situation where her whole future happiness is threatened.

The scenario was written by Charles Maigne and adapted from the play by Edward Sheldon.

BROCKWELL AND PEARSON RELEASES SWITCHED.

"Stolen Honor," the Virginia Pearson picture which William Fox had announced as his Special Features release for December 30, will not be available for exhibitors on that date. The illness of Miss Pearson delayed work on the production, with the result that "For Liberty," a war picture featuring Gladys Brockwell, has been substituted for it. As the schedule now stands "Stolen Honor" will be released January 6 and "For Liberty" December 30.

The January Special Features have been announced only for the first three weeks. "Cupid's Round Up," in which Tom Mix will make his debut as a star of Western dramas, is set tentatively for January 13, and "A Heart's Revenge," Sonia Markova's second production, is down for January 20.

PARAMOUNT SHOOTS VOLCANO FOR HAYAKAWA PICTURE.

What is claimed to be some of the most beautiful natural scenery ever secured by a motion picture camera for a feature photoplay is a scene in "Hidden Pearls," Paramount's newest starring vehicle for Sessue Hayakawa. This particular scene was taken at the crater of the volcano, "Kilauea," under the most difficult conditions for actors, cameramen and directors. The volcano is one of the most picturesque ones in the Hawaiian Island, where most of the scenes of "Hidden Pearls" were taken on the island of Hilo.

Three weeks were spent in a native village, filming scenes which depict the life of the real old Hawaii.

Pathe Program

Irene Castle and Doris Kenyon Featured in the Schedule for the Week of January 6.

IRENE CASTLE'S best feature, Doris Kenyon in a thrilling chapter of "The Hidden Hand," and Harold Lloyd in a one-reel comedy, are big points in Pathé's program for January 6. Irene Castle appears in "Convict 993," a Pathe Play special in five reels; produced by Astra; story and scenario by Wallace C. Clifton; directed by William Parke. To this picture goes the distinction of being the first Pathe feature of the year 1918. It marks the first time that Irene Castle has been under the direction of William Parke and it is the best picture in which the famous star has yet appeared. In the cast are a number of players of sterling merit, including Warner Oland, Helene Chadwick, J. H. Gilmour and Bert Starkey ("The Spider" in "The Fatal Ring").

"Convict 993" is a "crook" play of the kind that every audience delights in. There is plenty of action and thrills. It is an excellent picture from every angle. In it we offer to exhibitors a great box-office star, an unusually good cast and strong story.

The story gives Mrs. Castle every opportunity for a display of her artistic talents and for an exhibition of a gorgeous array of gowns. It also has the virtue of a happy ending after working up a great amount of sympathy and compassion for a popular heroine who finds herself in an apparently hopeless situation.

Doris Kenyon is seen in the seventh episode of "The Hidden Hand," entitled "The Fire Trap," with Sheldon Lewis, Arline Pretty and Mahlon Hamilton.

Twenty feet from the ground Doris descends hand over hand down the rope which is held by Ramsey at the opening of this exciting chapter. Despite the Hidden Hand's best efforts they escape. The Hidden Hand pursues them to the Whitney lodge in the country, near which on a swaying foot bridge Ramsey and Doris come to a pause as they see the henchmen of the Hidden Hand at both ends of the bridge. Blocked, Ramsey takes a pair of handcuffs and loops one around his wrist. He fastens the handcuffs to a wire which leads from the bridge to the opposite bank of the ravine. Doris clings to him and they both shoot on the wire across the ravine, as the Hidden Hand and his men fire at them.

Harold Lloyd stars in "The Tip," a one-reel comedy produced by Rolin. This is a wonderful burlesque of the various crystal gazers, fortune tellers, and other fakers in whom some people repose such confidence. Farina, the crystal gazer, tells Harold he is going to meet a beautiful blonde, a millionairess. He proceeds from then on to have one adventure after another.

"Picturesque Rivers of France—The Tarn and Its Gorges" and "Here and There in Keswick," in Cumberland, England, is a Pathe colored split reel scenic.

An International Cartoon and Educational Split Reel and Hearst Pathe News Nos. 3 and 4 complete this program.

NO LET-UP AT GOLDWYN STUDIOS.

The business outlook in the motion picture industry, as viewed by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, is such that Goldwyn, instead of lessening or temporarily curtailing its production activities, has redoubled its labors in its big Fort Lee plant, with three companies working under the glass top and a fourth company ready to begin work the day after Christmas.

Madge Kennedy is hard at work under the direction of Edward Dillon making "Our Little Wife" from Avery Hopwood's successful play. Mabel Normand, having finished work in "Dodging a Million," by Edgar Selwyn and A. M. Kennedy, under the direction of George Loane Tucker, has started work again in a new production, as yet unnamed, and Mae Marsh, just through working in "The Beloved Traitor," is hard at work in a new picture from a story by Irvin S. Cobb. Within a few days R. A. Walsh, one of the industry's ablest directors, makes his advent into the Goldwyn organization.

ESSANAY SCENICS MAKING GOOD.

A favorable impression among exhibitors of the country has been created by Essanay's series of one-reel de luxe scenics being distributed by General Film Company. Theaters which have shown the first of this series, "Salmon Fishing in New Brunswick," almost invariably have booked the remaining subjects in the series for their programs. One of the many examples noted in the last two weeks is the action of the Rialto theater in Denver, a leading picture theater of that city, in booking the entire series for extended runs, after having seen the first release.

Forthcoming releases in this series are "Water Powers of Western Canada," "Through Canada from Coast to Coast," "How Canada and the Farmers Co-operate in Grain Raising," "Agricultural Opportunities in Western Canada," "The Two Biggest Things in the World—the Grand Canyon of Arizona and Canyon DeChelly," and "Electrification of Railroads."

NEW MARY PICKFORD PICTURE FINISHED.

Mary Pickford's newest Artcraft picture, "Stella Maris," adapted by Frances Marion from the novel by William Locke, has just been finished at the Hollywood studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. It is announced that William J. Locke's novel has made an extraordinary production, even for Artcraft, replete with stirring incidents and deeply charged with pathos. In the parts of Stella Maris and Unity Blake, Mary Pickford will present on the screen two of the most widely different characterizations ever disclosed in one production.

Opposite the star is Conway Tearle. Others in the excellent cast are Camille Ankewich, Ida Waterman, Herbert Standing, Josephine Crowell and Mrs. Coonleu. The photoplay was produced under the direction of Marshall Neilan. Mr. Neilan was assisted by Nat Deverich, and Walter Stradling is responsible for the camera work. This film will be released by Artcraft the latter part of January.

AMERICAN RED CROSS WORKERS IN FRANCE.

The work of an American Red Cross Ambulance Corps in France is most interestingly pictured in No. 156 of the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly, which is released on Sunday, December 23.

On arrival in France the members of the Ambulance Corps proceed immediately to the headquarters of the Red Cross in Paris, where they are given their credentials. Their personal belongings are forwarded to the ambulance bases by Red Cross motor trucks, while they proceed by train.

Red Cross workers do not wait long before reaching the "front," where they are under fire almost from the hour of their arrival. Nothing is sacred to the Huns, and the members of the Ambulance Corps who must seek out the wounded on the battle field are probably in more danger than the actual fighters in the trenches.

The wounded soldiers are given first-aid treatment at dressing stations just behind the lines, and then removed to base hospitals further from danger. It is a common sight to see ambulances which have been wrecked by German shells, as pictured in one of the scenes of this subject.

Another of the foreign subjects pictured in this number of the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly shows the convoying to their French homes of soldiers who have been interned in Switzerland for many months.

That the United States has not yet been fully aroused to the destruction which can be wrought by German spies in this country is shown in the picture of the steamer O. P. Clark, which was burned by incendiaries on the Pacific Coast with the loss of a valuable cargo. However, U. S. Marshal Bradley, of Chicago, is "doing his bit" in guarding property, and one of the pictured subjects shows him superintending the posting of warnings to alien enemies.

TOM MIX FINISHES "CUPID'S ROUND UP."

Tom Mix, who is working at the William Fox western studios, has completed "Cupid's Round Up," his first picture as a star in Western dramas. The story deals with the results of the betrothal of a girl and a boy because of the desire of their parents, who are old friends, to unite the two families.

Most of the scenes are laid on a ranch where the young woman, posing as a maid, meets the young man a few weeks prior to the date set for their marriage. Mr. Mix is supported in the production by Wanda Petit and the production was made under the direction of Edward J. Le Saint, this being the latter's first picture for William Fox.

"Cupid's Round Up" is tentatively scheduled for release January 13 as a Fox Special Feature.

Sir Johnston's Picture Finished

"The Passing of the Third Floor Back" to Be Shown in January—Great Actor Returns to England.

Herbert Brenon has "shot" the last scenes for his forthcoming production, "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," upon which he has been working for over two months. The first public showing of "The Passing of the Third Floor Back" will take place in January. The release date is announced for February.

Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, the eminent English actor, who came to this country to take part in what, it is expected, will be one of the season's most important screen contribution, has already taken his departure for England. He completed his portrayal of his beloved role of the Stranger about two weeks ago. Since that time Mr. Brenon has been taking the scenes in which Sir Johnston does not appear.

In its screen form "The Passing of the Third Floor Back" has undergone certain changes necessary to give variety of background and to work out the development of the characters. In the stage version of Jerome K. Jerome's drama the action centered in the living room of a shabby London boarding house. The motion picture adaptation on the other hand reveals the different rooms of the lodgers. The three whole floors of the Bloomsbury lodging house were constructed at the studio.

In transferring this message of hope and kindliness Herbert Brenon has lost none of its beauty for the screen. He has developed, in many cases, what was merely suggested. He has somewhat elaborated the original plot, and he has added the many little touches to the production which always give distinction to his work.

It is a subject which again calls into play all the skill and artistry with which he is endowed. There is no doubt this production will be one of the most beautiful that has yet found its way onto the screen.

The picture is produced with typical Brenon thoroughness. The cast, too, is an exceptionally notable one, headed by Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, it includes Molly Pearson as the Slavey, the part which she played in the original London production, and Augusta Haviland, Ricca Allen, Ketty Galanta, Grace Stephens, Dora Mills Adams, Ben Graham, Sydney Golden, Thornton Bastion, Robert Fisher, George Le Guere, Germaine Bourville and Alfred Hickman.

WILLIAM FOX TO RELEASE "DU BARRY."

The fourth release this month of a Standard Picture will be made December 30 by William Fox. It will be "Du Barry," a Theda Bara superpicture, produced under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards. This production completes the longest list of Standard Pictures given to exhibitors in any one month since the inauguration of this service last August. In all, thirteen Standard Pictures have been placed on the market and a number of others are reported to have been finished, or to be nearing completion.

"Du Barry," which requires a cast of twelve persons, deals with the life of the famous Madame du Barry who rose from obscurity and comparative poverty to the position of favorite of King Louis XV of France. The play deals with her methods of establishing herself in the good graces of the king and of continuing herself in favor in the face of inconstancy and constant intrigue. The play follows history in eventually escorting Madame du Barry to the guillotine.

More Bluebirds

Managing Director Laemmle Makes Substantial Additions to the New Year's Schedule.

MANAGING Director Carl Laemmle has adjusted the Bluebird program until the week of Feb. 11 by adding features that will employ as stars Dorothy Phillips, Franklyn Farnum, Violet Mersereau and Carmel Myers. This list of added features starts the second year of the Bluebird program with the release of "Broadway Love," starring Dorothy Phillips.

W. Carey Wonderly's story, first appearing in a popular magazine, furnished the basis of Ida May Park's production of "Broadway Love," in which Miss Phillips will reappear among Bluebirds after a considerable lapse of time, Jan. 21. Lon Chaney and William Stowell again unite with the star they have so many times supported in the Bluebird series to play the leading male roles, while Juanita Hansen will head the large female contingent that the nature of the story requires in photoplaying.

Franklyn Farnum's regular appearance will be made Jan. 28 in "The Fighting Grin," a comedy of speedy action, in which he has Edith Johnson as his leading lady. R. N. Bradbury and F. H. Clark wrote the story and Joseph De Grasse directed the production from Charles Kenyon's scenario. In the company supporting Mr. Farnum and Miss Johnson will be J. Morris Foster, Charles H. Mailes and Fred Montague, heading a numerous organization.

"Morgan's Raiders" will have Violet Mersereau as the star of the Feb. 4 release in a melodrama reflecting incidents in the Civil War. Bess Meredyth wrote the story and furnished her own scenario, with Wilfred Lucas directing the production. Barbara Gilroy, Edward Burns, leading man; Frank Holland and William Cavanaugh will have important roles in the support of Miss Mersereau. This feature has previously been referred to as "The Wild Cat," but under the more illuminating title of "Morgan's Raiders," the definite release has been fixed for advertising by exhibitors.

"The Wife He Bought" brings Carmel Myers to star among Bluebirds for the third time Feb. 11, when she appears in a screen-version of a story by Larry Evans that appeared in a popular magazine under the title of "One Clear Call." Harvey Gates made the scenario and Harry Solter directed the production with Kenneth Harlan in the leading male role. The others in the cast are Howard Crampton, Fred Schilling, Allen Sears and Sidney Dean.

There are Bluebirds enough completed at Universal City to run the program until the middle of March, but the formality of scheduling the produce remains to be accomplished. Among the subjects, all complete and ready for release, are mentioned "The Eternal Columbine," in which Mae Murray will star; "The Girl Who Dared," presenting Dorothy Phillips, and "The Highest Card," a Bluebird for Ruth Clifford and Monroe Salisbury.

POLO DOES STUNTS IN "THE BULL'S EYE."

With one end of a lariat looped around the top of a tall tree and the other grasped firmly in his hands, Eddie Polo made a running jump from the top of an eighty-foot cliff, circled at a nearly horizontal angle through the air, and came to earth in a clump of underbrush. Hemmed in at the brink of a cliff by a band of outlaws who were determined to capture him, "Reckless" Polo took this novel way of escaping from them in one of the scenes of the Universal's Western serial, "The Bull's Eye," now being filmed by Director James W. Horne, near Universal City.

Novel stunts are a feature of the new serial. A few weeks ago Polo leaped from the edge of a cliff to the top of a tall, slender tree which bent under his weight and bore him safely to the ground. In this latter feat, performed a few days ago, W. B. Pearson, the author of the story, brought the principal of centrifugal force into play. Had Polo leaped straight off the precipice, he would have been dashed against the trunk of the tree. By running at top-most speed at the rope's end along the edge of the cliff and then making the leap, he swung in a circle around the tree, the centrifugal force retarding his detscent, and landed on the opposite side.

Although he struck the ground with considerable force at the finish of his swing for life, the "stunt actor" was uninjured except for numerous painful bumps and scratches. Director Horne declared the stunt to be one of the most thrilling and unique feats he has screened in the half dozen serials he has filed during his career as a producer of adventure films.

RUSSIAN COUNTRY LIFE IN "THE CLOVEN TONGUE."

The Russia that one finds in the works of Tolstoi, Dostoievsky, Pushkin and Andrieff, not the Russia of which one reads in the newspapers of the day, a nation in the throes of countless Revolutions, that Russia is to be seen in "The Cloven Tongue," a Russian Art Film to be released by Pathe on January 13 as a special. If it had nothing else to recommend it, and it has plenty, "The Cloven Tongue" would be of interest to everyone as a picture of country life in the "land of snows."

What Triangle Offers in January

Olive Thomas, Jack Richardson, Alma Rubens and J. Barney Sherry Are Among Featured Players.

TRIANGLE will open the new year with a program of merit that substantiates in every degree the policy of diversified features announced by General Manager H. O. Davis. A comedy drama with Olive Thomas, a big drama of the Navajo Indian country with Jack Richardson, a production of beauty featuring Alma Rubens, with scenes laid in Italy and France, and a tense drama of professional life with J. Barney Sherry, are among the features to be released in January. And there will be others, all with an interesting story to tell.

For the first week in January, Olive Thomas, with Charles Gunn, is scheduled to appear in "Betty Takes a Hand," a pleasantly humorous, fast moving story written by Katherine Kavanaugh, winner of the second prize in a recent contest.

For the second release of the week, Jack Richardson will appear in "Man Above the Law," with Claire McDowell and Josie Sedgwick supporting. This is a story of a man who leaves the civilized world in disgust because of an unlucky love affair and an even more unlucky brush with religion and law.

The second seven-part feature to be produced under the new Triangle plan of a seven-reel picture every month, will be released January 13, under the title "I Love You," with Alma Rubens as the star.

For the second part of the week's program, "Law's Outlaw," featuring Roy Stewart, now recognized as one of the foremost delineators of western characters, will be released. The story was written by Ethel and James Dorrance.

For the week of January 20, "Evidence," a drama dealing with professional life and with J. Barney Sherry in the leading role, will be released. Jack Cunningham of the Triangle's scenario staff, wrote this play, which has for its principal characters a highly successful criminal lawyer and his closest friend, a physician. Margery Wilson, who has added new laurels to her achievements with every successive appearance, will have the leading role in the following story, "Flames of Chance," adapted from the story, "Three Godsons of Jeanette Contreau," by Francis W. Sullivan, which recently appeared in a magazine. In this picture Miss Wilson plays a dual role.

For the last week in January, the first release will be "The Gun Woman," a brilliant western story. Texas Guinan, formerly of the Winter Garden, New York, has the title role. To round out the month's program Triangle has a Japanese production of exceptional beauty, "Her American Husband." The play is a reversal of the characters and situations in John Luther Long's famous "Madame Butterfly." Dainty Teddy Sampson appears in the leading feminine role as a Japanese girl and Darrel Foss has the leading male part. This is Miss Sampson's first appearance in Triangle features. Thomas Kurihara, the well-known Japanese actor, and Jack Abbe, also have prominent parts.

HOW ENGLEBRECHT PLAYED UP "DRAFT 258."

A lobby display which may well be duplicated by exhibitors booking Metro's great play of the hour, "Draft 258," was erected by Manager Englebrecht of the Regent theater in Arlington, N. J., where the patriotic production played a two days' run to big business.

The spirit of patriotism dominated this timely display, which was of a military nature. At one side of the lobby, the floor was covered with sand and a regulation army tent erected. In front of the tent were placed a bench, stacked guns, and a tripod with a pot hanging over a pile of wood, which was lighted with a red electric light bulb to give the effect of a fire. Brush wood was scattered at one side and a very good idea of a typical tent home of "our boys" in camp at home and abroad was presented. The properties used may easily be borrowed for the occasion, without much cost.

The lobby was tastefully decorated with American flags and bunting. Stills from the production were displayed. The entire display is commendable because of its fitness and dignity.

"THE SPIRIT OF '17" JACK PICKFORD'S NEXT.

Having earned praise by his portrayal of a real Tom Sawyer, Jack Pickford is now engaged in making "The Spirit of '17." The story is of particular boy scout interest, since it was written by Judge Willis Brown of the Juvenile Court of Chicago, who is intensely interested in the boy scout movement.

Appearing in support is a new leading woman, Katherine McDonald, who is already known by her screen work. Charles Arling, the well known and successful actor, is cast as John Edwards. L. N. Wells plays the role of Captain Jerico Norton. Ashton Dearholt, successful juvenile player, is seen in the unsympathetic role of the slacker. Charles H. Geldert, Edythe Chapman, William Chester and Helen Jerome Eddy also are in the cast.

TYPHOONS ARE INSTALLED IN CALIFORNIA.

The Typhoon Cooling and Ventilating System has reached California by way of the Star Theater, Reedley, Cal., owned by W. L. Sheibley. The Star is the first house in this state to be cooled and ventilated by Typhoons and the company is looking forward to a big California business next season.

JAXON SERIAL READY JANUARY 19.

Another postponement in the release of the first episode of "A Daughter of Uncle Sam," the Jaxon serial which will be distributed by General Film Company, has been made necessary due to the fact that several timely scenes were obtained for the earlier episodes which will add materially to their dramatic qualities. It is now definitely stated that the first episode will be released on January 19, and that there will be no hitch in the release of the succeeding chapters in this sensible serial, as it is called.

In order that the exposures of spy plots and the enemy intrigues might be brought up to date, advantage was taken of an opportunity to include several thrilling scenes in the first few numbers of the serial. "A Daughter of Uncle Sam" is a comprehensive picturization of the activities of enemy spies and the manner in which they have been balked in their attempts to destroy ships, munition plants, warehouses containing food and other supplies, and as such is arousing tremendous interest among exhibitors. Advance bookings for the serial have been notable.

Scene from "A Daughter of Uncle Sam" (General Film).

Wonderful photography and settings unusually well adapted for the filming of the thrilling encounters which are a feature of the twelve chapters of the serial are two features which add tremendously to the pulling power of the Jaxon serial. Jane Vance and William Sorelle are featured in this swiftly moving martial kaleidoscope, which guarantees some rapid-fire action.

EXHIBITORS PRAISE PETROVA ALBUM.

Following the presentation of the Petrova Pictorial Album to the members of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit by Frederick L. Collins, president of the picture star's organization, the Petrova executive has been deluged by congratulatory communications from the various recipients of the novel gift. All of the members of the Circuit who will distribute the eight starring vehicles of Madame Petrova during the forthcoming year are warm in their praise of the artistic and business-getting qualities of the pictorial brochure.

The beautifully mounted leather novelty which contains a complete review of the various scenes from the first Petrova production, "Daughter of Destiny," has aroused strong interest among the many exhibitors dealing with the Circuit and in response to universal requests for additional copies of the album, the Petrova Picture Company has arranged to supply each distribution office with five of the booklets.

Due to the reception which has been accorded the album by the distributing organizations as a sales aid for their roadmen, Mr. Collins has decided to issue one of these novelties with each presentation of the forthcoming productions in which the Polish star will appear.

"TORPEDO PIRATES" (L-Ko.).

Hughie Mack, one of L-Ko's new stars, lately won over from Vitagraph surroundings, will be the featured comedian in "Torpedo Pirates," the L-Ko to be distributed through Universal exchanges Jan. 9. Director General J. G. Blystone had personal charge of this production with Noell Smith carrying out the details.

Gladys Varden, an L-Ko girl who has become a favorite in that series through her long association with the organization, will be featured as Mr. Mack's chief aid to mirth provoking and there will be a large company of bathing girls to make the water scenes attractive to the eye. Several assisting comedians will co-operate with Mr. Mack in making things lively throughout the two reel offering.

Metro Has Four January Subjects

Will Feature Emily Stevens, Viola Dana, Edith Storey and Francis Bushman and Beverly Bayne.

FIVE of the public's favorite stars will be represented in the January list of releases announced by Metro. These are Emily Stevens, Viola Dana, Edith Storey, Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne.

"Daybreak," a screen version of the Broadway success written by Jane Cowl and Jane Murfin, will be Metro's first production given to the public in 1918, with Emily Stevens as star. June Mathis and Albert Capellani have prepared the play for screen presentation. "Daybreak" is the first Metro production directed by Mr. Capellani. It has been given a brilliant production, with a superb supporting cast, headed by Julian l'Estrange. The cast includes Augustus Phillips, Herman Lieb, Evelyn Brent, Frank Joyner, Joseph Dailey and Evelyn Axzell. January 7 is the release date.

The January 14 release will be "The Winding Trail," with Viola Dana as star. The photodrama was written by Katharine Kavanaugh and June Mathis, and directed by John H. Collins. The scenario has been prepared by H. P. Keeler. The story is of western mining days. Supporting the star are Clifford Bruce, Mabel Van Buren and Hayward Mack.

Edith Storey is the star of "The Eyes of Mystery," Metro's January 21 release, which will be this favorite star's first appearance on the Metro program. It is a magnificent melodrama, made from the adventure story, "The House in the Mist," by Octavus Roy Cohen and J. U. Giesy. June Mathis prepared it for the screen, and Tod Browning has directed it. Much of the action of "The Eyes of Mystery" takes place in the South, in and around an old mansion, the ancient home of the Carmichaels. Bradley Barker plays opposite the star. In the support are Harry S. Northrup, Frank Fisher Bennett, Seth Meggett and Kempton Greene.

Metro's final January release will be "Under Suspicion," a five-act comedy melodrama, starring the popular co-stars, Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne. William S. Davis has directed this brilliant offering, which Albert Shelby Le Vino has adapted from the original story by Hugh Weir. J. J. Dunne is Mr. Davis' assistant. "Under Suspicion" is a colorful story of New York life in all its phases. Hugh Jeffrey, long a Metro favorite, plays the villain. Other players are Sidney Dalbrook, Eva Gordon, A. H. Hogan, A. H. Housman and Jack Newton.

MISS DALTON AT WORK ON "'FLARE-UP' SAL."

Dorothy Dalton will star in a new photoplay, "'Flare-Up' Sal," following her appearance in "Love Letters," released December 24.

The early fifties in the gold camps of California were exciting days and "'Flare-Up' Sal," reflecting that period, is filled with thrills. There is an abundance of genuinely interesting comedy, too, while the towering Redwood forest trees form a beautiful and picturesque background for the story.

R. William Neill directed "'Flare-Up' Sal" under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince.

GLADYS BROCKWELL STAR IN "FOR LIBERTY."

Soldiers going over the top in a night battle, activities of the United States secret service, a girl's sacrifice for her country and an absorbing love story involving intense rivalry, the whole scene being laid in Germany, are emphasized by the producer as the outstanding features of the Fox Special Features release for December 30. The picture is entitled "For Liberty" and the star is Gladys Brockwell.

The theme is love, an American girl in Berlin being courted both by a German general and an American spy. The girl tries to aid the spy in obtaining papers which he desires and the latter, misunderstanding her attentiveness to the general, repudiates the girl. Subsequently the spy is caught and the young woman, to save him, offers herself to the German officer. The American reaches the Allies' trenches and returns with an attacking party in time to save the girl from the general.

Two roles in the production are played by Charles Clary, who is cast opposite Miss Brockwell. Others in the supporting company are Bertram Grassby, Willard Lewis, Colin Chase and Clara Graham. The production was directed by Bertram Bracken and the scenario is credited to Bennett Cohen.

PARALTA PRESS BOOK FOR "MADAM WHO."

Paralta Plays, Inc., has issued an especially attractive press book for the exploitation of "Madam Who," in which Bessie Barriscale will make her debut as a star in Paralta Plays in the immediate future. The cover, which is done in three colors, bears the well known Paralta border, together with a most attractive picture of the star in process work.

Realizing the fact that practically all exhibitors throughout the country prefer to make up their own advertising copy, the stock advertisements have been omitted and in their place is a page devoted to catch lines to be used as an assistance in laying out display advertising copy.

On the next pages are cuts of the billing paper and stock cuts to be used in newspapers and programs. Then follows a series of press stories arranged for the requirements of the theaters showing the production. In preparing these pages the fact has been taken into consideration that most of the newspapers throughout the country have a regular schedule for the handling of motion picture copy. In practically all of the towns to-day the papers run an advance notice of a coming production, then an extensive Sunday notice which appears the Sunday before the attraction is booked, followed by a mid-week reader usually printed on Wednesday or Thursday. In some of the smaller towns where the run of a picture is but for one or two days the papers devote a certain section of the Sunday edition to photoplay news, and then run each day a column announcing the attractions showing that day.

The Paralta press book is so arranged as to supply the exhibitor with advance notices, Sunday notices, mid-week readers and special stories for the exploitation of "Madam Who" written in such a manner as to save the exhibitor the time and effort to prepare them to suit his local needs.

On the final page of the book is printed music cues for the picture which is a decided step forward, as it insures the delivery of these cues to theaters, where heretofore exhibitors were compelled to rely on the shipping departments of the exchanges, who often omit the sending of cue sheets.

OUIDA BERGERE OPENS NEW OFFICES.

The motion picture industry generally, producers and stars in particular, will be interested in learning that Miss Ouida Bergere has perfected plans for a complete and independent organization along lines of the most advanced efficiency.

A long-time lease has been executed for offices situated at 516 Fifth avenue, with affiliated branches in London, care of Hughes Massie, 40 Fleet street, and at Los Angeles, through the recognized activities of the Mabel Condon exchange. These affiliations will give an international significance to Miss Bergere's manifold operations.

Responsible executives of long experience are to be found in the departments now established. Additional executives are already being contracted for to head the new departments under consideration. The fact that Miss Bergere will now be operating free from any other affiliations or business complications, will enable her to give first-hand attention to all transactions of major importance, and the efficiency of her organization will guarantee prompt and effective results in minor details.

Producers will be automatically supplied with lists of best available directors, stars, and supporting talent, scenario editors, and continuity writers; and a screen test of new talent will be made for their consideration. Miss Bergere will confer in person with directors at the various studios so as to intelligently cast the productions, or furnish the necessary talent. Original manuscripts will be read with the same objects in view. Directors who are free for new affiliations can place their business affairs in Miss Bergere's hands, who will project their past pictures upon the screen in her private projection rooms. Authors will receive personal representation. Books, plays and original stories will be converted into scenario form, for practical selling purposes; desirable material and original ideas will be purchased.

THREE BRENON SUCCESSES IN MONTREAL.

Chandos Brenon, Canadian representative of the Herbert Brenon Film Corporation, reports the successful showing of three features made by Herbert Brenon now playing in Montreal at the foremost moving picture theaters in the city. The three Brenon features playing in Montreal at the present time are "The Lone Wolf" at the New Grand, "The Fall of the Romanoffs" at the Regent, and "The Daughter of the Gods," which was made two years ago under the Fox banner, at the St. Denis.

In the past four weeks Montreal has seen no less than five pictures directed by Mr. Brenon, for in addition to those already cited, "Neptune's Daughter," which is still a drawing card, and a reissue of "The Two Orphans" also have been running simultaneously.

Mutual Productions for January

Feature Releases Announced for the First Month of the New Year Include Notable Stars.

STUDIOS producing features for the Mutual Film Corporation have completed releases for the first two months of the new year and a schedule for January, 1918, has been announced.

Completed productions include pictures from east and west coast studios starring William Russell, Mary Miles Minter, Margarita Fischer, Edna Goodrich, Olive Tell, Ann Murdock and Anita King.

The schedule for January includes:

December 31: Edna Goodrich in "Her Second Husband," a five reel satire built on the extraordinary adventures of a young husband and wife who rush into divorce when "easy money" jars domestic tranquility and find love again in a strange fashion.

January 7: Margarita Fischer in "Molly Go Get 'Em," a five reel comedy drama of the experiences of an attractive and irresponsible young woman who chafes under parental efforts to keep her charms subdued until a rapidly ageing sister manages to marry.

January 14: Ann Murdock in "The Impostor," a picturization of the Charles Frohman play which casts Miss Murdock in the role of a self-supporting, unsophisticated miss, whose trust in a well-meaning married man leads to complications, defiance of convention and stops just short of a scandal.

January 21: Mary Miles Minter in "Mlle. Tiptoe," wherein the adorable Miss Minter is cast as a charmingly enthusiastic reformer of things as they are, political and economic, and relates her adventures in trying to make the world better and easier.

January 28: William Russell in "In Bad," an adventure drama which reveals Mr. Russell's abilities as an actor and an athlete to even greater advantage than they have heretofore been shown. Preview of "In Bad" has resulted in a declaration that it is easily the best thing Mr. Russell has done and trade and newspaper critics used superlatives in their reviews of his latest release, "New York Luck."

Other productions completed at the Mutual studios include "The Girl and the Judge," starring Miss Olive Tell, star in "The Unforeseen" and "Her Sister," both Frohman plays. "The Girl and the Judge" was written by Clyde Fitch. Miss Murdock has finished "My Wife," scheduled for February release, and "The Richest Girl." William Russell is at work now on "Polo Jack;" Miss Minter's forthcoming release is well under way although it has not been given a title.

Studio managers and directors of production, at work on pictures for Mutual release, are under strict orders to spare neither energy nor money in maintaining the standard of production which has been established in recent Mutual releases.

SIX LEADING MEN IN GOLDWYN SUBJECT.

In these days of tremendous quantity output of motion pictures dealing with wide variety of subjects, it seems almost impossible to think of anything really new in the way of a plot; but Goldwyn pictures is claiming a genuine theme novelty in its new Madge Kennedy starring vehicle, "Oh, Mary, Be Careful!" from the best-seller book of the same name by George Weston.

This play has no less than six leading men, all having important parts of almost equal value, playing opposite the star, Scene from "Oh, Mary, Be Careful!" (Goldwyn).

Madge Kennedy—and her eyes, and her smile, as the advertising has it. The nature of the story demands that Miss Kennedy, as the charming heroine, shall have a series of amazing adventures in search of a man worthy of her love. Her principal method of determining the suitability of each is to read the given gentlemen some poems by Keats while she displays a couple of inches of dainty ankle. If the victim is inhuman and listens to the poems without looking at the ankle, he thereby proves himself above temptation and worthy to share her joys and sorrows.

The six selected from the large number considered were George Forth, Bernard Thornton, Dixie Thompson, Harry Myers, A. V. Drehle and Harry Fraser.

BILLIE BURKE IS SUPPORTED BY IRISH CAST.

There is a company of Irish players now holding forth at the Famous Players' studio in New York, which includes Billie Burke. The peculiarity of this assemblage is in the fact that all the members of the cast have Irish names. The production is "Eve's Daughter," now being filmed under the direction of James "Irish" Kirkwood, and starring Billie Burke. Mr. Kirkwood's family, several generations back, was Scotch, but he is an out-and-out Irishman, inasmuch as his immediate forbears all lived in Ireland, and Kirkwood has the red hair and sandy complexion that goes to make up the Irish characteristics.

Miss Burke is Irish only in the fact that she, too, has a tint of gold in her hair and a very evident Irish name. Thomas Meighan, Miss Burke's leading man, could have no more typical Irish name.

Here are the "Irish" players, all appearing in prominent parts in support of Miss Burke in the new picture: Florence Flynn, Lucille Carney, Ivy Shannon, Riley Hatch, Clarence Doyle, Jimmie Gorman, Mary Ann Hughes (Navaro), Larry Williams, Julia Mann and Harry Lee.

"Eve's Daughter," of course, is in no sense an Irish play, but is an adaptation of the stage play of the same name produced this year and starring Grace George.

BILL HART CHANGES TYPE OF CHARACTERS.

In "Wolves of the Rail," his newest Thomas H. Ince production to be released by Artcraft, William S. Hart is introduced in a new role—that of an upholder of law and order, rather than an outlaw, although the early scenes of the drama depict Hart as the leader of a daring and notorious gang of bandits, who so terrify the officials of a Western railroad that a famous Eastern detective, known as "The Bloodhound," is sent to break them up.

How Hart, as Buck Andrade, meets this detective; how his reformation is brought about at the bedside of his dying mother and how he does the work that The Bloodhound came West to accomplish, forms the basis of a thrilling and interesting photoplay.

"Wolves of the Rail" was photographed in the recesses of the California mountains. Many of the scenes depict a railroad station at Smoky Gap, a deep defile in the Sierras and a favorite spot for a hold-up. To add realism to the picture, Mr. Ince built a real station, with switch tower, superintendent and division officials' offices and everything that is to be found in a typical mountain depot.

HEARST-PATHE SHOWS VIEWS OF HALIFAX.

By reason of the timeliness of the scenes shown as well as their diversity and general excellence, the Hearst-Pathe News No. 101 ranks as among the very best of its issues of the year.

First in the point of interest come views of the terrible disaster in Halifax. As soon as word was received over the wires that most of the city lay in ruins as the result of the blowing up of a munition ship, a cameraman was rushed from New York to the stricken city. The result is shown in the numerous views which this issue of the News presents, of the Belgian Relief steamer Imo which caused the trouble, of the section of the city which suffered the most, of relief trains and of various prominent buildings which were either wholly or partially destroyed. The result is an adequate conception of the extent of the disaster.

PARALTA PLAYS FOR HODKINSON.

Announcement is made this week from the offices of Paralta Plays, Inc., that the third Paralta play which, like J. Warren Kerrigan in "A Man's Man," by Peter B. Kyne, and Bessie Barriscale in Harold MacGrath's "Madam Who," is to be distributed through the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, the regular distributing medium for Paralta plays, is Henry B. Walthall in "His Robe of Honor."

"His Robe of Honor" is founded upon the well known novel by Ethel and James Dorrance, which was one of the "best sellers" of the past season. Its central character is a shyster lawyer who, as a political reward, is made a judge of the Supreme Court. On the bench he becomes a splendid character, dispensing exact justice despite the obstacles which his former course and associates impose. The motive for his reform is the love of a good woman.

This Paralta play gives Mr. Walthall an opportunity for a wide range of emotion as he is called on to characterize not only a shyster lawyer, but also to show the gradual dawn of integrity and honor and finally its complete flower.

Mr. Walthall is ably supported. Among the other principals are Lois Wilson, who is his good inspiration, and Mary Charleson, who is an adventuress concerned in the earlier part of his career.

ARTCRAFT FINISHES FOUR SUBJECTS.

THE production of four Artcraft releases were wound up simultaneously in the eastern and western studios of that concern during the past week, and the only producing unit now working is Maurice Tourneur's "The Blue Bird" company at the Fort Lee plant. The other companies will commence activities in the near future.

At the Lasky studios in Hollywood, Cal., Mary Pickford's newest vehicle, "Stella Maris," was just recently finished and, under Director Marshall Neilan, cut and assembled. This picture will be released in January.

The new Douglas Fairbanks picture, "A Modern Musketeer," has also just been finished at the Lasky studio. This production is the last Artcraft offering for 1917.

Elsie Ferguson's latest photoplay, "The Song of Songs," staged under the direction of Joe Kaufman, has also been completed. This film, however, will not be Miss Ferguson's next Artcraft release, "Rose of the World" being scheduled for release ahead of it, as the opening attraction of Artcraft for the new year.

William S. Hart has also just concluded activities on a new Ince production to be released by Artcraft, "Wolves of the Rail." This picture will be released in the middle of January.

Each of these stars within a weel will all be at work again. Another Artcraft producing unit that will start activities shortly is the Cecil B. De Mille company.

L-KOS FOR JANUARY.

President Julius Stern has arranged the L-Ko series of comedies for January release with two features starring Hughie Mack, lately signed up as a star; with Mack Swain, in another "Ambrose"; and Myrtle Sterling and Eddie Barry, old line favorites with L-Ko audiences, heading the others. Director-General J. G. Blystone has supervised all of these productions and edited the completed issue. Here they are in detail:

Jan. 2.—"Carnivals and Cannibals," with Myrtle Sterling the star and Al Forbes principal comedian. Vin Moore directed.

Jan. 9.—"Torpedo Pirates," starring Hughie Mack, and Gladys Varden featured in his support. Noell Smith directed.

Jan. 16.—"Home-Run Ambrose," presenting Mack Swain in a baseball comedy; produced by W. S. Frederick as the second "Ambrose" in the L-Ko series.

Jan. 23.—"Ash-Can Alley," featuring Eva Novak and Eddie Barry. Directed by Dick Smith.

Jan. 30.—"Barbarous Plots," starring Hughie Mack, with Bobby Dunn, Eva Novak and Kathryn Young featured in his support. Bobby Kerr directed.

METRO BUYS "WESTERN" FOR EDITH STOREY.

Motion picture rights to Charles A. Taylor's famous Western melodrama "Yosemite" have been acquired by Metro as a starring vehicle for its athletic star, Edith Storey. The author himself will adapt the play for the screen and therefore all the characteristic Western action and incidents which have made this melodrama a success on the stage will be transferred to the screen.

In acquiring this great Western play Metro is carrying out its policy of securing the best possible vehicles for its players. This is the second stage play that Metro has secured recently for Edith Storey. Miss Storey is a famous delineator of Western characters and is just completing her first picture of this type under the parrot trade mark, "Revenge," a screen adaptation of Edward Moffat's novel, "Hearts Steadfast."

SETTING FOR BABY GRANDS VALUED AT $500,000.

Recently there appeared in many newspapers a story that Jane and Katherine Lee, William Fox's "Baby Grand" stars, were working in a scene of a new picture the setting of which was valued at $40,000. Now comes announcement from Fox publicity department that the final scenes in the picture referred to are being made in a setting valued at half a million dollars.

The set comprises six luxuriously furnished rooms, supposed to be the residence of an army officer who had seen service in many parts of the world and who had accumulated bits of bric-a-brac and pieces of rare furniture during his travels.

"GATES OF GLADNESS" (World).

Many of the scenes of "Gates of Gladness," a new World picture Brady-Made, for publication at the end of January, were photographed upon the superb estate of George Gould.

Scene from "Gates of Gladness" (World).

The Gould place, probably the most magnificent in the north, if not the entire country, is named Georgian Court, and its most picturesque beauties are backgrounds for the stirring episodes of this play.

The story of the new World picture coils around two brothers who are both in love with the same girl. The younger brother marries the girl and is disowned by the father, who afterward dies, leaving his fortune to the elder son. The younger has a hard time of it trying to earn a living as an artist, but his little daughter, played by Madge Evans, ultimately brings the estranged brothers together, although she is shot and very nearly killed in the process.

It was for the home of the rich brother that the Gould estate was utilized. One of the "shots" takes in a birdseye view of the most ornamental section of the grounds, and it can scarcely fail to arouse the keenest of interest in every spectator with the faintest appreciation of landscape architecture. Another situation represents moonlight in a grove of tall, slender trees, with a midnight marauder threading his way among the trunks as he stealthily approaches the mansion to "break in and steal," as the Scriptures put it.

The experts of the World pictures' studio unite in describing "Gates of Gladness" as unmistakably the most beautiful exhibition of photography in the records of this organization. It is no more than fair in this relation to give credit to Rene Guissart, the cameraman.

Featured with little Miss Evans in this screen play will be George MacQuarrie, who has played many roles in World pictures, and played them so well as to fully justify this promotion in the advertisements. Also, in the specially assembled cast are Gerda Holmes, Mrs. Stuart Robson, Baby Joan, Niles Welch and Rosina Henley, the last mentioned a daughter of the late E. J. Henley, an actor of positive genius, and Helen Bertram, one of the most beautiful and gifted prima donnas who ever graced the lyric stage in America. "Gates of Gladness" was staged by Harley Knoles.

GOLD ROOSTER PLAYS AT SPECIAL PRICES.

Coincidental with the announcement this week by J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe, in connection with his big plans for Pathe plays in 1918, F. C. Quimby, sales manager, issued a statement which reveals a nation-wide drive on Pathe Gold Rooster plays at special prices, before the new star series of Pathe plays, with Bessie Love, Fannie Ward, Frank Keenan and Bryant Washburn are ready for booking.

This means that a large number of good live reel features, with well-known stars will be available to exhibitors at remarkably low rentals, constituting a Christmas present to the trade. The special price list numbers sixty and includes pictures released prior to Dec. 2.

RED CROSS BATTLEFIELD SCENES.

Jack Cohn, manager of the Universal Animated Weekly, announces that his firm has signed an important contract with the Red Cross whereby every week two hundred feet of film taken under their auspices showing their work among American troops on the battlefield of Europe will be shown on the screen. Mr. Cohn said: "At last the public can see duly authenticated films of what fine work the Red Cross is doing at the front. There are so many phases of Red Cross work besides nursing that the films will prove a revelation."

Trade News of the Week

GATHERED BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS

New England Film Trade Doings Last Week

Big Symphony Hall Benefit for Papa Joffre's Children—Film Men Enter National Service—Theater Changes in the Territory.

By Richard Davis Howe, 80 Summer Street, Boston, Mass.

BOSTON, MASS.—Several thousands of dollars were realized at the benefit moving picture performance at Symphony hall in Boston Thursday evening, December 20. The show was under the personal direction of Paul D. Rust, director, and Mrs. Alice Rice Carroll, film executive of the New England Division of Official United States Government Films.

The proceeds of Thursday evening's performance will be given the fund which is now being raised by patriotic organizations to provide a happy Christmas for the 150,000 fatherless children of France. The money will be cabled to Marshal "Papa" Joffre.

Lightless Nights Hamper Boston Theaters.

Boston, Mass.—The motion picture theaters of this city and other sections of Massachusetts will suffer from the recent order of National Fuel Administrator Harry Garfield that Thursday and Sunday evenings be designated as "lightless nights," only lights necessary for safety being allowed to be burned on these evenings. The theatern have been warned not to display electric lights for advertising purposes.

James. J. Storrow, State Fuel Administrator, has received instructions from Washington for two "lightless nights" a week, Thursday and Sunday evenings.

A War Romance in Film Circles.

Boston, Mass.—Announcement has just been made of the engagement of Miss Florence Greene, member of the staff of the Boston office of the Paramount, and sister of Walter E. Greene of the Paramount-Artcraft organization, to J. Lester Reardon, former manager of the local office of the Vitagraph Film Company. Boston and New England film circles were greatly surprised when the announcement was made, as no one had any intimation of the romance. Mr. Reardon, who was subject to the selective draft, enlisted in Uncle Sam's Navy last week and was assigned to the receiving ship at Commonwealth Pier.

John F. Flanagan in Navy.

Boston, Mass.—John Francis Flanagan of the local Select office has joined the naval branch of Uncle Sam's service, having been appointed a second-class storekeeper at the receiving ship at Commonwealth Pier, Boston.

Abraham Barry Joins Navy.

Boston, Mass.—Another member of the Boston film circle who has joined the naval branch of the country's fighting forces is Abraham Barry, booker in the local Paramount exchange. Mr. Barry, whose number would have been called in the next draft quota, enlisted last week and is temporarily located at Chaplain Stone's office at the Charlestown Navy Yard. He is in the yeoman division, but expects to secure a better position later. Mr. Barry is considered to be one of the best bookers in the Boston film district, and has been identified with the motion picture business for more than nine years.

Plaza at Springfield Will Show Vaudeville.

Springfield, Mass.—The management of the Plaza theater, Springfield, has changed its policy of straight moving picture shows to that of pictures and vaudeville, which was its former policy. There are now three Springfield houses using the policy of moving pictures and vaudeville. They are the Plaza, Poli's and the Broadway.

Majestic at Pittsfield Burns.

Pittsfield, Mass.—Fire recently seriously damaged the Majestic theater in this city. The loss was estimated by the police to be over $50,000. J. F. Sullivan, owner of the Empire theater, North Adams, Mass., who controls the Majestic, is now putting on his performances, which consist of moving pictures and vaudeville, in the Grand, which he has leased temporarily until the Majestic can be rebuilt.

G. Hammond Takes Springfield Theater.

Springfield, Mass.—The Bijou theater of Springfield has been taken over by George Hammond, who controls the Suffolk theater in Holyoke, Mass. The Bijou seats 1,100 persons and runs only moving pictures. Manager Cameron of the Suffolk, Holyoke, has been transferred to the Bijou.

J. Roper Opens Theater at Miller's Falls.

Miller's Falls, Mass.—A new theater, the Ross, with a seating capacity of 300, has opened its doors in this town under the management of J. Roper. The policy of the new house is moving pictures.

Sugar Matinee Attracts Crowds.

Boston, Mass.—Tremendous success attended the "Sugar Matinee" conducted last week by Manager A. Montague of the Day Square theater, an East Boston moving picture house.

This unique advertising stunt of Mr. Montague's was conducted in a most orderly manner, none of the great mad rush, which had been expected. A long time before the performance began a line of women, a large number of them carrying children in their arms, formed in front of the theater and along the sidewalk. Every woman attending the afternoon show accompanied by an infant was promised one pound of sugar, which at the present time is a valuable gift.

G. Sharron Will Travel for Foursquare.

Boston, Mass.—The Boston office of the M. H. Hoffman company has appointed George Sharron, former sales representative of the Federal Feature Film to travel in Connecticut selling "Foursquare" features. Mr. Sharron has left on an extended road tour.

Thompsonville Theater Closed.

Springfield, Mass.—The Majestic theater in Thompsonville, Mass., which is owned by Goldstein Brothers of this city, has been sold to the Burbank-Sissisky corporation, formed recently. The corporation closed the Majestic and will in the future devote its energies to the operation of the Franklin theater in that town, which was formerly controlled solely by Mr. Burbank. The Franklin is doing a very good business.

Pine Tree News Letter.

By John P. Flanagan, Park View Avenue, Bangor, Me.

Strand at Gardiner Again Brightens.

GARDINER, ME.—The Strand theater, after being closed since September 15, is to reopen on December 24. Since the Bridge street bridge was swept away and during the building of the new bridge it has been impossible to operate the house, much to the regret of its patrons. Manager Kellar has not been idle, however, and has had the building thoroughly renovated and painted throughout in soft and natural tints, and new linoleum laid in the lobby.

Not only this, but he has also been busy in the film market ,and patrons of the house will see the latest Goldwyn, Metro de Luxe, Triangle, Vitagraph productions, and all the best in the motion picture line. Owing to the war taxes that have been recently imposed the prices will be six and 15 cents in the afternoon and 15 cents to all the evening.

Starting a Circuit of Small Shows.

Douglas Hill, Me.—O. N. Chadbourne, of Douglas Hill, is getting a circuit of towns under way and at present operating once a week at Hiram and West Baldwin, using Paramount and Metro service.

L. W. Carroll is managing the circuit for him. Mr. Carroll was formerly connected with the Lyric at Lancaster, N. H., as owner and manager, and is now manager of the Chadbourne theater at Douglas Hill, Me.

Baltimore Theaters May Curtail Benefits.

Baltimore, Md.—The managers of all the theaters in Baltimore have received copies of the resolutions passed by the United Protective Managers' Association on December 5, and a number of them have been asked that after January 1 they discontinue amalgamated benefits for both war and charity where it is indicated that most of the profits accruing from these affairs fall into the hands of the societies arranging benefits

The U. P. M. A. does not desire individual managers to discontinue benefits which appeal to him. As far as the case stands in Baltimore, and according to the reports, it is thought that little fear need be felt as to the actual amount collected goes for charities, for Gen. Lawrason Riggs, president of the Police Board of Baltimore City, sees to it that every application for a permit to conduct a benefit performance is looked into thoroughly

Maryland Censor Board Earns $10,000

Annual Report Shows Last Year's Expenses Were Far Lower Than Receipts—Board Passed on 4,769 Subjects During the Term.

By J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mt. Royal Terrace. Baltimore, Md.

ALTIMORE, MD.—On Friday, December 14, the report of the Maryland Board of Moving Picture Censors for the year beginning June 1, 1916, and ending May 31, 1917, which is the first year of its operation, was made public and it is shown in the report that the actual earnings of the Maryland board were $10,000 over the running expenses. Every effort was made by the board, so the report has it, to foster educational and artistic pictures; to discourage, and as far as possible, prohibit immoral or vulgar ones. The report, which gives a detailed statement of the year's work, was prepared by Mrs. Marguerite E. Harrison, secretary of the board, of which part follows:

"The report of the first year's work of the Maryland State Board of Motion Picture Censors shows that during the period from June 1, 1916, to May 31, 1917, the total number of reels submitted for examination was 10,739 originals and 422 duplicates, comprising 4,769 subjects. The office recipts were $22,016.25, of which $8,050 was turned over to the state and $593.39 carried over to the next year. The running expenses of the office were $11,913.99, the sum of $1,458.87 spent on permanent equipment being an expense that will not occur again. Therefore the actual earnings of the board over and above the running expenses approximated $10,000 in spite of the fact that the report does not actually cover a normal year's work."

Maritime Theater Men Aid Stricken Halifax

Imperial Theater at St. John Gives Gross Receipts of Whole Week—Damage to Halifax Theaters—Effect on Local Trade.

From Alice Fairweather, Standard, St. John, N. B.

ST. JOHN, N. B.—The disaster at Halifax has cast a gloom over all amusements for a time and the holiday season drawing near naturally takes away many patrons from the theaters. However, the attendance keeps up wonderfully well, and the many benefits given for the sufferers have attracted large audiences.

The Imperial theater had fine crowds all week. "The gross receipts for Halifax" was the slogan, and a substantial sum will be handed the relief committee. The Famous Players donated their three fine films shown, "Double Crossed," "Barbary Sheep" and "Lost in Transit." The Vitagraph and Regal Film companies also donated their films, which were used during the week. The Imperial was also used during the week for a lecture given by Mary Boyle O'Reilly after hours, which netted a large sum of money for Halifax.

How the Disaster Has Affected the Film Business.

St. John men in the stricken city were G. A. Margetts, of the Canadian Universal, who was in the city on business and had just succeeded in closing up some contracts on several state rights features. Mr. Margetts immediately joined the Relief Committee and was a tireless worker and gave great help in the emergency.

R. G. March was in train which left St. John Wednesday night and which, fortunately, was halted outside the city in time to escape the destruction of the North Station. With L. E. Ouimet, of the Specialty Film Import, Mr. March returned to Halifax later and obtained some films, which will be shown in the Imperial theater this week. Other cameramen there included a Universal man from New York and M. Morrison of the Pathe Co., New York.

J. Kauffman, of the Globe Films, was in the city but I have not been able to get his story from him as yet. J. Aubrey, of the General Film Company, was in Halifax at the time of the explosion.

Some idea of the damage done in the stricken city may be learned from the following facts: None of the theater men were personally injured as far as could be learned. The loss they sustained was either to their theaters or personal property.

For some time anxiety was felt over Mr. Wall, the genial censor of N. S., but it was learned that he was out of the city at the time and returned to find his home wrecked, so took his family to relatives in an adjoining town. His friends spent some anxious moments, for "Daddy Wall" is a most popular man.

Damage to Halifax Theaters.

The Casino theater was hard hit. The entrance was blown in and the partition separating the entrance to the Auditorium was destroyed. The stage door was blown across the stage, destroying scenery and musical instruments, besides damage done to skylights and other parts of the building.

The Empire theater suffered damage to the roof and the whole rear was blown in carrying the wall, stage setting and screen across the stage. The doors were blown off their hinges and the whole building has been condemned by the authorities.

The King Edward was badly damaged inside, a piece of the roof blown in, the curtain torn and the side wall bulged.

The Orpheus theater was at one time a church, and the space which was at one time one of the large windows, had been boarded and bricked up. This was blown in across the seats, ruining a number. The entrance doors were all blown off their hinges The glass chandeliers were badly broken, but strange to say, some sixty mirrors were left intact.

The Strand, Ackers' Family theater and the Imperial suffered least. The doors of the Strand were blown in. At Acker's one of the beams supporting the ceiling is cracked, the doors and windows broken. The Imperial also has damaged doors and windows with the entrance a little broken up.

The theaters will be closed for at least a month or six weeks, and thus the film companies will suffer as well as the theater owners.

Items Worth Noting.

St. John, N. B.—F. G. Spencer is doing well with special pictures. "Redemption" ran for a week to good houses. For this coming week (Dec. 17) "God's Good Man" is the attraction for the first three days.

The Unique gave a good program two days this week—a Chaplin comedy, "The Champion," "The Seven Pearls," serial, and a Pathe scenic.

A. B. Farmer, of the Star, has booked "The Seven Pearls" and "The Fatal Ring" from R. C. March, of the Specialty Film Import. Mr. Farmer broke all records for attendance with "The Neglected Wife."

The Gaiety theater, T. J. O'Rourke, has again been given for a benefit performance for the Red Cross Societies of Fairville.

J. P. O'Loghlin, manager of the Metro, reports that the following theaters have booked the new Chaplin and Petrova productions: Imperial, St. John; Casino, Halifax; Empire, Halifax; Imperial, Halifax; Strand, Truro; N. W. Mason, New Glasgow; Opera House, Pictou; Casino, Sydney; Savoy, Glace Bay; Bijou, New Waterford; Family, North Sydney; Premier, Sydney Mines; Imperial, Windsor, N. S.; Nicklet, Kentville; Opera House, Liverpool, and Dreamland, Moncton.

Ferdinand Turner Visits in Baltimore.

Baltimore, Md.—Ferdinand Turner, at one time assistant manager of Loew's Hippodrome in Baltimore, with George M. McDernitt, the present manager, visited friends here last week. Mr. Turner opened a new theater for Mr. Loew in New Orleans, La., a short time ago and is now on his way to Hamilton, Ont., to manage a new Loew theater which will shortly be opened in that city.

Many More Sunday Benefits.

Baltimore, Md.—At two monster benefits, which were held at the Parkway theater, 3-9 West North avenue, on Sunday afternoon and night, December 16, for the benefit of the Red Cross drive, 1,000 members were gained at the occasion and $1,500 was donated to the cause, as many of those who took out memberships joined more than once. The big picture on the program was "Over There," with Charles Richman.

That the Knights of Columbus might continue supplying entertainment for the men at Camp Meade, benefits were held on Sunday night, December 16, and the following theaters were included in the listing in giving their aid: Auditorium, F. C. Schanberger, manager; Academy of Music, Harry A. Henkel, manager; Schanze's, Dr. F. W. Schanze, proprietor; Walbrook, Thomas D. Goldberg, manager; McHenry, Bernard Depkin, Jr., manager; Red Wing, George Geardner, manager; Grand, Charles S. Anderson, manager.

An attractive program was arranged by L. A. DeHoff for the New theater on Sunday night, December 16, when a benefit performance was given under the auspices of the Ladies' Auxiliary of the Fourth Company, Maryland Coast Artillery. An appeal was made by Isador Goldstrom. Emily Stevens in "The Slacker" was the attraction.

On this same day, from 3 p. m. until 10:30 p. m., Levine Brothers, proprietors of the Little Pickwick theater, 312 West Lexington street, gave a benefit performance for the boys in Company I, 313th Infantry, at Camp Meade. The feature shown was "The Upper Crust" with Gail Kane.

Out-of-Town News.

Frostburg, Md.—Early on the morning of Friday, December 14, a furious fire occurred in this city in the business district which caused a loss of nearly $200,000. The new Lyric theater building was greatly damaged. The theater is manager by A. C. Frey.

Eagle Mountain, Va.—H. S. Henderson of this city will rebuild the structure owned by him and recently damaged by fire as a theater, for which plans have been drawn up by Charles Henderson. It will measure 30 by 60 feet and be built of brick and concrete and will cost approximately $1,800.

Some Reasons for the Parcel Post Delays

Pittsburgh Post Office Official Tells F. I. L. M. Club How Shippers Are Often at Fault in Using the Mails—Causes for the Delays.

From Pittsburgh News Service, 405 Fourth Avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa.

PITTSBURGH, PA.—Delays in film shipments, one of the most vital problems confronting exhibitors and exchange men at the present time, was the chief topic of discussion at a meeting of the Pittsburgh F. I. L. M. Club, Tuesday, December 18. It was pointed out that the delays and disappointments as a result of the congestion of express, and the inexperience of the trade as a whole in the matter of parcel post shipments, results also in costly irregularities in this method of transporation, and has thrown the shipping departments of the various exchanges of this city into a turmoil which can only be alleviated by prompt action on the part of exchange men and the complete cooperation of the exhibitors.

With the object of ascertaining the best methods of securing the desired results in the parcel post department of the post office, the F. I. L. M. Club secured Mr. Heart, of the Pittsburgh post office, to make an address on this subject. Some of the chief causes of delay, as pointed out by Mr. Heart, are the following: Illegibility of address, insecure wrapping, loose labels, and insuffcient postage. The last mentioned is the most serious, Mr. Heart said, as the films are held for the necessary postage at the post office until the shipper is notified, by mail, which consumes much valuable time.

In order to avoid disputes as to time of mailing films, the exhibitor is allowed to write the time of sending on the label without any additional postage. Mr. Heart urged that careful exhibitors take advantage of this ruling.

J. L. Ellman Will Manage Wolfberg Office.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—J. L. Ellman, for the past few months publicity director of the Harris P. Wolfberg Attractions, has been appointed manager of the home office, Lyceum building, Pittsburgh. Mr. Ellman is a former well-known advertising man, and has acquired wide experience in the film business since joining the Wolfberg organziation. He succeeds Howard Stahler, who is now in Maryland working up that newly acquired territory with "The Crisis." The Wolfberg Attractions is also securing excellent results with "The Mad Lover," "Today," "Persuasive Peggy" and "The Deemster," now being handled in the Ohio and Western Pennsylvania territory, Mr. Ellman reports.

Another important addition has been made to the Harris P. Wolfberg sales staff in the person of C. R. N. Morris. Mr. Morris, who will work out of the Cleveland office, will confine his attention to the central and northern part of Ohio.

Ten Prints of "Ignorance" Sold.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The United Business Association of Pennsylvania, 804 Penn avenue, Pittsburgh, reports closing a big deal whereby it has sold ten prints of "Ignorance," a six-reel photodrama featuring Earle Metcalf, to firms in England and France. Manager C. F. Michaels reports that this picture is proving a great success all over the United States, and it is predicted that it will be just as scucessful in other parts of the world. The United is negotiating for several other important subjects to be handled on a similar basis.

First National Circuit Gets More Film.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The First National Exhibitors' Circuit exchange, Westinghouse building, Pittsburgh, has just announced the purchase of two additional big features for this territory. They are George Loane Tucker's "Mother" and Edgar Lewis' second production, "The Sign Invisible." Manager Charles F. Schwerin reports that much interest is being displayed in these new offerings, as well as in the big subjects already released.

"The Warrior," featuring Maciste, the giant of "Cabiria," and handled by the First National Exhibitors' exchange, in Pittsburgh, played to capacity business the entire week of December 17 at the Columbia theater, Fifth avenue. This production has been booked by every house in the Rowland & Clark chain in this city for showing in the near future.

V. H. Hodap, Inc., Formed.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—M. Feitler, a well-known exhibitor of this city and proprietor of the Elmore theater, has joined with V. H. Hodap, formerly special representative for Pathe and one of the best known film men in the country, for the formation of a new feature distributing concern to be known as V. H. Hodap, Inc. Mr. Hodap is president and Mr. Feitler is vice-president, the other officers to be chosen later. Headquarters will be established soon in Pittsburgh.

The new company announces that it will confine its operations to the western and middle western states. The initial releases handled will be the Ivan pictures. The first office of the company was opened in Indianapolis, Ind., the week of December 17, both Mr. Hodap and Mr. Feitler having gone to that city to establish the branch.

Big Jitney House Proves a Failure.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Empire theater, a 3,000-seat house in the East Liberty district of Pittsburgh, which has been showing photoplays for the past six weeks, with an admission price of 5 cents and no war tax, has announced that it will change its policy the week of December 24 to musical comedies. The management of the Empire states that the experiment with a view to bringing back to popularity low-priced film attractions has proven a failure.

G. R. Ainsworth Joins Select.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Guy R. Ainsworth, a well-known Pittsburgh film man, who has been in Kansas City, Mo., for the past six months, has returned to this city and has joined the local staff of the Select Pictures, Film Exchange building. Mr. Ainsworth will act as assistant to Manager Harvey B. Day, and will also travel occasionally out of this office. Mr. Ainsworth's host of friends in the trade welcome him back to Pittsburgh.

William Wood Will Travel for Fox.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—William Wood, a pioneer film salesman, formerly of Syracuse, N. Y., has been added to the road staff of the Fox exchange in Pittsburgh. Mr. Wood received his early film experience in this city with the old Davis exchange here, ten years ago, and is considered a valuable acquisition. Miss Blanche Bunting, formerly bookkeeper at the Fox exchange, has been promoted to booker.

Liberty Theater Will Have More Seats.

Johnstown, Pa.—The Liberty theater, Johnstown, Pa., recently taken over by Louis Lambrino, and reopened several weeks ago, is to be enlarged from 300 to 750 seats. Initial business at the Liberty has been very gratifying, Manager George C. Knox states, and the improvement increasing the capacity will be made in the early spring.

Buys Six New "Italian Battlefront" Prints.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Fort Pitt Film exchange, Penn avenue and seventh street, Pittsburgh, has just received six new prints of "The Italian Battle Front," the official Italian war films. That the demand for this subject is large in this territory is indicated by the fact that this exchange has seven prints now working solid. "The Italian Battle Front" was shown the entire week of December 17 at the Columbia theater, Erie, Pa., to big business. Manager Norman S. Carroll, of the Fort Pitt exchange, announces that in the near future several new film productions of unusual magnitude will be released by that firm.

Interesting Short Bits.

Clarion, Pa.—The large and attractive Orpheum theater, Clarion, Pa., has contracted for the entire output of Artcraft and Paramount pictures.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Wallace Reid, the celebrated Paramount star, paid a personal visit to a number of Pittsburgh picture theaters Monday, December 17. Mr. Reid was tendered a royal welcome by local picture fans, standing room at all houses where he appeared being at a premium.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—The Rowland & Clark theaters, Pittsburgh, has successfully solved the problem of the shortage of pennies. They announced that all children bringing 50 pennies to any of their theaters would receive a new half-dollar and free admission.

Philadelphia News Letter

From F. V. Armato, 144 North Salford St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Wallace Reid Heartily Welcomed.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—Wallace Reid, the Paramount star who is on a transcontinental tour, arrived in Philadelphia Monday, December 17, and took the town by storm. His increasing popularity was in evidence in ever yplace he appeared Wm. E. Smith, president of the Famous Players excahnge and local distributor of the Paramount and Artcraft pictures, tendered Mr. Reed a dinner at the Bellevue-Stratford hotel, to which the representatives of the daily newspapers and the trade magazines were invited. Wallace Reid proved himself a good fellow and also good company.

Charles Henschel, publicity manager for the local Paramount, who was in charge of the arrangements, displayed excellent judgment and the plans went through without a hitch.

The Stanley was the first theater visited, and he received a royal reception. He also appeared at the Fairmount, Liberty, Ridge Avenue, Bluebird and in a few Camden theaters.

David Korson Now a Soldier.

Philadelphia, Pa.—David Korson, film salesman for the Bluebird exchange, has enlisted in the United States Army and left Friday, Dec. 14, for Fort Slocum, New York, with the latest quota of reserves. He is 22 years of age, and married nearly one year.

J. Becker and Brothers Take Two More.

Philadelphia, Pa.—J. Becker and Brothers, pioneer exhibitors, and three of the most successful theater owners and managers in the downtown district, have just taken over two more theaters, which were formerly owned by M. J. McCartney, namely, the Empire and the Richmond, both of which are located in Kensington.

The Empire, after having its front remodeled and its interior redecorated, will start with a new policy about the first of the year, giving vaudeville acts in conjunction with pictures. At the Richmond, which is undergoing extensive alterations and decorations, a new organ of the latest type will be installed.

A Successful Distributor of Films.

Philadelphia, Pa.—It has always been said that the successful men in large enterprises are those who have had the courage and confidence of their own convictions. That indomitable individual, William E. Smith, distributor of the Artcraft and Paramount pictures in Philadelphia, is one of these. Shortly after the silent drama made its appearance Mr. Smith embarked in the business of showing pictures. His first undertaking in the industry was the Chelsea theater, at No. 40 Flatbush avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y. This pretentious structure, with its beautiful interior and exterior was the expression of Mr. Smith's ideas. He was responsible for it to the very minutest detail. Many of these ideas are still in vogue in most of our newest and handsomest theaters.

W. E. Smith.

Step by step, with sheer determination and unlimited energy, we find Mr. Smith occupying to-day a position of distinction and honor. As one of the pioneers in this vast industry, the guiding hand of this wizard of the silent drama is still being wielded with wide influence. Paramount and Artcraft pictures are synonymous with the highest quality. Mr. Smith has always endeavored to give to his exhibitors the best the skill and brains of the industry could produce. Possessed of a magnetic personality, Mr. Smith enjoys the unique distinction of winning the respect and friendship of all exhibitors who come in contact with him.

Business Jottings and Personals.

Philadelphia, Pa.—A private review of a remarkable set of motion pictures made on the recent Revolution in Russia was given at Keith's theater Sunday, Dec. 16. The pictures were made by Capt. Donald Thompson, war correspondent of Leslie's Weekly.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Triangle Distributing Corporation gave a private exhibition of two of their productions at the Belmont theater Dec. 16. The first was "Because of a Woman." The second was "Until They Get Me," and also pleased the spectators.

Philadelphia, Pa.—V. R. Carrick, local distributor of the Bluebird features, has donated his services and automobile each Wednesday of every week to the Red Cross.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Wm. Crozier, of the Logan Auditorium, has arranged a novelty method of inducing the children to attend his special Holiday shows. He will give thrift coupons to the children who send in the best essays written about his feature photoplays.

Philadelphia, Pa.—During a heavy snowstorm last week, G. Sullivan, manager of the Belmont, borrowed a whist broom from a neighboring barber and had an attendant whisk off the sonw from his patrons hats and coats as they entered. Have to give him credit for his good service and good sense anyway.

Theaters Close Because of Fuel Famine

Western New York Exhibitors Save Money by Not Running Cold Houses—Two Lightless Nights Observed in Buffalo.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—Moving picture theaters of Western New York are feeling the shortage of coal and gas and a few are likely to be dark all or part of the time during the next two months.

The Peerless theater of Cuba, N. Y., for instance, will remain closed until spring. The fuel shortage is the cause. It is reported that for the same reason the Park theater of Silver Creek, N. Y., is now showing only two days a week, instead of every day, as heretofore. Film fans remember how comfortable their favorite houses used to be in the winter time up to about a year ago, and now prefer to remain at home to experiencing the discomforts of a theater "as cold as a barn." Small attendance results and some of the exhibitors conclude that they would be saving money if they kept their houses dark until spring.

Buffalo theaters are also observing "lightless nights" on Thursday and Sunday evenings. This means that all exterior lights are extinguished for the entire time on these days. This is in accord with the latest instructions of Fuel Administrator Garfield. Slides announcing this new rule are being shown in some of the houses. "Business as usual" is the additional information appearing on the slides.

C. C. Charles Heads Buffalo Victor Film.

Buffalo, N. Y.—C. C. Charles has been appointed manager of the Victor Film Service, Buffalo. He was manager of the Universal office in Albany for the past two years and was formerly assistant manager of the Buffalo office. The Victor Service is now handling the Universal output, the Bluebird, Jewell and the Alice Howell films through the state. The selling of this entire output is under the direction of F. S. Hopkins, sales manager, formerly manager of the Bluebird in this territory. The Victor now has eight road men, who are specializing on the different services. Two salesmen recently appointed are B. Mahler and H. M. Reed. Lee Langdon, booker for the Rex exchange, Albany, for the past six years, has been transferred to the Victor Film, Buffalo. He will continue to look after the booking of the eastern part of the state.

A. Carrick Goes to Goldwyn.

Buffalo, N. Y.—A. Carrick, formerly with the Fox Film, Syracuse, has been appointed traveling representative by George A. Hickey, Goldwyn manager, Buffalo. Mr. Hickey has signed a new Goldwyn contract with the Regent theater, Rochester.

"'The Auction Block' is going over big and exhibitors are enthusiastically looking forward to the first showing of 'Thais,' featuring Mary Garden," said Mr. Hickey.

H. S. Lavner, special publicity man for the Goldwyn, is planting pages of peppery copy in the newspapers of Buffalo and Western New York in connection with "Thais" and "The Cinderella Man." He was formerly manager and press agent for Selwyn & Co.'s "Fair and Warmer" company. He received his newspaper experience in this city and was a member of the Buffalo Press club.

Stage Sets at Shea's Show Brains.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Originality marks the special stage settings which Harold B. Franklin, manager of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, is offering his patrons. A different scene is depicted each week. One setting represented the spirit with which America has entered the war. There was the figure of a Yankee soldier, with "Liberty" placing her protecting hand on his shoulder. Across the figure of "Liberty" was the word "Right," which was visible from any part of the house. Another setting was the British tanks, which occupied nearly the entire stage. By means of a steam effect the guns were represented in action. Even the rivets in this modern war monster could be seen. Mr. Franklin carefully studied the best photographs of the tanks before he began work on the set. Of course he did not let Thanksgiving week go by without a huge turkey on the stage. This was of the "canvas-back" variety, but in appearance was none the less appetizing. For Mr. Franklin's Christmas and New Year's settings he has the assistance of the Hippodrome's electrical specialist and sign writer in working out some ingenious bit of stagecraft. It is going to be worth seeing.

Cleveland News Letter

Two Hundred Orphans Enjoy Xmas Show.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—Two hundred orphans were treated to a great Christmas celebration at the Denison Square Theater, Cleveland, Ohio, Christmas afternoon, when Managers Schuman and Fine opened the house to them.

The orphans were from the Jones Home, near the theater. They marched to the theater at 2 p. m. and sat in reserved seats. During the afternoon, there was a big Christmas tree and a Santa Claus on the stage, and when they left the theater a fine big stocking of candy, nuts and toys was given to each child.

These were furnished by the merchants in the vicinity of the theater.

New Theater at Elyria Opens.

Elyria, Ohio.—The New Rialto theater was opened Thursday, December 20, thus adding to the list of first class photoplay houses of Elyria.

This theater was under the management of Melton Phelos and he arranged an excellent opening bill, including among his star features William S. Hart and Fatty Arbuckle.

There was a banquet for invited guests at 9:15 at the Elks club, at which the other theater managers of the city and visiting film men were present. At the conclusion of the banquet there was a private theater party.

Indications of Local Business Conditions

Cleveland, O.—The Cleveland branch of the United Theater Equipment Corporation was a very busy place the week before Christmas when shipments were made for three installations of Power's machines.

Two Six B projectors were shipped to the New Liberty theater, Akron, and two to the Grand theater, Marion, O.

In addition the Olympic theater, one of the finest in Steubenville, Ohio, bought another Power's machine.

Manager H. J. Mandelbaum reports that in spite of the general depression of business, many exhibitors are installing new equipment and preparing for a resumption of big business after the holidays.

As a further indication of the business conditions in Cleveland and northern Ohio, the issue of the Cleveland Plain Dealer of Sunday, December 16, is cited. In this paper were ten theaters advertised for sale, many of them at reduced prices.

Exhibitors Protest Lightless Nights

Sunday Nights Are Best in Week for Theaters and the No Illumination Order Is Really Discrimination—Theaters No Slackers in Service.

By Ohio Valley News Service, 1404 Starks Bldg., Louisville, Ky.

LOUISVILE, KY.—Louisville moving picture exhibitors are patriots. Kentucky moving picture exhibitors are patriots. Ever since the United States entered the war they have, with hardly an exception, met every single request made of them by the Government and by Government agencies.

They have opened their theaters to the "Four-Minute-Men." They have run slides boosting the two Liberty Loan Bond issues. They have run more slides urging Kentuckians to enroll in the American Red Cross. They have run them sevpaign on. They have preached fuel conservation and wheatless days and meatless days. They have used slides to urge enlistment. They have used slides to boost the thrift stamps. They have submitted gracefully to additional taxes. Whenever there was a Government campaign on or a campaign to boost war measures, the exhibitors have been Johnnies right on the spot to do every reasonable thing asked of them.

Now comes the lightless days order of the Fuel Administrator instructing them to darken up their fronts on Sunday nights, the best night in the whole week, and collectively the best fifty-two nights in the year. It is all right, they suppose, but they hardly see why the biggest part of this additional burden should fall on them. They are very willing to darken any and all signs and any and all lights not absolutely necessary to normal conduct of busines on any two nights in the week, with the exception of Sunday night, and according to Lee S. Goldberg, who is chairman of the exhibitors' committee which is looking after the wartime end of their activities, they are going to protest against the order as it relates to Sunday nights, and to request that it be changed so as to apply to two of the week-day nights.

It is pointed out on behalf of the exhibitors, that the principal Sunday night downtown activities are due to them. With the exception of the drug stores and the confectioners and tobacco stands, nobody else is open. It is the one universal holiday of the week and the day and night when thousands do their turns at the moving picture theaters. On these nights, as noted, most of the other businesses are suspended. If the purpose of the order is to save coal, not as much, by far, would be saved by an all-dark program on Sunday night as on a week-day night, while if the purpose is to impress the people with the fact that the nation is at war, other nights would do as well, for there are more people abroad on other nights than Sundays. There can be no questioning of the fact that the moving picture exhibitors are ready and willing to do their full part in supporting the Government—they have shown that. But they do feel that all the objects sought by the "all-dark" order can be every bit as well obtained by pulling switches on two week-day nights, at which times the provedly loyal picture men will not have to submit to restrictions which are not shared by all businesses alike.

Insurance Agreement Helps Small Town Theaters.

Louisville, Ky.—All of the moving picture exhibitors with theaters in the so-called sixth-class towns of Kentucky are beneficiaries, together with the business men of those places, in a recent fire insurance order. Two years ago the state and the fire insurance companies reached an agreement, which was to run two years, as to insurance rates applying to property of this class. In the winter of 1916 a new insurance code was enacted by the state authorizing an increase of 20 per cent. in the fire insurance rates on business property in the sixth class or unprotected towns. Thereafter the insurance organizations began rerating this property and in thirty-one towns are said to have made an advance of not 20 per cent., but of 36 per cent. The storm that developed has been settled by the insurance companies agreeing to let the old rates remain as provided for in the original agreement, or until next June, after which a permanent arrangement can be made.

Ready for Good Business Next Year.

Louisville, Ky.—All of the Louisville exhibitors are ready for the big volume of business which will follow Christmas. Special efforts have been made by all of them to obtain especially attractive programs and usually good features and they are waiting for the holiday crowds with every belief that they will show them something good. Special and seasonable musical programs are being worked up for the holiday theater crowds and one of the biggest seasons in the history of the business in Louisville is looked for.

Lee Goldberg Now in His New Office.

Louisville, Ky.—Business is good with Lee S. Goldberg, manager of the Big Features Rights Corporation, which is now comfortably and efficiently housed on the third floor of the Rex Theater building. Mr. Goldberg just received two new films, Florence Reed in "Today" and Margaret Warwick in "The Mad Lover," which were screened at the Walnut before an appreciative group of Louisville exhibitors. Both are seven-reel features. On a recent screening of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit film, "Alimony," for exhibitors at the Walnut, it was at once booked for a week run at that theater. The new Chaplin films will be received by the first of the year.

Louisville Keith Theater Notes.

Louisville, Ky.—"Big time" vaudeville is now assured at the Mary Anderson theater in Louisville and that house is now done for as a moving picture theater so far as the near future is concerned. It is likely that during the summers it will be converted for two or three months into a picture house, just to keep things going, but hereafter the plan of the Keith interests is to make it exclusively a first-class vaudeville house.

All three of Keith houses here have been very prosperous during the last several years and the Keith interests have at last made good with the old Masonic theater. One after another organization has in year's past given it up as a forlorn hope, but under the direction of Lee S. Goldberg and his brother, Joe Goldberg, it has come to the front.

The Strand continues as exclusively a moving picture house, while the other two houses will each run pictures as one number of their programs, the Mary Anderson showing twice a day and Keith's continuing the present policy of three programs a day.

Louisville Business Notes.

The new so-called "regular" theater at Camp Zachary Taylor, outside of Louisville, has been opened. Moving pictures and five to seven acts of vaudeville compose the usual programs, the theater opening at 6:30 with pictures and closing at 8:30 or 9 o'clock. Franklin J. Gray, physical director for the Y. M. C. A. camp forces, is manager and the bookings are made through the general Y. M. C. A. organization.

Since the 7th of December the thermometer in Louisville has been below freezing, a most unusual record, and accordingly a bad omen for business. Kentuckians are not used to temperatures of that kind and very often stay inside to avoid them.

Kentucky Notes.

Scottsville, Ky.—The Dixie theater at Scottsdale, Ky., recently overhauled and reequipped, has opened what the local paper calls a "real picture house." On a recent Saturday 5 per cent. of the box office receipts were turned in to the Red Cross.

Maysville, Ky.—Master Milton Russell, son of Thomas M. Russell, of Maysville, Ky., claims the distinction of being the youngest exhibitor and manager in the state. Under his direction the Gem theater is doing a good business.

Dayton and Miami Valley Still Shivering

Lack of Coal the Big Problem—Some Suburban Houses Decrease Coal to Save Money Loss—A Free and Easy Supply System.

By Our Dayton Correspondent.

DAYTON, OHIO.—Business holds up at a few of the downtown Dayton houses, while the suburban theaters suffer by reason of the present cold wave in the Miami Valley.

The entire Miami Valley in which Dayton stands is still in the grip of the cold spell and business is suffering accordingly. There is quite a bit of worry among local managers who heat with coal as to whether or not the supply will last, and the man who has enough coal now is indeed lucky.

A few of the suburban managers are considering closing their houses for the first three days of the week as a means of saving money. After making the rounds of the suburban houses on Monday, December 17, the writer decided that every one must be staying home, for it was a poor night.

None of the houses are having trouble getting their shows from Cincinnati, as they did at the start of the present cold spell. Last Monday A. L. Kinsler was forced to go to the Union station here for his shipment of films. He found that the films were not there and as a result disappointed many patrons and would have been forced to close save for a five reel feature he could use. Upon investigation the writer found that another manager had not received his shipment and had lifted Kinsler's and after using the show shipped it to the exchange without notifying him. No names will be mentioned, but the writer knows of another case exactly like this. It seems like a case of first come first served or rather a survival of the fittest.

Halifax Once Helped Out Dayton.

Dayton, O.—The pictures of the recent Halifax disaster played at the Columbia theater here last week proved a good thing for the relief fund that was being raised by the Dayton News. Many subscriptions were received by reason of this showing. At this writing the fund had passed well over three thousand dollars. Many Daytonians are subscribing to this worthy cause because of the kind way they were treated by residents of Halifax after the 1913 flood, when they sent many carloads of food to Dayton. Verily one good turn deserves another.

Gossipy Short Notes from Dayton.

Dayton, O.—Myrtle Stedman, well known picture star, was at the Columbia theater here last week for three days, in which time she personally appeared following every performance at the Columbia and rendered several vocal numbers.

Myrtle Stedman, picture star sang at the regular meeting of the Kiwanis club at the Miami hotel in Dayton and entertained the members royally. Many were surprised to learn that Miss Stedman was such an accomplished vocalist.

The Alhambra theater, Dayton, has enough coal for about two weeks. After that time Bert Fiala will have to hustle to get the "black diamonds." He and A. L. Kinsler are seen constantly touring the town in search of coal.

As the city has taken over the distribution of coal, one individual can only purchase a ton at a time. Bert and Al are trying to double up at the municipal stations.

While the Strand at Dayton played "Bab's Matinee Idol" the Alhambra had "The Amazons," both with Marguerite Clark.

The report is confirmed by John Seifert that the Ideal, Dayton, is to play the Metro program as well as the Fox program. Both of these started last week (six days after this writing). What next, Mr. Seifert?

Dick Burrowes has been elected president of the G. I. M. M. E. club.

Val Rayburg of Dayton continues with second run Paramount and Artcraft as well as some of the Mutual big star features. Business good (personal observation).

Paul Krieger alias Foursquare at Dayton has not been heard from lately. Why the silence, Paul?

Clay Brehm at the Strand, Dayton, seemed very pleased to say that this house is pulling through the cold spell wonderfully. "We have plenty of heat," stated Clay, "and also plenty of business." What more could one wish for in these days of strife?

TORONTO NOTES.

Holman Theater Reopens.

Montreal, Que.—The Holman theater, Montreal, opened under new management on Sunday, December 16, with a Frohman production, "Please Help Emily" as the feature. It has been decided to change programs in future on Sundays and Wednesdays, while the price for admission for both matinee and evening performances has been placed at 10c, with the exception of Saturdays, Sundays and holidays, when the admissions will be 15c and 10c. It will be the policy of the new directors to present first run pictures only.

A. C. Ryan Goes to Globe.

Winnipeg, Man.—Announcement is also made by Globe Films, Limited, that A. C. Ryan of the Perkins Electric Company, Canadian distributors of a wide variety of picture theater equipment, has become assistant manager of the Winnipeg branch of the Globe company.

Osborne Theater at Winnipeg Burns.

Winnipeg, Man.—The Osborne theater, Winnipeg, owned by M. J. Williams, was destroyed by fire early in the morning of December 12 from an unknown cause. The property loss was placed at $42,000. Among the pictures which were destroyed were the Fox feature, "The Price of Silence" and an episode of "Gloria's Romance."

Business Notes of Interest.

Toronto, Ont.—Chandos Brenon, brother of Herbert Brenon, recently made a visit to Toronto in connection with business pertaining to the Herbert Brenon Film Corporation.

Wingham, Ont.—L. Kennedy, owner of the Lyceum theater, Wingham, Ontario, closed the Model theater, Goderich, which he took over recently, in order to remodel the house.

Theater Circuit for Hospitals in Canada

Five Substantial Buildings Ready to Show Film to Convalescent Soldiers—Get Latest Releases—Returned Soldiers as Operators.

By W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard Street Ea st, Toronto.

TORONTO, ONTARIO.—A development of the war with respect to moving pictures has been the establishment of a circuit of moving picture theaters throughout Canada for wounded soldiers who have been returned to the Dominion. Five substantial buildings have already been constructed for the purpose by the Military Hospitals Commission and more are contemplated. In addition, concert halls and large rooms in various institutions have been converted to the purpose of picture projection. Four of the new theaters have been erected in Ontario, while the fifth is found at Fredericton, New Brunswick. These houses, which are completely equipped with donated projection machines and other mechanical details, accommodate from 500 to 1,200 persons, the largest theater being located at the Military Convalescent Hospital, Whitby, Ontario. The second largest, seating 800, is found at the Guelph, Ontario, Military Convalescent Hospital. The other three, of 500 seating capacity, have been built at Fredericton, Cobourg and Davisville, the latter place being a suburb of Toronto.

These theaters receive the latest releases regularly from exchange companies and the Canadian exchanges also supply reels for the recreation halls in scattered institutions as above described. In some instances the military theaters have been placed on a "loop" with ordinary theaters in nearby cities or towns, but the commission is not charged for this service, of course.

The projection is invariably in the hands of a returned soldier who was a qualified operator before the war or who has taken advantage of the opportunity to learn the work at the re-educational schools of the commission to fit himself for employment after his final discharge from the army.

This development is highly interesting in view of the probable necessity for the establishment of military hospital theaters in the United States within a year or two. American government officials have already inspected the Canadian hospital facilities with a view to the adoption of similar or improved methods in the States.

Bert Mason in Specialty Photographic Department.

Montreal, Que.—Bert Mason has resigned from the General Film Company to take up a position in the photographic department of the Specialty Film Import, Limited, Montreal, Canadian Pathe distributors.

Patrons Took Old Films for New.

Toronto, Ontario.—The Toronto correspondent of Moving Picture World recently witnessed a screen show in a local downtown house that was remarkable in several respects. On the one bill was Mae Murray, Mary Pickford, H. B. Walthall, Lionel Barrymore, Harry Cary, Kathlyn Williams, Charles Chaplin, Edna Purviance and goodness knows how many more film veterans. Two of the pictures were directed by D. W. Griffiths. The show formed a revival of subjects from three to eight years old and among them were two historic Biographs, one of which was entitled, "An Adventure in the Autumn Woods." Charlie Chaplin appeared in "A Jitney Elopement" and there was a single reel Biograph in which Pickford and Walthall were the unannounced stars. Mae Murray, Barrymore and Cary were in the cast of a two reeler, the subject of which got by the writer.

One of the remarkable features of the performance was the fact that practically all the patrons accepted the pictures as recent releases. A young lady seated near the writer remarked that she had not seen Kathlyn Williams in a picture for years. It was interesting to watch the spectators at this show—as much so as to see the old pictures themselves. This unusual program was presented at the Globe theater by Manager Pomeroy by way of variance. The condition of the film was good, considering their age.

Manager Pomeroy Has Interesting Photographs.

Toronto, Ont.—Manager Harry Pomeroy, of the Globe theater, Toronto, who began building special fronts for theaters four years ago in Buffalo, has an interesting collection of photographs which show the progress he has made in lobby displays during his lively career. Probably his best effort was the transformation of the Globe front for Vitagraph's "Vengeance and the Woman." The whole theater resembled a railway depot, with the ticket-seller disposing of pasteboards through the rear of a passenger coach. In place of poster sheets, Pomeroy arranged "time tables" on which were listed the various pictures on the program, while a large clock gave the hours of departure for the next show. The doormen were dressed like conductors, and there was a pullman porter on duty. Passengers entered the house through gates, and the fare for the round trip, according to an appropriate sign, was 15 cents. The lady ushers were garbed as locomotive belles. Ouch!

Interesting War News Serial.

Toronto, Ont.—With forty screen slides which had been used to advertise coming attractions, Manager Mitchell of the Regent theater, Toronto, made a very interesting exhibit in the foyer of the house, which is one of Toronto's finest. The slides were arranged in regular order in a large gilt frame and were backed with ground glass to diffuse the rays from a light box in the rear. Many patrons stopped to look over the illuminated slides. The display served to emphasize the high quality of all attractions at this house.

One of the most interesting releases at the Regent is a news serial, "The History of the War," which is to cover a period of fifteen weeks in single reel instalments. Views from the very start of the war, including initial disturbances and mobilizations, which have just been released by the British War Office, are being shown for the first time. Each reel deals with one particular development of hostilities and scenes in Germany have been permitted by the authorities.

Stunt to Advertise "Joan."

Toronto, Ont.—To advertise "Joan the Woman" at the Strand theater, Toronto, during Christmas week, William Dineen, chief mechanician of this house, made a large cutout of Joan of Arc on a white charger. During the two preceding weeks this cutout was lowered to the stage between shows and a spot light was thrown on it from the projection booth. The effect was striking. The horse bore a saddle cloth which gave the name of the attraction and the date.

Changes at Regal Office in Winnipeg.

Winnipeg, Man.—The Winnipeg branch of Regal Films, Limited, Toronto, has been moved to larger and brighter offices at 445 Main street. Tom Bailiy, who has been prominently associated with the Winnipeg branch of the company, has been transferred to the Vancouver office.

Good Crops Bring Prosperity in the South

Theaters and Exchanges South of Dixie Are Coming Out of Business Depression—War Is Felt, but There Is Little Discouragement.

J. L. Ray, Nashville Banner, Nashville, Tenn.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—According to figures compiled by one of the leading feature companies, the southern exchanges employ 83 salesmen, whose salaries and expenses average $4,980 a week, or more than a quarter million dollars per year. These men cover all the ground from the Mason-Dixon line to the Gulf of Mexico, and from the Mississippi River to the Atlantic seaboard, giving some idea of the tremendous proportions southern commercialized filmdom has advanced during the past few years, when a mere handful of men were in the field.

New exchanges are being constantly added to the fold and the general air of prosperity in the South incident to the heavy crops and the demands of the warring nations has put plenty of ready money in the pockets of the Southern farmers and business men. Consequently the industry has flourished and only a small proportion of the cities are complaining over the war patronage. Of course volunteer enlistment and the national draft have cut down patronage in many cases, but the readiness of everybody to dig down in their pockets has eliminated any tendency toward a money panic in this section.

Chattanooga Without Film Exchange.

Chattanooga, Tenn.—Since the removal of the Southern Metro offices to Atlanta, after doing business in this city for many months, Chattanooga is again without a film exchange. Before leaving Manager Arthur S. Dickinson declared that the reason for removing to the present location was due to the convenience which was accorded through Atlanta's adaptability as a film distributing center. The offices are now located in the Hirsch building, 146 Marietta street. All Metro films in the South are being handled through Mr. Dickinson's office.

Pirrolle Handling Oro Films.

Memphis, Tenn.—Kaufman features, Southern distributors of Oro features, announce that arrangements have been perfected whereby Oro features in the future will be handled for New Orleans territory by Albert Pirrolle, Tudor theater building, New Orleans. The generous response accorded these films, according to the Kaufman company, has made it impossible to adequately handle the demands of the extreme South from Memphis, and consequently a representative was placed in this city.

Birmingham to Have Fine New House.

Birmingham, Ala.—This city is to have a handsome new photoplay house, according to the plans of a local amusement company. The new theater will be of modern design, and will embody all the latest principles of fireproof construction, costing in the neighborhood of $15,000.

The house will be known as the Savoy theater and will be moderate in size, the floor dimensions 40x90 feet. It will be entered through a spacious lobby. The new building will be located at 328 Eighteenth street north. It will have wood and tile floors with heavy mats near the entrances made of sheet cork or rubber compound, to eliminate noise and wear on the finisning Steam heat will be employed, with the most modern seating arrangements. The structure will have a tar and gravel roof, with reinforced side walls and front. Plans were made by W. A. Rayfield & Co., of this city.

Sheriff Acts Against Sunday Openers.

Decatur, Ala.—According to advice received from the sheriff's office last week warrants will be immediately prepared against the Sunday-closing law violators who kept their places of business open on last Sunday. The officers made a careful survey of the various places open, even to the fact that newspapers were being sold in front of a drug store. The "blue law" agitation in Alabama is worse this year than ever before.

Cincinnati News Letter

By Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First National Bank, Cincinnati, O.

C. C. Hite Takes Charge of Jewel Office.

CINCINNATI, O.—Another interesting change in management affecting two Cincinnati film exchanges has been announced, C. C. Hite going from the Goldwyn office to take charge of the local branch of Jewel Productions, succeeding Ralph Peckham, while A. J. Pincus, formerly of New York, has become local manager of the Goldwyn exchange.

Mr. Pincus comes to Cincinnati from St. Louis, where he has been doing some work for the Goldwyn organizaiton, with which he became connected in New York on October 1. For three and a half years prior to that date he was with the Mutual in New York, acting as assitant manager at that company's Twenty-third street branch. He reports that he is getting things in shape to his liking in Cincinnati.

"Blue Jeans" in Story's Home Town.

Cincinnti, O.—One of the most unusual first runs yet chronicled in this section is being planned by Manager W. C. Bachmeyer of the Metro exchange for "Blue Jeans," released by the Metro company The scenes of the book and of the photoplay made from it are around the little Ohio River town of Rising Sun, Indiana, which is only a comparatively short distance from Cincinnati. Arrangements have accordingly been made under which the first showing of the picture will be made at Rising Sun, in the Columbia theater. There is great interest in the event in the little town, and as Manager Bachmeyer will take some specially invited guests with him to see the first exhibition, it will be a gala performance. The exact date has not yet been announced, but it will probably be during the holidays.

Orphans See "Bab's Diary."

Piqua, O.—One of the cracteristically generous and thoughtful acts for which the management of May's opera house, at Qiqua, has become known, was the recent entertainment of children from an orphan's home near the city at a special performance of "Bab's Diary." Marguerite Clark is always a favorite with children, and the picture proved to be highly enjoyable for the youngsters.

Theater Notes of Interest.

Cincinnati, O.—The theater at Twelfth and Broadway, which has for some time been owned by Phil Morton has been dispose dof by him, Anna M. C. Bradley purchasing the house recently. The exact terms of the sale were not announced.

Cincinnati, O.—The Mars theater, which has not been used for some time, the Bon Ton, nearby, receiving all of the business in the neighborhood of Hewett and Woodburn avenues, was opened for two evenings recently by the Walnut Hills Company of the Cincinnati Home Guard Regiment for the benefit of the company's special fund.

Detroit Exchanges Stand for Enforcing Tax

Two-Day Conference Results in Determination Not to Give In to Protest Against Footage Tax—Will Keep to First Announcement.

By Jacob Smith, 718 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

DETROIT, MICH.—A conference was held in Detroit on Monday and Tuesday, Dec. 16 and 17, at the Hotel Statler to go over the film tax situation. Representatives from at least a half dozen distributing and producing companies were on hand and they conferred with their local managers and leading exhibitors. The result of the conference was simply that the film tax will stand as announced originally by these companies, as any other step would spell absolute ruin and bankruptcy for them.

Among the Detroit exhibitors who are paying the film tax are: A. J. Gilligham, John H. Kunsky, Broadway-Strand theater, Norwood, Fine Arts, Maxine, Drury Lane, Knickerbocker, Ferry Field, Gladwin Park, Globe, Virginia Park and East End. Through the state Fitzpatrick & Mc Elroy, A. J. Gilligham, Lopp & Cross and Col. W. S. Butterfield are paying the tax.

About 75 Detroit theaters are standing together in their fight against the tax and they are just as determined as ever not to pay it.

Detroit Film Men on Honor's Roll.

Detroit, Mich.—Here is a complete list of the Detroit and Michigan boys, so far as we know, who are with Uncle Sam and who will "go over the top" in the near future, if they have not already done so: Lew Cohen, Coliseum theater; L. L. Hook, Your theater; Paul Kreps, Vitagraph; L. E. Davis, Vitagraph; L. G. Parkhurst, Vitagraph; Sam Harris, Vitagraph; D. Leo Dennison, W. H. White, Beechwood theater; Earth Rathbun, State Film; D. Harold Fink, Iris theater; Floyd S. Wadlow, Virginia Park; Edward Geller, Holland Features; Sam Barrett, Universal; Al Mertz, Universal, and Charles Chariper, Metropolitan, all of Detroit; A. J. Kleist, Jr., of Pontiac.

May Take Drastic Steps to Save Coal.

Detroit, Mich.—Unless the coal situation in Michigan improves the State Federal Administrator, W. K. Prudden, threatens to close the theaters for one week, as well as factories and stores, with the view of conserving the available supply. He says he will take such action about the 1st of January if there is no improvement by that time. However, the leading exhibitors from all over the state are sending in letters and telegrams of protest angainst any such action, declaring that it would mean a loss to them and the Government, and that in reality little fuel would be conserved, as they use very little. Coal is actually scarce in the state and there is little likelihood that the situation will clear up owing to railroad congestion and the further fact that coal is being confiscated by other cities before it reaches Detroit and Michigan points.

Eddie Fontains Promoted to Manager.

Detroit, Mich.—Eddie Fontaine, for three years with Pathe, has been appointed Detroit manager, succeeding George Fuller. Eddie has been booker, salesman and assistant manager at Pathe and his promotion is a deserved one. Congratulations, Eddie. We're all with you.

Items Worth Noting from Detroit.

A Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year is extended to Michigan friends by Jasob Smith, 719 Free press building, who is our Detroit and Michigan correspondent.

Harry R. Guest, publicity manager for John H. Kunsky enterprises, Detroit, will bring out a local publication called "Plays" about the 1st of February, devoted to the local amusement and picture enterainments. He will continue as editor for the Kunsky theaters.

Tom Ealand, manager of the Orpheum and Regent theaters, Detroit, has booked first run Triangles in Detroit and will play each release a full week. He has also booked the Pathe serial "The Hidden Hand," for the Regent theater, making it the first serial to play that theater under the C. H. Miles ownership.

The Dawn Masterplay Company, 501 Owen building, Detroit, has purchased "I Believe" for the state of Michigan.

Exhibitors cannot be too careful in the treatment of film, which after all is only leased to them. Many complaints have been made lately by Detroit exchanges that exhibitors have shipped film to the wrong addresses, and thereby kept dark the theaters of other exhibitors. Also that much film has been stolen of late through carelessness on the part of the exhibitor.

L. L. Jacobs, manager of the Delft theater, in Escanaba, and H. S. Gallup, general manager of the Delft theaters, at Marquette, were visitors in Detroit recently and called at the World office.

Wallace Reid, the Paramount star, was in Detroit on Thursday, Dec. 13, and personally appeared at the Washington, Broadway-Strand, Majestic and Madison theaters. After he completed his tour he made the remark that no city could compare with Detroit in the number of large, beautiful moving picture theaters.

A. I. Shapiro, Detroit Goldwyn manager, has sold "The Freedom of the World" and "The Manxman" to the entire circuit in Michigan of Fitzpatrick & McElroy theaters.

The Majestic theater, Detroit, has booked "Uneasy Money," a Kleine picture, for Christmas week. The entire city is being billboarded with 24 sheet stands on this production.

Illinois News Letter

By Frank H. Madison.

Theater Notes and Changes.

Ottawa, Ill.—J. D. McKeen, of Morris, Ill., has taken over the lease on the Gayety theatere here, which has been held by Frank Theilen, of Aurora. McKeen will take charge of the theater succeeding Harry Lewis, who, after four years management here will be transferred to the Colonial theater at Galesburg, purchased by Frank Theilen. The Gayety will continue with a policy of pictures, vaudeville and theatrical plays.

Belleville, Ill.—A new moving picture theater is to be constructed in the eastern end of the city, it is reported. Chicago capital, which is now operating theaters in Joliet, Quincy and Champaign, is said to be behind the project.

Elizabeth, Ill.—Amusements in Elizabeth have been stopped until a small-pox scare has abated.

Canton, Ill.—The Garden theater devoted two days to a benefit fund for the Parlin & Orendorff band.

Theater Changes in Michigan.

North Branch, Mich.—J. H. Vandecar and A. H. Leete have leased the Columbia theater from G. H. Finkle. James Leete, son of one of the Leetes, will be manager for the coming year.

Belleville, Mich.—A new moving picture theater will be opened here.

Alma, Mich.—The Genesta theater has been remodeled and redecorated.

Indianapolis Exhibitors Feel Discouraged

Holiday Season Together with War and Heavy Taxes Keeps Neighborhood Houses with Scant Audiences—Many Theaters Are Closing.

From Indiana Trade News Service, 861 State Life Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—General Gloom and his division of pessimistic forces have invaded local film circles and, judging from current predictions, some people think he intends to camp right here in Indianapolis for the rest of the winter.

The motion picture business, contrary to previous reports, has suffered a general decline during the last few weeks and many say that the outlook for the coming year is anything but bright. As a result of this the neighborhood exhibitors of the city are a downhearted lot, and from the way they talk there will have to be a decided change in conditions before they feel optimistic again.

Proof of the depression in the motion picture business here is shown by the numerous theaters that have closed down entirely during the last twelve months. The "facts and figgers" show that twenty-three neighborhood theaters have closed down during the year, the majority of these closing during the last few weeks. Thus, war reflects its spirit in the motion picture business of Indianapolis.

Theaters That Have Closed.

The theaters that have closed are the Astor, 535 North Senate avenue; the East Michigan, 2129 East Michigan street; the Empress, 1122 Central avenue; the Garden, Rural and Washington streets; the Grand Central, 2957 Central avenue; the Imperial, 335 West McCarty street; the Iris, State avenue and Prospect street; the Jewel, 1124 South West street; the Nordland, Forty-second street and College avenue; the Northwestern, 2648 Northwester avenue; the Owl, 442 Massachusetts avenue; the Palace, 733 Virginia avenue; the Palms No. 2, at Highland place and Thirtieth street; the Pastime, 3004 East Tenth street; the Peter Pan, Nineteenth street and Central avenue; the Pioneer, 513 Indiana avenue; the Pleasant Hour, Roosevelt avenue and Sheldon street; the Poinsetta, Senate avenue and Fifteenth street; the Talbott, 2201 Talbott avenue; the Very Best, Brookside avenue and Tenth street; the Victoria, 213 East Sixteenth street; the Brookside, Brookside avenue; the Elite, in North Indianapolis, and the Delight, 2407 College avenue.

Houses Running on Short Time.

While only twenty-three theaters have closed down entirely there are a number of other neighborhood theaters that are now only open three nights a week, and the chances are, according to local exhibitors, that they will close entirely before very long if existing conditions continue.

Although it is rather difficult to say just what has caused the general slump, the exhibitors contribute it to the various war taxes, shortage of money, and increased cost of production and the holiday season. The admission tax is beginning to cause a noticeable falling off in attendance at both the neighborhood and downtown theaters, and the fifteen-cent reel tax, which the exhibitors are forced to pay, is causing no end of trouble.

"The situation in Indianapolis just now is the worst I have ever seen it," said A. C. Zaring, secretary of the Indianapolis Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association and proprietor of the North Star theater, "and I do not know what on earth we are going to do. The last few weeks have brought an added slump in the business, and if this continues it will no doubt cause the rest of us to close up.

"I do not know of an exhibitor operating a neighborhood house in the city today who is making money," he continued. "There are some who are opening their theaters three nights a week and that is a good indication that they are not enjoying the healthful business that they did formerly. If it comes to the point that I have to close my theater four nights in the week, I'm going to get out of the motion picture business entirely, and it looks very much like that time is not far off—if conditions continue as they are at present."

Some Reasons for Slump.

The draft and voluntary enlistments have already made heavy inroads on the patronage of the neighborhood houses, Mr. Zaring points out, not only through taking away the young men but in its effect on the theater-going women. Added to this, he says, is the tax on admissions, which also has cut down the attendance, and last, but not least, the fifteen-cent reel tax.

It is going to be utterly impossible, Mr. Zaring thinks, for the small exhibitor to pay the fifteen-cent reel tax and stay in business. As an illustration of this he points to the large number of small theaters that have gone out of business just since the new tax has been in effect. The situation, he says, is a very serious one to every exhibitor in the country and demands immediate attention.

In addition to all of these things, he says, the exhibitor is constantly meeting advances in other operating expenses. The operators of the city recently received a raise of $2.75 a week, he says, and this also resulted in the elimination of the carrying of films. The expense of carrying films is now defrayed by the exhibitors themselves.

Some Optimism in Smaller Cities.

Russell Gadbury, traveling representative for the H. Lieber Co., dealers in theater equipment and supplies, who has just returned from a tour of the state, says he finds conditions among the exhibitors in the various Indiana cities very favorable. He said the attendance at most of the state theaters was crippled last week because of the severe cold weather, but the exhibitors regarded the depression as temporary.

An effort will be made in next week's issue to present the views of the downtown exhibitors of Indianapolis regarding the outlook for 1918.

Two Indiana Harbor Houses Sold.

Indiana Harbor, Ind.—Julius Nassau has sold his interests in the Columbia and International theaters to Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Potts, who have purchased the business for their daughter, Mrs. Thelma Potts Wilcox, and their son, Elton Potts. The young Mr. Potts will take over the management of the two concerns at once and his sister will act as secretary and bookkeeper for both establishments. She will also have charge of the box office at the Columbia. It is the intention of the new management to begin the new year by showing the latest high class motion pictures and vaudeville exclusively.

New Concern Buys Dunkirk House.

Dunkirk, Ind.—The Community Educational Amusement Corporation, a newly organized concern, has filed incorporation papers to engage in the exhibition of motion pictures. The capital stock is $5,000 and the directors are Benjamin Rubrecht, James M. O'Neill, Charles F. Hurrie, William A. Pfisterer and George T. Whitaker.

The company was organized primarily for the purpose of taking over the Majestic theater from William J. Lloyd.

Week's Filmdom Doings in Kansas City

Ira F. Mantzke Gets Mutual Exchange Managership—Other Changes in Distributing Offices—Theater Changes—Business Notes.

By Kansas City News Service, 205 Corn Belt Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—Ira F. Mantzke has been made manager of the local office of the Mutual Film Corporation. This position has been open for several weeks and the new manager had quite a number of competitors for the position, as several local men were in the field for the office. Mr. Mantzke comes to Kansas City from the Minneapolis, Minn., office of the company, with whom he has been for quite a while. The position was formerly occupied by F. L. Kiltz.

Mr. Mantzke has already taken active charge of the office and is assisting O. R. Hanson, efficiency expert out of the Chicago office in the installation of a new booking system, which is now being put in all of the Mutual offices.

Pathe Men Saved the Show at Roesendale.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Kansas City Pathe office endeared itself recently to the exhibitors at Roesendale, Mo., as well as to the community. A new house costing about $12,000, owned by the business men of the community, and built as a community center, was about to be opened when it was discovered that there was an operator lacking to run the new power-driven machine. The Pathe office, hearing of this misfortune, sent Morton Van Praag, cashier, and Phillip Smith, bookkeeper, to the rescue. The opening of the big house was accomplished according to the prearranged plans, due to the willingness of the Pathe force.

Will Start New Wichita Theater in Spring.

Wichita, Kan.—All materials for the new theater to be built by the Wichita Theater company in the third block on East Douglas have been ordered and actual work of construction will start about March 1. J. H. Cooper will be manager of the new theater. The reason the work is to be delayed until March 1, is because the leases on the buildings now occupying the site do not expire until March 1.

W. C. Ansell Signs Again with Standard.

Kansas City, Mo.—W. C. Ansell, who, since the opening of the local Goldwyn office has been traveling with that company, has signed again with the Standard Film, for which he worked before going to Goldwyn. His territory has not yet been assigned.

Fall Kills Wm. J. Timmons.

Kansas City, Mo.—Wm. J. Timmons, well-known theatrical manager, and for the past eighteen months in that capacity at the Empress theater, died December 10, as a result of injuries received in a fall. Mr. Timmons was running to answer the telephone in his apartments when his foot slipped and he fell, striking his head against a cedar chest. He was taken to a hospital where he died of cerebral hemmorrhage. Mr. Timmons had been in the theatrical business for sixteen years and was known from coast to coast as "the right-hand man" of Alex Pantages.

Harry Taylor Is Pathe City Salesman.

Kansas City, Mo.—Harry Taylor, well-known Kansas City film salesman and exhibitor, is now in the employ of the local Pathe office in the capacity of salesman. He was formerly with the Fox office here. He replaces A. O. Bandy, now with the Select. Mr. Taylor will work as city salesman.

O. R. Bandy Joins Select.

Kansas City, Mo.—O. R. Bandy, formerly city salesman for the Kansas City Pathe office, is now with the Select Pictures. He will travel Missouri, southern Kansas and northern Oklahoma.

Andro Golitko Enlists.

Kansas City, Mo.—Andro Golitko, salesman in eastern Kansas for the Kansas City Pathe office, has enlisted in the ordnance department of the army and is planning on immediate service. He was with the local Pathe office for two years.

Phillip Smith Goes to Spokane.

Kansas City, Mo.—Phillip Smith, formerly bookkeeper at the Kansas City office of the Pathe company, has gone to Spokane, Washington, where he will act as bookkeeper at the Pathe office there.

Julian Kirk Now with Metro.

Kansas City, Mo.—Julian Kirk, formerly roadman out of the Kansas City Pathe office, is now with the services of the Kansas City Metro office. He will cover a territory adjacent to the Kansas City territory.

Kansas City Business Notes.

The General Film of Kansas City announces that two prints of the new Paralta Pictures have been received. These are "A Man's Man," featuring Warren Kerrigan, and "Madam Who," featuring Bessie Barriscale. A trade showing at a local theater of these pictures will be held at a local downtown theater in the near future.

The elect office announces that prints on Eva Tanguay's "The Wild Girl" have been received and that bookings thereon are coming in rapidly.

H. E. Lotz, special representative for Triangle from New York City, was a visitor in Kansas City, Dec. 15. He will go to St. Louis, Mo., from here, after which trip he will return to Kansas City for a visit of a week with friends here.

Charles Goetz, district sales-manager for the Select Pictures Corporation, New York City, is making his headquarters temporarily at the Kansas City office of the company. He will make short trips into the Kansas City territory with O. R. Bandy, local salesman.

Big Soldiers' Benefit Given in St. Louis

Musicians' Union and Film Managers' Association at Odds Over Attitude of Union on Benefit Question—Two Sides of Controversy.

By Mary Moore, 6035 Kingsbury Bl., St. Louis, Mo.

ST. LOUIS, MO.—D. M. Thomas, manager of Fox office in this city and chairman of the arrangements committee of Film Managers' Association, is involved in a bitter controversy here with the Musicians' Union over the latter organization's refusal to furnish music, gratis, for the Soldiers' Benefit which the film managers staged in three theaters on December 20.

Immediately after being turned down by the musicians, Thomas gave out an interview for the correspondent of the World in which he declared that the St. Louis musicians' organization is lacking in patriotic interest, and added that the heads of the organization failed to give any sound reason for their action in refusing to play for the soldiers' benefit.

The Union's Side of the Controversy.

Following Mr. Thomas' attack on the Union, Marion Henderson, secretary of the musicians' organization, issued a statement to the press to the effect that his men had contributed freely in the past to patriotic affairs and could not see their way clear to donate their services further.

Henderson said that inasmuch as the men depend on their wages for music rendered for a living, they could not afford to donate to the benefit.

Thomas in rebuttal cited that there are scores of union musicians who do not play daily and called attention to the fact that some of the players who "hang around headquarters" might well have donated their services if the organization was patriotic.

What the Union Conceded.

The musicians conceded the right of the film managers to use only one union musician in the theaters on benefit day, instead of the usual three. It was at this point that the break came. The benefit managers turned down the musicians altogether and obtained the services of the regular army musicians from Jefferson Barracks.

Aside from the row with the musicians the benefit had the support of the city in general. All the big film companies donated a reel for the performances. The three theaters used were the New Grand Central, Delmar and Liberty.

An evidence of the patriotism back of the benefit may be had out of the fact that the theaters received nothing out of the receipts for the day, and all attaches of the theaters, including the girl cashiers, donated their services.

Floyd Lewis Organizes Home Guard.

St. Louis, Mo.—Floyd Lewis of the Goldwyn offices in this city has organized a branch of the Home Guards and has been unusually succesful through the co-operation of the Elks Club. Weekly training has been started and equipment is being arranged. Many of the film offices and some of the exhibitors have furnished men for the company.

Thomas McKean Joins Navy.

Thomas McKean, manager of the Royal theater, and a son of G. E. McKean, manager of the Paramount office in St. Louis, has enlisted in the navy and is departing shortly for "somewhere on the sea."

William Baker Goes to Cincinnati.

William Baker, who has been in the Goldwyn office here, has been transferred to Cincinnati under Manager Pincus.

Getting More Cancellations Than Contracts

Conditions of Rural Theaters in Minnesota Not Encouraging to Exchange Men—New Associated Theaters and Exchanges at Odds.

By John L. Johnston, 719 Hennepin Ave., Minneapolis, Minn.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—Twin City exhibitors will say "Happy New Year" to one and another this year with a grin. The grin will mean that they have no personal grudge against New Year's, but that business is only fair and perhaps if another cold spell strikes these parts within the Yuletide season patronage at the theaters may fall off so much that even the exhibitors' grin might be absent.

Local exchanges are getting undoubtedly more cancellations from outside of the cities than contracts for new service and if some of the local exchangemen were weak-kneed some might feel like jumping into Minnehaha Falls after opening their morning mail. New Year, 1918, will find film conditions throughout the smaller towns of the Northwest in a deplorable condition despite any statements to the contrary, and in the larger cities of the territory business will not equal that of a year ago even with advanced prices, it is believed. The World correspondent overheard a city exhibitor arguing with a Minneapolis exchangeman over his inability to book a five-reel feature and a certain episode of a recent serial for seven dollars a day, thus assuring the writer that conditions must be pretty bad with full emphasis upon the last word.

Local exchange men, in spite of all of their other troubles, are beginning to align themselves to battle against Thomas J. Hamlin's organization, the Associated Theaters, Inc. The exchange men have emphatically stated that the new body will not get any film from some of the leading exchanges. A score of local exchanges have published a statement that no booking organization will be able to get film from them, but, undaunted, Mr. Hamlin and other members of the Associated Theaters, Inc., have just as emphatically stated the several hundred stockholders now enrolled in the new body will positively be served and with the best of films. The Associated Theaters, Inc., organization held its first annual convention Monday, Dec. 17, and despite the fact that a good number of exchange men and employees were anxious to hear the results of the meeting, not much information was given out. Mr. Hamlin, however, stated that he would announce the results of the convention shortly and that following a visit to New York by a representative of his organization, local exchange men might be more calm. However, in the meantime, it is doubtly if either side really, honestly understands the motives or ideas of the other and the battle is on.

Ira J. Mantske Wins Promotion.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Ira J. Mantske, for several years one of the "faithfuls" at the local Mutual exchange here, has been rewarded for his continued good work by being appointed manager of the Mutual's Kansas City office. Mr. Mantske left the city last week to assume his new duties and he carried with him the good wishes of a host of firm friends and admirers.

G. W. Malone Heads Mutual.

Mr. Mantske is succeeded at the Mutual by "Governor" George W. Malone, late of the Metro exchange. Outfitted with a new series of white ties and special Piccadilly collars, the "Governor" should (editorially speaking) lend considerable class to his new position.

E. C. Davies Goes to Westcott Film.

Also another change. Edward C. Davies, who has been Ralph Bradford's first lieutenant at the Triangle, the Universal, the Saxe and the Goldwyn exchange, resigned his position with the latter-named exchange last week to become Wisconsin district manager for the Westcott Film Corporation of Minneapolis. Mr. Davies' future headquarters will be located in the Toy building and it must be said that the efficient Mr. Davies entered into his new duties with a burst of rare enthusiasm and confidence.

Supreme Opens South Dakota Branch.

Sioux Falls, S. D.—Manager Myron T. Conhaim, otherwise known as Mike Conhaim, of the Supreme exchange, has announced that a South Dakota branch exchange has been opened at Sioux Falls, S. D. M. Conhaim has also sent Lee A. Horn out on the road in the interests of "The Italian Battlefront," despite the fact that Lee's lady friends from Ida Grove, Iowa, did not return home until two days after L. A. H. had to hit the trail. Conhaim, being a confirmed bachelor, had no respect for Lee's feelings—seemingly.

Special Features Booked.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Jack Kuhn of the Emerald exchange has announced that he has four prints of the film, "A Slacker's Heart," booked solid until the third week of February.

Manager Charles G. Branham, of the Strand, Minneapolis, has booked "I Believe," controlled in this territory by the American Maid exchange.

Manager Louis H. Coen, otherwise known as "Two Gun" Carter, has given out the information that "Draft 258," featuring Mabel Taliaferro, has been booked into the Merrill theater, Milwaukee, for a two weeks' run.

Manager James A. Keough of the New Lyric theater, Minneapolis, has booked Baby Osborne's latest, "The Little Patriot," for showing at his theater, Dec. 26 to 29, inclusive.

Manager James G. Gilosky, of the Alhambra theater, St. Paul, has booked "My Little Boy," featuring Zoe Rae, for showing the first half of the week of Dec. 23. The St. Paul Daily News will cooperate with Mr. Gilosky in a publicity way on the feature.

Ban on Bundles in St. Louis Theaters

Director of Safety Forbids Patrons of Moving Picture Theaters Carrying Any Bundles in That Might Hide Explosives.

St. Louis, Mo.—War had added another rule to the management of film houses in this city, and the day of bundles and umbrellas piled on the "seat next you" is passed.

At a meeting of the Exhibitors' League held during the week, Director of Safety James N. McKelvey, who has been appointed by the United States Government as Supervisor of Explosives in St. Louis, visited the exhibitors and told them that within a few days he would issue an order forbidding the carrying, into any theater, of any parcel, umbrella or other article which might contain explosives.

McKelvey told the exhibitors that as the responsible Federal agent in the city he would take this precautionary step solely as a precaution, and explained also that there was nothing in the way of actual danger which prompted the move. He said that under such a rule the danger of carrying explosives into theaters—especially dark movie houses—would be eliminated entirely, thus insuring safety for everyone from the start.

Although the rule may cause inconvenience during inclement weather, the exhibitors by reason of the exigencies of war and general conditions are rather in favor of the stringent rule, and will very likely provide checking departments near the door of all theaters.

Fair Business for St. Louis Theaters.

St. Louis, Mo.—Although a delegation of exhibitors from this city is now in Washington seeking an adjustment of the theater war tax, the statement is unquestionably true that the picture patron has not even so much as taken the 10 per cent. tax into his consideration.

Joseph Mogler, who operates three theaters and who is president of the Exhibitors' League here, says that the tax has had a material effect on the business of the city's houses, but others declare, and cite figures to prove it, that the tax has taken none of their patrons.

Dave Russell, manager of three of the largest houses here, declares that the tax has made little or no difference in his business, and Frank Tate and Louis Cella, two of the wealthiest exhibitors and theater owners in the city, have not even taken an interest in the adjustment process now being agitated. These men operate a string of houses, all of which are doing normal business without complaint from patrons.

Herrold Cantonment Theater Fears Failure

By Dorothy Day, Register-Tribune, Des Moines, Ia.

DES MOINES, IA.—It is the talk in Des Moines that the business at the Cantonment theater is going to pieces Because so many of the soldiers have been ordered to other cantonments, and the new contingents have not yet arrived, there are only about 6,000 soldiers at Camp Dodge at the present time. The more optimistic look upon this as the cause of the failure of the theater to show more than one time during the day, that at six in the evening. However, the pessimists claim that the boys in khaki are coming to town every time they have a minute off duty and not waiting to see any picture at the camp, no matter how good or how attractive the theater is made.

The Liberty theater, owned by Elbert and Getchell of this city, will open the middle of January if the new contingent brings any business to the Herrold house, now running.

Mutual Construction Manager in Des Moines.

Des Moines, Ia.—G. B. Svenson, of the construction department of Mutual Film, was in Des Moines Tuesday, December 10, in conference with Manager Ballantyne. Although the lid is clamped down tight, rumors of re-arrangement persist in slipping out.

Manager Hronek Back from War Service.

Pocahontas, Ia.—L. A. Hronek, owner of the Princess theater in Pocahontas for several years, but who sold out six months ago to enlist for service to his country, has re-assumed the management and ownership of his theater. F. W. Stegge, who owned the theater during Hronek's six months' absence, has gone to the defense of the colors in Hronek's place. The latter having been honorably discharged.

The Princess is the only motion picture house in this thriving little town of 1,100 inhabitants. The only opposition, an opera house, was closed down several weeks ago. Mr. Hronek changes his program every day, operating his house six nights a week with Sunday matinee.

Manager Hronek was in Des Moines last Saturday, arranging for the renewal of his Bluebird contract, and to arrange for the Jewel productions for the Princess.

Well-Known Film Man Sells House.

Fort Dodge, Ia.—H. J. Lego, well-known Iowa exhibitor, has recently sold his house, the Majestic in Fort Dodge, to J. K. Black. Mr. Lego accompanied Mr. Black on a trip around the exchanges in Des Moines and Omaha, acquainting his successor with the managers. It is to be hoped that Mr. Lego will not entirely forsake the film trade.

Metro Acquires Two Live Salesmen.

Des Moines, Ia.—The Des Moines office of Metro have acquired the services of two salesman. Ray White, recently of the Perfection pictures, will represent Metro in eastern Iowa. Harry Hyman, for three years connected with the World Film company as Omaha exchange manager and roadman, will represent the Metro office in western Iowa and Nebraska. Both men have returned from their first trip with splendid results.

Local Red Cross Benefit with "Joan."

Des Moines, Ia.—Benjamin Blanchard, recently connected with the Freidman Enterprises in Minneapolis, arranged to show the big feature photoplay, "Joan the Woman," at the Coliseum in Des Moines, for five days beginning the 21st and including Christmas Day. Mr. Blanchard had the co-operation of the Des Moines Chamber of Commerce, and the receipts of the big production will be divided between the Red Cross and the Soldiers' Candy Fund. The Yale Photoplay Corporation of this city, the owners of "Joan" in this territory, are also co-operating with Mr. Blanchard in the showing.

Stolte Takes Long Xmas Vacation.

Cedar Rapids, Ia.—Arthur Stolte, manager of the Strand theater in Cedar Rapids, one of the finest theaters in Iowa, left week before last for a Christmas vacation trip to the home of his mother in California. Mr. Stolte stopped off in Des Moines and Kansas City for short calls on the exchange managers. He will return soon after the first of the year.

A Correction Concerning B. Burgess.

Des Moines, Ia.—Bruce Burgess wishes an item of two weeks ago, stating that he would represent Metro after the first of December, corrected. Mr. Burgess is acting as roadman for the Paramount and Artcraft productions, working out of the Des Moines office of the K. C. Feature Film company.

Englert Assumes Management of Garden

Iowa City, Ia.—W. H. Englert, owner of the Englert and Garden theaters in this city, has assumed the management of the latter house. William McKenzie is operating the Englert, right across the street. Mr. Englert has booked "The Whip," the big state rights picture owned by the Yale Photoplay Co., in this territory, for two days' run.

Palace Theater Will Show Metro Pictures.

Des Moines, Ia.—The Metro Pictures will return to the Palace theater, their old home, the 6th of January for a four-days' run every week. "The Voice of Conscience" will be the first production.

Callers at Des Moines Exchanges.

Des Moines, Ia.—Several exhibitors from over the state paid visits to the Des Moines exchanges this past week. Among them, Mrs. Fred Smith of the Orient in Oskaloosa, was at the Metro office. Ed Awe, of the Strand in Fort Dodge, and Mr. Berger, of Williams and Berger of the Savoy in Garwin, were at the Pathe office. Ben Wiley, of the Lyric in Boone; C. E. Forest, of the Star in Farnumville; A. C. Stole of the Lyric; A. E. Humphrey of Roland; R. A. Hayes of the Lyric in Consul, and Ralph Walker of the American in Prairie City, were Mutual callers.

New Cantonment Theater Opening Delayed.

Des Moines, Ia.—Elbert and Getchell's new picture theater at Camp Dodge will not be opened on December the fifteenth as planned, for some 8,000 of the troops at the camp have been transferred to the South, and it will be the first of the year before the next contingent will be drafted in and settled. Messrs. Elbert and Getchell have their huge house almost ready, but work will be temporarily halted until the middle of January.

A. H. Blank Gets Marshalltown Strand.

Marshalltown, Ia.—A. H. Blank has recently purchased the Strand theater in Marshalltown. Wilbur Ingledue, of the firm of Ingledue and Jenson, former owners of the Strand, was drafted into service with the first contingent, and is now in training at Camp Dodge. Mr. Jenson did not feel like continuing the management of the theater, hence the sale for the sum of $16,000. Mr. Blank has been fortunate enough to secure the services of J. Jolly Jones, Jr., to manage the house for him. Mr. Jones has been Metro's star salesman in Iowa and Nebraska for the past couple of years, previous to that he was manager of the Majestic theater in Des Moines, and previous to that was connected with several successful theatrical enterprises.

J. J. Clark to Give Up Picture Interests.

Bedford, Ia.—J. J. Clark, owner of the Steel theater in Bedford, has decided to give up the active management of the house and devote his time exclusively to his printing business. He has secured C. B. Owens, formerly manager of the Pastime theater in Bagley, Ia., to manage the Steel theater for him. Mr. Clark is the publisher of the Motion Picture Industrial Magazine, the official publication of the Motion Picture Industrial League of Iowa.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compete with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

The Past Week With Film Men in Texas

Majestic Theater in Dallas Burns—Fox Film Branch Next Door Has to Find New Quarters—Lightless Nights—Feature Records.

By Douglas Hawley, Times-Herald, Dallas, Texas.

DALLAS, TEX.—By a narrow squeak Film Row, Dallas, escaped a fire which might have sent thousands of dollars worth of features up in smoke on the afternoon of Dec. 12. As it was the Fox company hustled a lot of stock out in time, and must seek new quarters, while other distributing branches were saved after a couple hours of anxiety by the heroic efforts of Dallas firemen.

At 6 p. m., Dec 12, the Majestic theater building was totally destroyed by fire, entailing a loss for the Interstate Amusement Company, Karl Hoblitzelle, president, of something more than $50,000. The fire occurred during a spell of the most wintry weather Texas has had in many a year. It was down to 12 above, and had been there for several days, and when the blaze was finally out the smoke-blackened ruins were covered ice.

No announcement has yet been made as to rebuilding intentions, and meanwhile the vaudeville offerings of the Interstate Circuit are being given at the Dallas opera house when bookings there permit. Fortunately the week of the fire was open time and there was no interference.

The burned theater was in the heart of the film distributing center of Dallas. The Fox Feature Film Company had quarters directly next door.

Lightless Nights Observed in Dallas.

Dallas, Tex.—Sunday night, Dec. 16, was the first "lightless night" under the new order of the National Fuel Administrator. It didn't affect Dallas picture theaters, except that possibly there were greater crowds in the theater district. The ruling is that lights shall not be shown on Sunday or Thursday nights, in places that are not open for business. It meant the extinguishing of thousands of candle power burned in the show windows of big department stores and the like, while the theater "whie ways" continued to blaze forth their wecome, to which thousands responded.

Feature Record of the Week.

Dalas, Tex.—For the week beginning Dec. 16, Julian Eltynge in "The Clever Mrs. Fairfax"; Maxine Elliott in "Fighting Odds," and Madge Kenney in "Nearly Married," were big drawing cards at the Old Mill theater, Dallas, with simultaneous releases in other of the larger North and South Texas picture houses.

At the Hippodrome "The Lust of Ages," with Lillian Walker, began a week's run, with first pictures shown in Texas of the Halifax disaster, as an added attraction. Manager Cameron of the Crystal offered William Russell in "New York Luck" and "The Pride of New York," the Fox feature with George Walsh opened at the Jefferson. At the Washington the seven-reel Triangle, "Because of a Woman," with Belle Bennett and Jack Livingston, was the week's offering.

PACIFIC COAST NOTES.

California Theater Featuring Music.

San Francisco, Cal.—The California theater has increased the size of its symphony orchestra from eighteen to twenty-five men and has engaged the services of Philip Schinhan as organist. Most of the musicians are soloists and are members of the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra, the leading musical organization on the Pacific Coast. Orchestra selections are being made a distinct part of the program and, during the intermission, when pictures are not shown, the musicians occupy the stage.

Foreign Buyers in the Market.

San Francisco, Cal.—Several buyers have been in the local market during the past week, purchasing films to be shipped out of this country, and a large quantity has been gathered together. R. J. Castillo, formerly the Pathe representative at Mexico City, has been making purchases here and has had all titles translated into Spanish. Parra & Campudi have also bought quite heavily for shipment to Peru and other South American countries.

Film Exchange Changes.

San Francisco, Cal.—Charles I. Luntz, road man for the Fox Film, has been made booker, succeeding C. C. Thompson, who has left to take up similar work with the Mutual exchange.

Louis G. Stang, for years with the Mutual Film at San Francisco and Los Angeles, and until recently booker at the local branch, has resigned to enter another field. He is one of the oldest film exchange workers in this city in point of service.

L. W. Thompson, formerly with the Paramount, has taken the place of F. E. McCoy as salesman for the Mutual. Mr. McCoy is now with the Select Pictures Corporation.

San Francisco Notes.

Walter Preddey recently shipped two Power's Cameragraphs No. 6B to the Grogg Amusement Co., Bakersfield, Cal., as well as a Mazda lamp outfit to the Red River Lumber Co. at Westwood, Cal.

The Savoy theater is to be opened by William King with vaudeville and moving pictures.

The charter of the Film Exchange Operators' Union has been received and the members have taken the obligation. A minimum wage of $12.50 a week for women has been established.

M. J. Cohen, manager of the local office of the George Kleine System, went to Los Angeles recently, to represent the San Francisco film industry at the opening of the Kinema theater.

The Garrick Amusement company has been incorporated with a capital stock of $10,000 by J. W. Hudson, Robert A. Hazel and Billee Glynn.

X. K. Stout Tendered a Farewell Luncheon

Popular Exchange Man Goes to Denver to Help Distribute Foursquare Pictures—Old Associates Wish Him Well—Those Present.

By T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—Before the organization of the United Motion Picture Industry of Northern California, whose members comprise both film exchange men and exhibitors, it was almost impossible to arrange a meeting of members of the trade and secure a representative attendance. Of late, however, a decided change has been noticed in this respect and the film trade is getting together as never before, with all meetings well attended. On December 13 an au revoir luncheon was tendered to X. K. (Alphabet) Stout, who is leaving for Denver, and the private dining room at the Tait-Zinkand Cafe was hardly large enough to accommodate all who wished to do honor to this popular film exchange man.

The dining room was decorated for the occasion by a collection of posters that might well be preserved as relics of the industry, some of them harkening back to the very early producing days. The luncheon was presided over by Louis Reichert, president of the organization, and he called upon some of those present for remarks, some of those responding being James Beatty, E. O. Child, Sol Lesser, Eugene H. Roth, H. H. Hicks, E. B. Johnson, M. L. Markowitz, Sidney E. Abel and M. J. Cohen. The latter, in a neatly-turned speech, presented Mr. Stout with a handsome traveling toilet set in a leather case, on behalf of his associates in the United Motion Picture Industry of Northern California.

Mr. Stout is leaving for Denver to become connected with Ben S. Cohen in the distribution of Foursquare pictures. He has been succeeded as manager of the local branch of the Select Pictures Corporation by H. H. Hicks, formerly manager of the General branch here, but more recently with the Select at Los Angeles. Sidney E. Abel, special representative of the Select Pictures Corporation, is here, following an extended stay in the Northwest.

Freight Congestion Hurting Supply Business.

San Francisco, Cal.—Edward H. Kemp is experiencing difficulties in securing stocks of Motiographs and parts from the factory, and is just now making deliveries on orders secured weeks ago. Among the latest installations are two machines in the Peerless theater, one for Fort McDowell, one for the Bethany Church and one for the Calvary Church, all of this city.

New Producing and Distributing Concern Busy.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Paul Smith Pictures company has moved its headquarters from the Monadnock building to 120 Golden Gate avenue and is actively engaged in booking its first production, "The Finger of Justice." It has purchased the studio of the California Motion Picture Corp. at San Rafael, a suburb of this city, and has commenced preliminary work on its second picture, to be known as "More Deadly Than Battle." In order to handle the business that has already been developed the Paul Smith Pictures company has been incorporated with a capital stock of $250,000 by Paul Smith, L. H. Glide and Frederick S. Wythe.

A subsidiary concern, More Deadly Than Battle company, to handle the production of this name, has also been incorporated with a capital stock of $75,000 by Paul Smith, L. H. Glide, Frederick Wythe, Albert Ehrgott and Marion Vecki. "The Finger of Justice" has been shown over the entire T. & D. circuit and will shortly be presented at the Portola theater of this city. When it was booked for presentation at Sacramento, Cal., Edw. Haynes, commissioner of education and official censor of moving pictures, refused to allow it to be shown at the T. & D. theater, suggesting that it be offered at some hall, not a public meeting place, and that admission be denied to children. The management of this house refused to cancel the booking, making the claim that it had received the support of the press, the ministry and good government forces wherever it had been shown. The matter ended by the film being shown for four days to the greatest crowds ever drawn to this theater.

E. J. Merlin Again a House Manager.

Berkeley, Cal.—E. J. Merlin, for some time manager of the local house of the Turner & Dahnken circuit, but who resigned to go to Chicago with locally-made coin machines, is back in the field in charge of a theater again, but this time is with the Beach-Krahn Amusement Co., which now has three houses in the East Bay section. Shortly after joining the coin machine organization the war tax became operative and it was necessary to devote attention to the making of a penny attachment, and when this was done the factory was taken over for the manufacture of war materials, putting an end to the plan to go to Chicago. Mr. Merlin has had a wide experience as a theater manager, and he will be a valuable addition to the staff of the Beach-Krahn Amusement Co. At present he is stationed at the Strand theater.

San Francisco Triangle to Move.

San Francisco, Cal.—Arrangements have been concluded for the erection of a fine building at Golden Gate avenue and Jones street, the entire second floor of which will be occupied by the Triangle Film exchange, which has outgrown the present quarters. Excavation work is now under way on the site and will be rushed with all speed in order to have the building ready for occupancy early in the spring. The lower floor will be occupied by the Breck Photoplay Supply Co.

Peerless Buys Re-Issues.

San Francisco, Cal.—The Peerless Film Service has acquired the California, Arizona and Nevada rights to sixteen reissues of early Keystone comedies. This concern has met with much success in booking the Hart re-issues, and the manner in which these have been received led Manager E. H. Emmick to take over the Keystone offerings.

Mary Pickford Leads Parade.

San Francisco, Cal.—Mary Pickford, who has been in this city for several days working on a San Francisco story, "Amarillo of Clothes-Line Alley," by Miss Frances Marion, delighted thousands of spectators, blocked traffic on Market street and sadly disarranged business plans on the morning of December 13, when, clad in a skirted variation of a marine corps uniform, she marched in front of a United States Marine Corps band, baton in hand, to help spread news concerning enlistment in this branch of the service. An interesting feature of her triumph was the fact that the day before a local newspaper had made the indiscreet statement that moving pictures had become so common that the doings of any of the stars was not of interest and had no news value. The answer to this was a wonderful demonstration, followed by columns of newspaper publicity that almost crowded out the war news. During her stay here Mary Pickford shared honors with Miss Kate Stinson, the aviatrix, who flew from San Diego to this city, a distance of six hundred and ten miles, without a stop, breaking all American records. The two girls had luncheon together and speedily became chums.

Seattle Exchange Organization Elects

Meeting on December 11 Chooses J. A. Koerpal as President, A. W. Eden as Vice-President and M. Rosenberg as Secretary-Treasurer.

By S. J. Anderson, East Seattle, Wash.

SEATTLE, WASH.—At a meeting of the organization composed of the exchange managers of the Pacific Northwest at the Metropolitan Club, Seattle, on December 11, permanent officers were elected and a name decided upon. The organization is to be known as the Northwest Film Board of Trade.

The officers elected were J. A. Koerpel, Northwest World manager, president; A. W. Eden, Fox manager, vice-president; M. Rosenberg, of De Luxe Feature Film, secretary-treasurer. The exchanges in Spokane, Portland and Butte will also be admitted to the Board of Trade.

During the course of the proceedings at this meeting the Credit Committee brought up for discussion two or three cases which the committee had found it necessary to investigate. Chairman Steffy, of the Transportation and Traffic Committee, announced that he and his committee had been in conference with the division managers of four express companies which operate out of Seattle, and that he had their assurance that the transportation of film would not be delayed during the holiday rush.

"A concrete body is now formed which is ready to deal with the exhibitor for his and our own benefit," said President Koerpel to the World correspondent. "And we wish it understood that we are open to the suggestions from exhibitors throughout the territory as to how we may improve our service. Any suggestions that we receive will be forwarded to our individual home offices with our full endorsement, if we think them practicable."

Exhibitors' Film Chooses Headquarters.

Seattle, Wash.—The Exhibitors' Film exchange, which distributes in the Northwest territory the films owned by the First National Exhibitors' circuit, has been permanently established at 1200 Fourth avenue, and the force is now complete. F. D. Fisher, secretary of the Greater Theaters company, which owns the Coliseum, Liberty and Mission, of Seattle, the Liberty and Columbia, of Portland, the Rialto, of Butte, is the manager of the exchange. C. H. Feldman, formerly with General in Seattle, is road representative in the Oregon and Washington territory, and George J. Ekre, formerly salesman for Select, has the Idaho and Montana territory. S. P. Peck, for several years assistant manager of the Seattle Triangle office, is Mr. Fisher's assistant.

Select Exchanges Get New Salesmen.

Seattle, Wash.—J. S. Woody, new manager of the Northwest territory for Select Pictures, announced this week an entirely new sales-force. They are E. M. Montgomery, former Triangle salesman; F. E. Tipton, formerly with Triangle, also, and H. B. Dobbs, recently connected with Metro in Seattle.

There are other new features at the new Select headquarters which Mr. Woody did not announce, but which are, nevertheless, quite apparent. One is the champagne-colored silk sash curtains for the manager's office, and another is the neat oak railing with one of those little gates that can only be opened from the inside and which makes a correspondent feel like an outsider as he leans over it.

Items from Seattle State Rights Field.

Seattle, Wash.—Ray R. Kelsall, of the Premier Feature Film company, has bought out his partner, M. Finkelberg. The Premier company handles Moss and California Features. Mr. Kelsall will retain the present location of Premier at 2016 Third avenue.

The Greater Features company of Seattle has bought the Northwest rights to the Fairbanks burlesque comedy sold by the Broadway Films company.

M. Rosenberg, manager of De Luxe Feature Film company, returned last week from New York, where he spent several weeks.

Carl Stearn Traveling for Metro.

Seattle, Wash.—Carl Stearn, formerly manager of the Denver Pathe office, is now traveling out of Seattle for Metro.

A big trade showing of the De Luxe feature, "Blue Jeans," was given at the Seattle Metro office the week of December 17.

Harry Lustig, Metro special representative, concluded his business in Seattle this week and left for San Francisco.

A. H. Miller Meets Accident.

Spokane, Wash.—A. H. Miller, salesman for the Spokane territory for Greater Vitagraph, was in a bus which was struck by a train last week. Mr. Miller was thrown through the bus window and was badly cut. He has been in a Spokane hospital, which, at this writing, he expects to leave in a few days and continue his trip.

C. E. Stillwell Signs for Vitagraphs.

Seattle, Wash.—J. M. Tally, Northwest manager for Vitagraph, announced this week that C. E. Stillwell, of the Stillwell Amusement company, Spokane, had signed for the year's output of Vitagraph.

"My thirty days spent in the great Northwest," said Mr. Tally, "has proved that those who call it one of the toughest territories in the United States must begin to change their opinion. I have found it anything but tough."

Supply Business Holds Up Well.

Seattle, Wash.—The Theater Supply company reports that the supply business is holding up unusually well. Two Motiographs were sold from the store this week to George Reizner, of Raymond and North Bend, and F. L. Stannard, of Wenatchee, bought from them a motion picture equipment for the Elks Club of his town.

James McConahey Again Without a Theater.

SPOKANE, WASH.—When the Strand theater was demolished by fire December 8 James McConahey, manager, who is one of the pioneer moving picture operators and managers of the Pacific Northwest, was again without a home for a picture show, this being the second time this year. He was first obliged to go out of business when the Crescent store purchased the Best Show building on Main avenue and demolished it last spring, and again, when a blaze of unknown origin started in the Strand about 4:30 a. m. December 8 and raged for two hours.

The interior of the Strand, which was the old Spokane theater at W 809 First avenue, and a landmark in Spokane's theatrical horizon for 18 years, was badly damaged. Only the walls of the building were left intact and losses are estimated at $30,000 or $40,000. The building was insured for $31,000. The falling of a huge beam caused the rear wall to bulge outward, and city officials ordered the overhanging portions removed.

Mrs. Mary Palmerston White, owner of the building, is in Honolulu, but H. Witherspoon, of the Spokane and Eastern Trust Company, said that it will probably be rebuilt for commercial purposes.

Annual Children's Benefit at Liberty.

Spokane, Wash.—Poor boys and girls of the city will be the guests of L. W. Hutton at a special show at the Liberty theater at 10:30 a. m., December 22, the date fixed for the annual entertainment of Spokane's poor children by the Shrine.

Fred K. Jones, of the Shrine, is general chairman of the Christmas program planned for the boys and girls this year, and arrangements are being made by the committee for the entertainment of 500.

Manager Sam W. B. Cohn, of the Liberty, is sending for a special film for the theater party.

James R. Dixon Now in France.

Spokane, Wash.—V. C. Hill, motion picture operator at the Clemmer theater, has just received word that James R. Dixon, a picture operator with Dr. H. S. Clemmer for five years and who has been at Camp Mills, L. I., has left for France.

Some Recent Hits in Spokane.

Spokane, Wash.—Some of the moving picture shows that have crowded the Lyric to capacity houses are as follows: Charlie Chaplin in "The Champion," Dorothy Dalton in "Chicken Casey," Winifred Allen and Jack Devereaux in "The Man Who Made Good," Kathleen Clifford in "Who is Number One?", Dorothy Dalton in "Wild Winship's Widow" and William S. Hart in a reprinted edition of his great Western, "Hell's Hinges."

William Farnum, in the role of Sam Houston, hero of early Mexican hostilities in Texas, made a picturesque and interesting figure, and drew large audiences to the Casino the week of Dec. 3.

"The Whip" drew many patrons of the Liberty to that showhouse during the week of Dec. 8. On Sunday afternoon, Dec. 9, at three o'clock, there was not a seat vacant in the house, and at each performance there were large crowds standing to witness this elaborate motion picture production.

Marguerite Clark, starring in "Bab's Burglar," proved a big success for the Clemmer theater.

E. R. Hickey, who has been manager of the Auditorium and the Armory theaters, retires from the exhibitors' field and will become identified with the Griffith film interests.

Halcombe, Wis.—A. J. Edminster is interested in a project to erect an opera house here.

Monroe, Wis.—Miss Marie Speck directed a fifteen-piece orchestra which furnished the music for the opening of the Crystal theater, which is in the location of the old theater by the same name. As a special concession the war tax was waived the first night. R. T. Holcomb and Joseph Collins are proprietors of the new house.

Phillips, Wis.—The Idle Hour theater has been sold to C. A. Nelson and E. H. Neef.

Madison, Wis.—Construction of the moving picture theater for Dr. William E. Beecroft on East Mifflin street has begun. This building will be in the rear of the Strand, which will form the entrance and the foyer. It will cost $100,000.

PORTLAND, ORE., NOTES.

V. M. Schubach Never with Metro.

Portland, Ore.—V. M. Schubach, genial traveler for Universal, wants to make it plain that he is not with Metro and never has been, as has been reported in trade journals. He has been serving Universal for several years and intends to stay with the firm. He recently returned from a road trip through the territory which he reports was very successful.

Hippodrome Improves Projection.

Portland, Ore.—The Hippodrome theater, the big Ackerman & Harris house, is goin after improved projection, and recently installed two of the latest model machines furnished by Pete Sabo. The Hip is a combination vaudeville and picture house, and it has been customary in some houses of this class to run the pictures through any old kind of way. The Hippodrome management is featuring its pictures, however, and the new equipment is the result. Owing to the indifferent projection of pictures in some of the combination theaters, it has not been a credit to exchanges to book pictures in this class of shows.

Vaughn Has Business Getting Scheme.

Kelso, Wash.—C. G. Vaughn, Vogue theater, has a business getting scheme which is hard to beat for a small town. His operating booth is equipped with a Motiograph machine and is big enough to swing the projector all the way around. Before the regular show starts he turns the machine through a porthole in his front wall and shows a Ford travel weekly or some picture on an open air screen across the street. Then he shows a short trailer on his picture after the crowd begins to gather. This he follows with a leader, inviting his audience to come in and see the rest of the show, which they usually do.

New Show for Tillamook.

Portland, Ore.—Reports have come from Tillamook, Ore., that another house has opened there, at the stand of the old Gem. The manager is Y. L. Peel, and new equipment has been installed by Pete Sabo. Partridge and Morrison moved from this location to the new Gem some time ago.

Rainier Grand Reopens.

Rainier, Ore.—The Grand theater has been reopened under the management of Norman and Gray, new men in the show business. This house has been closed for some time.

Comedies Are in Big Demand in Oregon

Greater Call Among Exhibitors of the Northwest Than Ever Before—War Times Patrons Want Enlivening—Plead for Laughmakers.

By Abraham Nelson, 601 Journal Bldg., Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, ORE.—The comedy has come into his own. W. A. Mead, assistant manager for the Fox Film Corporation in these parts, recently made a trip through Eastern Oregon and Washington and reports that the exhibitors are actually crying for comedy features as against the sob stories. He says it is on account of war conditions.

Heavy feature programs without a comedy to lighten them are going to be losers for the unwise exhibitors, says Mr. Mead. Now that the big features, in six, seven and eight reels are becoming popular among exhibitors who are vieing with each other to show the biggest and grandest productions, the comedy is apt to be lost sight of in an effort to run the big show through in the usual short time. This is a grievious mistake, according to the Eastern Oregon exhibitors with whom Mr. Mead discused the question and who have become awakened to the situation. Mr. Mead's advice to exhibitors is to run a good comedy even if the show is a long one.

Speaking About Children's Patronage.

Portland, Ore.—Evidently for the lack of something more sensational, the Oregon Daily Journal, having about the biggest circulation of any newspaper in Oregon, recently took occasion to head an article concerning the annual meeting of the State Association of County Judges, "'Movies' Worse Than Saloons; So Says the Judge." The review of the association's doings was about a thousand words in length and all the remarks about the "Movies" that the learned judge made were contained in about forty words; this was seized upon by the Journal as capital headline matter, to the displeasure of the Portland film fraternity, who have been unable to account for the newspaper's attitude.

That the present day moving picture, as it concerns the big downtown theaters should be the cause of less concern among the child welfare people than it has been heretofore, is evidenced by statistics gathered at one of the biggest Portland theaters. Checking over the business for the first fifteen days in December, it is noticed that the average children's attendance on a day when there are five thousand adult admissions is less than one hundred, that during a day when there are two thousand adult tickets sold, the average children's admisison is about 20.

Manager E. J. Myrick, of the Liberty, is going to give a special show to children on Christmas to ascertain how popular motion pictures are with the youngsters. He is making plans to entertain five thousand youngsters absolutely free with a special children's picture and lots of candy for everybody.

C. W. Meighan Again an Exhibitor.

Portland, Ore.—C. W. Meighan, president of the Oregon Exhibitors' League, and former manager of the Peoples Amusement Company, is back in the exhibition game again after a fling on the road as film salesman. Mr. Meighan has taken over the management of the Crystal, the leading theater at Astoria, and it is rumored that he has acquired an interest in the business. The Crystal uses feature pictures and three acts of vaudeville.

Mr. Meighan is noted for his progressive methods of theater management and he has already put in several innovations at the Crystal with good effect. The Crystal was formerly operated by Strauss & Dean, and Mr. Strauss has been conducting it for the past year after the death of his partner.

Richard Hobson, house manager at the Crystal, was a recent visitor in Portland, and reported excellent business at his theater despite the war conditions. Prices in Astoria were raised a nickel to meet the war tax and the patrons took the raise without comment. The Crystal is now getting 25 and 35 cents.

Turkeys Got Business for Alhambra.

Portland, Ore.—W. E. Tebbetts, owner of the Alhambra theater, demonstrated this past Thanksgiving that prizes, if given judiciously, get the business for suburban theaters. Mr. Tebbetts had a serial that was getting over only fair, so he arranged to give away fifteen turkeys prior to Thanksgiving, making the serial nights the big nights. Crowds flocked to the Alhambra and the patrons brought their children, paying the full price of admission for them in order to get a ticket that might win a turkey.

The money was well spent, says Mr. Tebbetts, inasmuch as the crowds took hold of the serial and have been following it ever since. H. C. Phillips, at the Tivoli, and G. T. Holtzclaw, at the Circle, also gave away turkeys preceding Thanksgiving with good results.

J. J. Parker Exploits Industries.

Portland, Ore.—J. J. Parker, manager-owner of the Majestic theater, believes in exploiting the state of Oregon at every opportunity. Recently he delegated W. A. Van Scoy, Pathe camerman, to photograph a ship launching, many of which are now held on the Willamette river. Manager Parker then wrote the sub-titles to go with the picture and it was a feature of the Majestic, attracting much attention because of its popular character.

Geo. Bligh Plays Road Shows.

Portland, Ore.—George Bligh, Salem, Ore, theatrical magnate, was in Portland a few days ago booking service and talked of the changed business conditions since the advent of the war tax. Since the photoplay theaters raised their prices, road shows have become more popular in the Capital City, he says. People feel the raise more when it comes to pictures than they do when it concerns road shows and the popularity of the latter has resulted.

Mr. Bligh is now using the Salem opera house for road shows, and recently showed "Watch Your Step" to capacity business with a top price of two dollars. Six months ago, says Mr. Bligh, he would not have dared played shows of this caliber.

Are They Fooling Themselves?

Portland, Ore.—"How's business?" the writer asks well-known exhibitors, having in mind always the war tax. "Great," the exhibitors answer in a matter of fact kind of a way.

But is business in Portland great? The writer says, No. A review of the situation for the month of November and part of December since the war tax went into effect indicates that exhibitors are either trying to fool each other if not themselves by maintaining that business is great. The increase in prices, even if in pennies only, has caused the business to fall off, and where conditions with theaters have been precarious heretofore they are now alarming. This is more true than ever in the towns where recent recruiting has cut down the show going population.

TROUBLE MAKERS.

William Fox Presents Jane and Katherine Lee in a Rollicking Farce Designed Especially to Exploit Their Fun-making Abilities.

Cast.

Mrs. Lehr.....Lillian Concord
Jane } Her children { .....Jane Lee
Katherine } Her children { Katherine Lee
Daniel Whitcomb.....Richard Turner
Job Jenkins.....Robert Vivian
Isaac White.....William T. Hayes
Manny.....Stuart Sage
Cynthia.....Frances Miller

Written and directed by Keanan Buel.

The Story: Jane and Katherine are the children of Mrs. Lehr, a widow, but they might as well be your children, for they do the things all children do that are funnily exasperating. They drive their mother wild, but when Mrs. Lehr's brother is suspected of murder, these lovable little troublemakers solve the mystery without half trying and win a reprieve for their condemned uncle.

For the Program: The Fox Baby Grands in a new bunch of mischief.

If you want to laugh, here's your chance.

Advertising Phrases: They made trouble until trouble came, then they drove trouble away.

Trouble-making trouble menders.

Feature These Players: Jane and Katherine Lee, the tiny comedy stars.

Stunt Suggestions: Place a mirror in the lobby with a sign: "If you cannot find a trouble maker here, there are two inside the theater." Get out throwaways headed "Murder" in the largest possible type. Offer a reward for the discovery of the murderer of Job Jenkins and wind up with "for further information apply at the —— theater or see The Trouble Makers (date)." Keep the last lines the same size as the body type. Do not use display.

Advertising Aids: Two each one, three and six sheets. One 24-sheet. Lobby displays 8x10, 14, 11x14 and 22x28. The latter are colored. Slides. Mats. Press sheets.

Violet as a child.....Nancy Taswell
Rev. David Cromwell.....L. C. Shumway
Caribou Bill.....G. Raymond Nye
Buck.....Murdock MacQuarrie
Frank Carson.....Fred Milton
Frank as a child.....Ernest Wade

The Story: Left alone in the Klondike by the death of her father, Violet is approached by a young man, who seeks her aid in going to his sick mother. He proves to be her brother, and to get him money for his trip, she offers herself to the highest bidder. She is "bought" by the minister, who mortgages himself to the saloon keeper. Death cancels the debt and the daring venture ends happily.

For the Program: Is wrong ever right?

A minister mortgaged himself that he might buy her.

Advertising Phrases: Dive keeper loans a minister money with which to buy a young girl.

She sought to sacrifice herself to soothe her mother's last hours.

Feature This Player: Jewel Carmen, former leading woman for William Farnum, in her first stellar role.

Stunt Suggestions: Coax the ministers and women's clubs to discuss the ethics of the sale. Perhaps you can work this through the daily paper if there is one. Use a teaser snipe "Is a girl right in selling herself for her mother's sake?" Repeat this on half sheets with "See The Kingdom of Love at (house and date)."

Advertising aids: Two styles each, one, three and six sheets. One 24-sheet. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x28. The latter in colors. Slides. Mats. Press sheet.

Gwendolyn Van Loon.Francelia Billington
Dad Fowler.....Harvey Clark
Jimmie Keen.....Clarence Burton
Steve Diamond.....Edward Peil
Lord Cheadle.....Alfred Ferguson
Peter Van Loon.....Frederick Vroom
Palter.....Carl Stockdale

The Story: Nick Fowler is the station agent at a Maine village and his day-dreaming seriously interferes with his efficiency as a railroader. When he barely escapes the responsibilty for a head-on collision, he gives up the job to go to the city at the instance of a motion-picture director. He is given a rousing send-off, but it doesn't seem the same in the big town. He is about to write home his despair, but he feels that they want romance not hard-luck stories, and he weaves a letter around his supposed adventures with the girl he came to town to seek. The letter is good enough to sell for a picture plot—and he meets the girl, too.

For the Program: The small town boy and the big town girl.

He lives the romance he wrote.

Advertising Phrases: Day dreams that brought the dough.

He fell among thieves, but married millions.

Feature These Players: William Russell as the day dreamer who made good.

Francelia Billington, as the only girl.

Stunt Suggestions: For the lobby build up a scene model on a dirt-covered table with twigs and cardboard houses. Lay tracks for toy trains, and put two trains facing each other. On the backing letter: "These two trains are rushing together while the man who might avert a tragedy was day dreaming of New York conquests. To learn how it came out, see New York Luck (date)." If the trains are borrowed add "Toys from ——." For the street make a dummy motion camera and pretend to take pictures. When a crowd gathers, flash a sign reading "Nick Fowler (William Russell) was a station agent in a Maine town, but broke into the Movies in New York Luck (house and date) tonight."

Advertising Aids: One, three and six sheets. Banner. One, two and three-column cuts and mats. Program cover cut 4x4, slides, lobby photos 11x14 and 22x28. Slide. Press sheet.

UNTIL THEY GET ME.

Cast.

Margy.....Pauline Starke
Richard Selwyn.....Joe King
Kirby.....Jack Curtis
Draper.....Wilbur Higbee
Mrs. Draper.....Anna Dodge
Sergt. Bianey.....Walter Perry

Directed by Frank Borzage.

The Story: Kirby, the object of relentless pursuit by Richard Selwyn, of the Mounted, promises to return on each anniversary of the birth of his motherless little daughter "until they get me." He confides his secret to Margy and she accidentally reveals it to Selwyn. An ingenious complication rises with a novel solution.

For the Program: He told his secret to a woman.

Birthdays that were fraught with danger.

Advertising Phrases: He "got" his man, and the girl, too.

A tragedy of the land of snows.

Feature These Players: Pauline Starke, as the protege of the mounted police.

Joe King, as the policeman.

Stunt Suggestions: For lobby or store windows use a crude cradle (rustic or soap box) covered with a gay Indian blanket. For the card "Each year a man risked his life for the sake of this motherless babe in Until They Get Me (house and date). A story that's different." Send out a "squaw" carrying a well-wrapped doll. On her back place a sign reading: "See the youngest actor in the world (four days old) in Until They Get Me (house and date). She earned $40 before she was seven days old."

Advertising Aids: Two one, one three and one six-sheet. Herald in rotogravure Lobby displays, 11x14 in sepia and tinted. Tinted scene, 22x28. Electros and mats. Press sheet.

Look for our New Department "ADVERTISING AIDS FOR BUSY MANAGERS" Every Week You Can Use It and You Should.

BLUE JEANS.

Metro Releases B. R. Rolfe's Seven-act Presentation of Joseph Arthur's Famous Success, Blue Jeans. Adapted by June Mathis and C. A. Taylor.

Cast.

June.....Viola Dana
Perry Bascom.....Robert Walker
Sue Eudaly.....Sally Crute
Ben Boone.....Clifford Bruce
Col. Henry Clay Risener....Henry Hallam
Jacob Tutwiler.....Russell Simpson
Cindy Tutwiler.....Margaret McWade
Jack Bascom.....Augustus Phillips

Directed by John H. Collins.

The Story: An adaptation of one of the successes of twenty-five years ago and the pioneer play with a mechanical sensation, Blue Jeans has pleased three generations of playgoers as a stage drama, the original production listing Robert Hilliard and Jeannie Yeamans as its stars. The story of Perry Bascom's adventures in the little Indiana town of Rising Sun has lost none of its charm and the sensational sawmill scene still proves a whirlwind sensation.

For the Program: The "Old Homestead" of the Middle West.

The small town idyl.

Advertising Phrases: "Ask Dad, he knows it."

A play of homely sentiment and thrills.

Feature These Players: Viola Dana as June, the little waif.

Robert Walker, as Perry Bascom.

Sally Crute as the village vampire.

Augustus Phillips as Jack.

Stunt Suggestions: The sawmill scene will make a striking lobby display, and can be handled inexpensively or elaborately, as desired. For street work reproduce the Rising Sun band, which figures in the story. You can use them in a campaign parade with a transparency reading: "For Congress, Jim Nelson," and another advertising your house and attraction.

Advertising Aid: Not given.

NAN OF MUSIC MOUNTAIN.

Jesse L. Lasky Presents Wallace Reid in Nan of Music Mountain, by Frank H. Spearman. Screen Version by Beulah Marie Dix.

Cast.

Henry de Spain.....Wallace Reid
Nan Morgan.....Ann Little
Duke Morgan.....Theodore Roberts
Gale Morgan.....James Cruze
Sassoon.....Charles Ogle
Logan.....Raymond Hatton
Sandusky.....Hart Hoxie
Bull Page.....Guy Oliver
Scott.....James P. Mason
Jeffries.....Henry Woodward
Lefever.....Ernest Joy
Nita.....Alice Marc
McAlpin.....Horace B. Carpenter

Directed by George H. Melford.

The Story: Henry de Spain, a young mountaineer, is made General Manager of the Thief River stage line, because he can shoot and someone is needed to clean up the "Morgan Gang," led by Duke Morgan, with whose pretty niece, Nan, de Spain is in love. He is wounded by the gang, but rescued by Nan. Duke plans to marry Nan to her worthless cousin, Gale, but Nan loves de Spain and fights him off. De Spain comes to carry her off and succeeds, but Nan learns, to her horror, that it was her Uncle who de Spain has vowed to kill to avenge the death of his father, and she starts back to the old ruffian. De Spain follows and in the end peace is made between the Morgans and the stage line.

For the Program: Love averts a blood atonement.

A notable story with a still more notable cast.

Advertising Phrases: He wooed under fire and wedded in the snow.

Wallace Reid as the man who dared death for love.

Feature These Players; Wallace Reid is the announced star of this production, but it will pay to play up the general excellence of a cast including Ann Little, Theodore Roberts, James Cruze and Charles Ogle, all of whom have starred.

Stunt Suggestions: If you can get a western looking stage, letter it "Thief Valley Line," and send it through the streets with a four-horse team. Interest book stores in displaying the book. Lend them scene photographs with which to attract attention. For the lobby frame a copy of the book behind glass, having it open at some exciting situation, the suspense of which is carried to the next page. Letter the card: "You cannot turn the page and read the rest. You can come in and see the whole story (date)."

Advertising Aids: Two one, two three and two six sheets. Photos, 8x10, 11x14 and 22x29. Cuts and mats, five one-column, two three two-column and two three-column, each for star and production. Advertising layout mats. Slides. Press book

THE FAIR BARBARIAN.

Jesse L. Lasky Presents Vivian Martin in a Dramatization of Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett's Famous Novel. Adapted by Edith M. Kennedy.

Cast.

Octavia Bassett.....Vivian Martin
Martin Bassett.....G. H. Geldert
Jack Belasy .....Douglas McLean
Belinda Bassett.....Jane Wolff
Lady Theobald.....Josephine Crowell
Lucia.....Mae Buch
Rev. Poppleton.....William Hutchinson

The Story: Octavia Bassett, a breezy American girl, is immured in a small English town with her aunt, a resident. She does not like the easy-going life and her efforts to inject some "pep" into the sleepy residents is electrifying. The men all want to marry her and the women are all afraid that she will cut them out, but in the end Jack Belasy turns up, and they find that they have worried over nothing. But Octavia certainly did rearrange the town.

For the Program: An American breeze in a British calm.

She had the women worried, but she didn't want their men.

Advertising Phrases: Breezy as Boreas.

As peacefully calm as a cyclone.

Feature These Players: Vivian Martin, as the breezy American girl.

Douglas McLean, as her American sweetheart.

Stunt Suggestions: Fake a dozen "scalps" from an old fur rug, painting the under side of the skin a bright red. String in the lobby or set on a frame with a blood-stained tomahawk and carving knife, with a sign: "They thought the breezy American was after scalps—but she wasn't. See Vivian Martin in The Fair Barbarian (date)." Send a girl (or man dressed as a girl) in Indian dress through the streets, with a back sign reading "Pocahontas was the first barbarian to invade England. Who was the second? See The Fair Barbarian at (house and date)."

Advertising Aids: Two styles each, one, three and six sheets. Photos: ten 8x10, black and whites, eight 11x14 and two 22x28 in colors. Cuts and mats for both star and production, five each one-column, three two-column and two three-column. Advertising layout mats. Slides, Press book.

Released December 17.

WITHOUT HONOR.

Triangle Presents an Engrossing Study of a Weak Willed Man and a Woman Who Truly Placed Love Before Honor. By C. Gardner Sullivan.

Cast.

Jeanie McGregor.....Margery Wilson
Breeze Ballard.....Arthur Moon
Deacon Hanaford.....Walt Whitman
Roy Hanaford.....Darrell Foss
Mrs. Dawson.....Anna Dodge
Hank Dobbs.....Walter Perkins

Directed by E. Mason Hopper.

The Story: Weak willed and revolting at the intolerable condition of his home life, Roy Hanaford seeks to lose his identity in the city. Befriended by Ballard, he finds new prosperity and marries again, concealing the fact of his former marriage, but her father finds out and to save the man she loves from prison Jeannie denies the marriage and bravely bears her burden of shame until it is lifted by other means.

For the Program: She loved her husband more than honor.

She saved him from a felon's cell to fill a drunkard's grave.

Advertising Phrases: The gripping story of a supreme sacrifice.

A woman who truly loved.

Feature These Players: Margery Wilson as the sacrificing young wife.

Arthur Moon, as the man who saved the day.

Stunt Suggestions: It should be easy to start a newspaper or club controversy on the question of whether a woman's greater duty is toward her husband or her child. Use teaser snipes with the same question and follow with sheets repeating the question and adding "See Without Honor at (house and date)."

Advertising Aids: Two one, one three and one-six sheet. Herald in rotogravure. Sepia and tinted lobby displays, 11x14. Slides. Electros, mats, 22x28 tinted scene photo. Press sheet.

Released December 23.

HIS MOTHER'S BOY.

Thomas H. Ince Presents Charles Ray in a Screen Version of Rupert Hughes' Story, When Life Is Marked Down. Adaptation by Ella Stuart Carson.

Cast.

Matthew Denton.....Charles Ray
Mabel Glenny.....Doris Lee
Banty Jones.....William Elmer
Tom Glenny.....Joseph Swickard
Jimmie Noonan.....Jerome Storm
Mrs. Denton.....Gertrude Claire
Mrs. Glenny.....Lydia Knott

The Story: Matthew Denton has lived the narrow life of a small New England town until his father's death. Then he goes West to look into his father's involved affairs and finds that he and his neighbors have been swindled. He not only beats the swindlers, but he comes home with a bride as well as the cash, after enough excitement to last him for a life time.

For the Program: You've seen The Son of His Father. Now see His Mother's Boy.

He was easy-going until the going got rough and then——.

Advertising Phrases: His Mother's Boy was not tied to her apron strings.

Texas was tough, but His Mother's Boy was tougher.

Feature These Players: Charles Ray as the young New Englander who bests the oil-well sharpers.

William Elmer, as Banty Jones.

Doris Lee, as Mabel Glenny.

Stunt Suggestions: For street work dress a man in a straw hat, linen duster with a red "comforter" about his neck, high, unblacked boots. Give him a carpet sack, well filled, and tied with a clothes line long enough to go several times around the bag. Let him pause at each corner, unwind the rope and take out a card lettered "I'm His Mother's Boy on my way to Texas. You can see what I did there

THE MANXMAN.

Goldwyn Presents George Loane Tucker's Visualization of Hall Caine's Masterpiece, The Manxman, Made on the Historic Island Itself.

Cast.

Pete.....Fred Groves
Philip.....Henry Ainley
Kate.....Elizabeth Risdon

The Story: Hall Caine's splendid story of the love of man for man, greater than the love of man for woman, finds an unusual exemplification in this production made upon the Isle of Man itself, with the hearty cooperation of the government and the residents. In the great scenes upon Tynewald Hill more than eleven thousand persons volunteered their services.

For the Program: Not a dramatization but a realization of Hall Caine's great novel.

Eleven thousand Manxmen made the Manxman.

Advertising Phrases: A triumph of acted literature.

Direct from its New York run.

Feature These Players: Elizabeth Risdon, as Kate.

Fred Groves, as Pete.

Henry Ainley, as Philip.

All three are British players of note.

Stunt Suggestions: Before showing the paper use teaser snipes and newspaper liners reading: "What man has three legs" When the title is announced explain that it is the Isle of Man, the "Three Legs of Man' 'kicking at England, Scotland and Ireland.'" In the lobby display the device and above letter, "This is the arms of the Isle of Man, where the Manxman was made." Below use "How can legs be arms?" Or letter the latter legend upon a curtain placed over the frame to be lifted by the curious. Notify the libraries and try to get an announcement up. Get the book stores to display the book with a window card. It might be possible to induce some bookseller to offer a free ticket with each book. Do not try street stunts other than a straight advertising float.

Advertising Aids: Three styles of one-sheets, two styles each of three and six-sheets. One 24-sheet. Lobby photographs, 8x10 and 11x14. Cut for herald. One-column cuts of each of the three stars. Press sheet.

Released December 1.

THE CINDERELLA MAN.

Goldwyn Presents Mae Marsh in Edward Child Carpenter's Famous Stage Play of the Same Title. Directed by George Loane Tucker.

Cast.

Marjorie Caner.....Mae Marsh
Anthony Quintar.....Tom Moore
Romney Evans.....Alec B. Francis
Morris Caner.....George Fawcett
Primrose.....Louis R. Grisel

The Story: Through the death of her mother, who has been separated from her husband, Marjorie is called back to her father's home. The father is indifferent to her and is perfectly willing that she should marry a fortune hunter to get her out of the way, but his old friend objects and provides the imaginative young girl with a more healthful romance in the person of the Cinderella Man.

For the Program: Mae Marsh in a real Broadway success.

The Cinderella Man wasn't lonely, but the Fairy Godmother was.

Advertising Phrases: The Christmas party of a multi-millionaress.

Nothing between them but six tin roofs.

Feature These Players: Mae Marsh in her third Goldwyn production.

Tom Moore as the musical genius.

Stunt Suggestions: For the lobby make a Cinderella coach with a pumpkin and toy rats, but with a boy doll sitting in state, or use a portrait of Miss Marsh with bags of money on one side and pages of music (not popular songs) on the other. Top with a card asking "Which did the heiress chose See The Cinderella Man. Here (date)." For a street float show Caner in an easy chair with a rug over his lap concealing both feet. Have a false leg with bandaged foot come from beneath the rug and have a brawny man pound this with a sledge. Letter the banners on the side, "No wonder his daughter turned to The Cinderella Man. See it at the —— (date)."

Advertising Aids: Cuts, posters and photographic copy for line cut advertisements.

Released December 16.

THE GIRL BY THE ROADSIDE.

Bluebird Presents Violet Mersereau in a Screen Version of Varick Vanardy's Novel of the Same Name. Adapted by John C. Brownell.

Cast.

Judith Ralston.....Violet Mersereau
Rudd Ralston.....Cecil Owen
Vera Ralston.....Ann Andrews
Boone Pendleton.....Allen Edwards
Fayban.....Robert F. Hill
Billy Cartwright.....Royal Byron

The Story: On a motor tour with her brother and his wife, Judith Ralston hires a horse and goes for a gallop. She is thrown and is injured. Boone Pendleton finds her and carries her to his cabin, the only refuge from the storm. Meantime a Secret Service officer has arrested her brother and his wife and comes in search of her. Judith learns, for the first time, that her brother is dishonest, but promises to give him her aid. There follows a chain of exciting incidents, but in the end all comes well for Judith.

For the Program: What would you do if you found your brother was a criminal?

Blood is more binding than the word of the law.

Advertising Phrases: Learn the secret of the cellar.

An auto trip that led through crime to happiness.

Feature These Players: Violet Mersereau as the innocent sister.

Cecil Owen as the counterfeiter.

Allan Edwards as Boone.

Stunt Suggestions: Get a bundle of stage money and stamp it "Counterfeit." Perhaps your bank will loan you a stamp. Place in the lobby explaining that "This sort of money paid the expenses of the trip that led The Girl by the Roadside to happiness. With Violet Mersereau. Here (date)." The greenbacks may be back printed for throwaways if desired. Or obtain from the bank one of the printed slips listing counterfeit issues in circulation. Check one and lead a heavy line from the check mark to the same legend as above.

Advertising Aids: One and two-column cuts.

Released December 31.

THE NARROW TRAIL.

Thomas H. Ince Presents William S. Hart in Mr. Hart's Own Drama of the West He Loves Best. Arranged for the Screen by Harvey Thew.

Cast.

Ice Harding.....William S. Hart
Betty Werdin.....Sylvia Bremer
"Admiral" Bates.....Milton Ross
Moose Holloran.....Robert Kortman
"The King".....Fritz

The Story: Ice Harding, leader of a band of outlaws, covets the pinto leader of a band of wild horses and, after a long chase, ropes and breaks him. Ice and "The King" become fast friends and when the rest of the gang object to the King because his peculiar markings betray their presence, Ike breaks with the gang, determined to play a lone hand rather than give up his horse. But he searches for the girl he loves and finds her a siren on the Barbary Coast instead of the girl he thought she was and, broken hearted, he returns to the mountains. It is the King who ultimately carries him to happiness.

For the Program: Bill Hart's own story of the west he loves best.

Better a painted pony than a painted woman.

Advertising Phrases: He loved his horse far better than his pals.

Hart's own idea of a western play.

Features These Players: Concentrate upon Hart, who in this play makes his debut on the Paramount program.

Sylvia Bremmer, as the niece of the Vice King.

Stunt Suggestions: For the lobby cut a heart stencil and with this letter "The Narrow Trail" on a card and offer a prize for the first person correctly reading the announcement. Most will guess Hart in The Narrow Trail, but the correct title should read "Hart's The Narrow Trail." Before the contest deposit this phrase in a sealed envelope with the local bank, in a store window or attach to the sign itself. Duplicate in store windows if possible. The exact phrase will serve to attract attention to the fact that Hart wrote this play. If you cannot find a pinto pony for street work, make one by daubing any horse with water colors. If it happens to rain, work the papers for an extra story on how the colors ran.

Advertising Aids: Half sheet window cards, two one-sheets, two three-sheets, two six-sheets, one 24-sheet. Five one column, three two-column and two three-column scene cuts and mats. Layout mats, three one-column, two two-column and one three-column cuts and mats of star. Slide. Press book.

SPARKLE COMEDY.

SMASHING THE PLOT (One Reel).—Jennie, maid of all work in the home of a railroad president, hears the strains of her sweetheart's hand organ outside her window. Tony sends her a note beseeching her to go to a "wop" dance that afternoon, entrusting the note to the monkey, who promptly delivers it to Mr. Barker and his wife who are sitting on the lawn. The note is finally delivered to Jennie and that afternoon they hie themselves to the dance. Here Tony is given a "high sign" by a fierce looking "wop" informing him that his presence is desired at a meeting of the secret society in the basement. He rushes off and Jennie follows and from an adjoining rooms overhears them draw lots to see who shall blow up the railroad bridge that afternoon as President Barker passes over it. Tony feels highly honored when he draws the lucky number, but Jennie, hearing that Tony was "framed," springs a trap in the floor and down go several of the "wops." She tries to escape but is captured and made a member of the secret society. She is instructed to blow up Mr. Barker's home, but instead mounts a horse and gallops after Tony who has found a hand car on the track. Then follows an exciting chase, the "wops" having mysteriously appeared on the scene in a carriage. Jennie, seeing they are gaining on her, throws her bomb and blows up the carriage. Mounted police are called out and take up the chase in a patrol, while the "wops" continue on to the bridge in a row boat. Jennie arrives just in time to flag the train and taking the infernal machine from Tony throws it into the boatload of "wops," incidentally pushing Tony off the bridge. She dives over after him and drags him ashore and tells him that blowing up railroad presidents is a "bum job."

BROADWAY STAR FEATURE.

THE FOURTH IN SALVADOR (One of the O. Henry Series—Two Parts).—The cast: Billy Casparis (Chet Ryan); Maximilian Jones (W. L. Rodgers); Sterrett (Jack Wetherby),; General Dingo (Charles Wheelock); Billfinger (Fred Behrle). Directed by David Smith.

In Salvador Billy Casparis is granted the ice-making concession, posting one thousand dollars forfeit that he will make ice continuously for six months. The six months will be up on July 6, and for three weeks Billy has not been able to make ice. On the third of July the inspector discovers that he is trying to palm off on them a cake of glass made to look like ice.

Casparis and other Americans determine to celebrate the Fourth as American gentlemen should, and General Dingo, leader of the revolutionary party, offers them aid. They believe he is doing it to help them celebrate, whereas a real revolution is scheduled for the morrow. The Americans start the day along conventional lines—divesting the bars as they go along of all strong drink bearing American labels. Just as things are beginning to liven up along comes General Dingo on a white horse with a couple of hundred natives. They attack the garrison and are forced into retreat. The Americans, thinking the soldiers are trying to stop their patriotic demonstration, attack them and win the battle for the revolutionists under General Dingo. They know nothing of this, however, until the next day, when the General and the newly-elected president call on Billy to thank him for his bravery in winning the victory for them. Moreover, they insist on calling the piece of glass "ice" and tell Casparis he has lived up to his contract and that the thousand dollars will be returned.

THE GUY AND THE GEYSER (One Reel—Dec. 24).—The cast: Baron Island (Wadsworth Harris); Saharah Island (Gladys Tennyson); Bill Ding (Dave Morris). Written and directed by Craig Hutchinson.

Bill Ding was the proprietor of the Peek-a-Boo Inn, and a handy man was he, but all for the ladies. Baron Island and his young bride arrived at the inn to view the gushing geyser, which Bill Ding had advertised extensively and which he had improvised in the back yard of his hotelerinn. Now, Bill Ding was smitten with the young bride as soon as he laid eyes on her, and decided to go into the fortune-telling business. So while Baron Island was entertaining his booze-em friend in the grill, Bill Ding launched his new venture.

"I see a terrible misfortune has befallen you—sad—very—you've just married," he said, when suddenly and without a word of warning he heard the voice of the titled gentleman: "I am thinking very seriously of killing you," but Bill Ding very quickly informed him that it was against the rules of the hotel. Baron Island promised to spare his life if Bill Ding showed him the gushing geyser at once. There was no such animal, so Bill Ding thought it a good plan to rid himself of the titled pest and gently, but firmly, threw him over the cliff, the rope catching Bill Ding's foot, thus saving Baron Island's life from an oncoming train. Even this didn't shake the Baron's determination to see the gushing geyser, so a few minutes later from out the depths of a buried hose rushed the beautiful geyser and Baron Island departed, satisfied and victorious. But Bill Ding, despite his efforts to corner the love market, met with no success, and decided to depart for regions unexplored.

AMBROSE'S ICY LOVE (Two Parts—Dec. 26).—The cast: Ambrose (Mack Swain); The Girl (Rae Godfrey); Jack Frost (Jack Perrin). Directed by W. S. Fredericks, under J. G. Blystone's supervision.

The two hundred pounds of Ambrose was his mother's pride and joy. But his employer, Jack Frost, froze him with every look because he loved Rosabelle. Jack Frost most appropriately was in the ice business. He discovered Ambrose's secret vice—chocolates—the curse of his otherwise perfect manhood, and substituting brandied ones, he started Ambrose on a joy ride on a cake of ice. When Ambrose came to, he not only was disgraced, but the workmen were on strike. "Give us a steam-heated ice-house," they demanded. But Ambrose, who was foreman of the cold storage plant, believed in cold comfort. He fired them, and of course they had to have revenge. Another of Ambrose's cute little tricks was a hickory correspondence tree. Jack Frost knew this, and put a decoy letter in the old hickory, apparently from Rosabelle, asking Ambrose to meet her at three o'clock. In the meantime Frost had abducted Rosabelle and chained her to a cake of ice in his ice-house. When Ambrose discovered the perfidy he got so much speed up on the old Ford that he couldn't stop, and bored right through the ice-house.

ISSUE NO. 50 (Dec. 22).

Preparedness.—Ballooning for Boches. The reliable captive balloon is to play a big part in Uncle Sam's aerial activities. It is the aeroplane's chief aid, and of untold value in directing bombardments and infantry attacks and detecting camouflage.

Agriculture.—Down in sections of the Blue Ridge Mountains, North Carolina, modern farming methods are absolutely unknown. They still do things just as their ancestors did two hundred years ago.

Fashions.—From Paris to Peru for Fashions. Modern designers are falling back on ancient garments for ideas in styles. (Posed by Mlle. Sumene.)

Dangerous Occupations. — Training Fire "Rookies." No job calls for greater athletic prowess, devotion to duty, and heroism than a fireman's. Young candidates for the New York Fire Department are put through a vigorous preliminary training.

ISSUE NO. 51 (Dec. 29).

Preparedness.—Doing Their "Little Bit." Daughters of prominent families of Chicago make "trench stoves" or candles for the boys in the trenches. They burn from 30 to 50 minutes, and soldiers can use them to warm their hands or their food. "We love to make 'em," the girlies say.

Sports.—The Sport of Sports. World's champion skaters give remarkable exhibitions of their skill at St. Nicholas Rink, New York. Bior Meyer, professional figure skating champion of the world, performs a few rare stunts.

Animal Friends.—Training Police Horses. With the traffic problems in our great cities every day becoming more serious the traffic policeman and his horse grow in importance.

What We Eat.—Uncle Sam's Pig Club Work. The U. S. Department of Agriculture and the State Colleges of Agriculture are co-operating in the organization of "Pig Clubs" in all parts of the country to teach boys improved methods of raising swine. 45,000 boys are enrolled. Johnny Jones tells how he became interested. (By courtesy of the United States Department of Agriculture.)

THE RED ACE—(Episode No. 11 "The Burning Span"—Two parts, Dec. 29).

Winthrop picks Virginia up, but realizing that they cannot overtake the fugitives, the two hurry back to the station and wire ahead to have the engine stopped and the men arrested. Then they make what speed they can in the speedster. Hirtzman realizes that the police will probably be on the lookout for him, and accordingly they leave the engine in the next town. Virginia and Winthrop find the deserted locomotive and drive it up to the station. When they arrive the sheriff, thinking them spies, puts them under arrest and in spite of their protests they are locked up. Winthrop finally succeeds in having the sheriff wire the inspector and he himself sends a wire asking for instructions.

Hirtzman and his party arrive at the hotel and immediately plan to take the next boat for San Francisco. In order to elude their pursuers, they all disguise themselves. Virginia, looking out of the window of her cell, sees the party leaving the hotel across the street and calls Winthrop's attention to them.

The sheriff gets an answer from the inspector, and, chagrined in his blunder in arresting an officer, orders the release of Virginia and Winthrop. Without waiting for an explanation, Winthrop and the girl rush out of the building. Seeing the sheriff's car at the curb and knocking aside an officer who tries to stop them, they set out in pursuit of the fugitives, with Virginia driving. It is some time before they come in sight of the fleeing car, then a hot race takes place.

Hirtzman comes to a place in the road where a bridge is being repaired, and after they have crossed over, blows it up. Virginia drives to the bridge and sees the gap that has been blown out, still smoking from the explosion. Winthrop tries to stop her, but Virginia is determined and drives the car furiously at the narrowest place in the yawning bridge.

THE MYSTERY SHIP—(Episode No. 5 "The Fire God"—Two Parts—Dec. 29).—The cast: Miles Gaston, Jr. (Ben Wilson); Betty Lee (Neva Gerber); Harry Russell (Duke Worne); Betty's Aunt (Elsie Van Name); Jack Fay (Kingsley Benedict); James Lee (Nigel De Bruillier).

Harry, unseen, strikes Gaston over the head with a stone. Betty rushes to care for Gaston, and sends Harry for water, which he refuses to do, so she goes for it herself. Harry searches Gaston for the other part of the map, but can't find it.

die without food or water. Meanwhile Jack Fay has decided that Gaston is a prisoner and that they must make another attack on the temple. Betty makes a flag of truce from a piece of her aunt's petticoat and finally succeeds in talking with Jack, telling him that Gaston is hurt and must have water, that she gives him her word that not a drop will be used by any one but him. She rushes back with the canteen to Gaston, passing Harry as he goes out through the passageway.

The natives suddenly discover that the volcano is again erupting, and thinking the Fire-God angry with them, go to the temple to pray to the souls of their ancestors for deliverance. The Phantom from his ship watches the island and the actions of all its inhabitants. Shaken by the rumbling of the volcano, portions of the ruined walls of the temple begin to fall. Just as Harry emerges from the passageway, part of the wall caves in, blocking it.

Betty is surprised not to find Gaston. He has escaped from the temple by means of the secret passageway, and has joined Jack and his men. She comes to a mummy room, a large natural cave which has been used as a burial place by the islanders for centuries. Hearing some one coming, she hides behind a mummy. The natives enter and begin praying. One native suddenly sees Betty. The chief concludes that she has been sent as a sacrifice to be fed to the Fire-God in the burning mountains. They carry Betty there.

Meantime, Gaston has allowed the people from the temple to come out as the walls are crumbling. Betty is not with them and he and Jack go through the secret passageway into the temple, but find only one terrified native, who is finally forced to tell what has become of Betty. They rush out and up the mountain, at the top of which the chief stands, about to cast Betty into the seething lava. Gaston takes aim to fire, but he and Jack suddenly stand rigid, staring up toward the top of the mountain, thunderstruck with amazement.

HER AWFUL FIX (One Reel—Jan. 2).—Mary is persistently pursued by Fred, a young doctor, but becomes engaged to Tom. John and Grace, his wife, are to stand up with Mary at her wedding, when their baby is taken suddenly ill, and Fred is called in, it being his first case. A few hours before the wedding Mary decides to run over to John's house and see how the baby is getting along. When Mary arrives she takes the baby in her arms, when Fred enters with John and announces that he has diagnosed the case as smallpox. The house is quarantined, leaving Mary separated from Tom, marooned under a penalty of five years in the penitentiary if she leaves. After several ineffectual attempts, Mary finally escapes from the house, pursued by the police. She is captured and brought back. Tom then comes to the rescue, gags an officer and takes Mary home where a minister is waiting. The police are hot on their trail, and interrupt the ceremony. In the meantime, John calls in an experienced doctor, who pronounces it a case of prickly heat. When the officers bring the pair back Tom wants to fight the whole bunch, but cools off when John tells him the correct diagnosis, and the wedding bells ring.

MUTUAL WEEKLY.

ISSUE NO. 156 (Dec. 24).

Everywhere-in-America.—Have you joined the Red Cross? Be one of the ten million new members and make this a year of mercy. Join now. Subtitles: "Go to Your Local Red Cross Chapter." "Send a Dollar on its Errand of Mercy."

Chicago, Ill.—Getting ready for Santa Claus. Our soldiers will not awaken on Christmas morning with empty socks.

Chicago, Ill.—Christmas tree ship arrives from the Michigan forests. Miss Elsie Shoneman follows her father's custom of bringing trees to market by the lake route.

Boston, Mass.—"Cut-a-cord" of wood movement started here. Apalachian Mountain Club members chop wood to relieve coal shortage, plan of Mr. Jas. J. Storrow.

Chicago, Ill.—Alien enemies take warning! Stay out of barred zones. Subtitle: United States Marshal Bradley.

San Pedro, Calif.—Incendiary plot suspected in burning of steamer. The O. P. Clark goes down with valuable cargo. Loss $100,000.

Camp Kearney, Calif.—Are you observing a wheatless day? Our boys, at one camp, require 12,000 loaves of bread daily to keep them in proper trim.

Charlestown, Mass.—In memoriam. Sailors fire volley on Boston Common in memory of lost comrades on the Jacob Jones which was sunk by a German submarine.

Camp Kearney, Calif.—The "Pershing" of Japan visits General Strong here. General Hibiki will probably lead Nippon troops in France. Subtitle: "He Thought Our Boys Were Good Marksmen. This Is What He Said—."

Thoune, Switzerland.—A convoy of interned French soldiers leave the prison camp to go back to France.

Excerpts from a Letter Received from a Boy in France with the American Red Cross Ambulance Corps.—U. S. Official War Pictures released by the Committee on Public Information through the American Red Cross: Subtitles: Dear Mother: Our trip across was uneventful. We arrived in Paris in good health and immediately went to the Red Cross headquarters and received our credentials. Our personal belongings were loaded in trucks to be sent to our ambulance base while we were bundled off to the station to go by train. After a long, tiresome ride in a stuffy French train, we were glad of the opportunity to make a hasty though primitive toilet. We were almost starved. After a good feed, the word was sent that General Pershing was to visit our camp and give our bunch the "once over." The following day we had our first experience at the actual front, being under fire for the first time. It was a common sight to see wrecked ambulances by the roadside. The wounded get first aid treatment at dressing stations just behind the lines and then are removed to base hospitals farther from danger. On returning to camp this evening I found your letter awaiting me and was overjoyed to hear from you so soon.

HEARST-PATHE NEWS NO. 101 (Dec. 15).

Wilkes-Barre, Pa.—With the arrival of winter the coal shortage becomes acute and mines are working to capacity to supply all needs. Subtitles: Huge piles of coal are on hand, only awaiting transportation. As fast as the cars arrive, they are loaded and dispatched to the market. Meanwhile people everywhere wait anxiously for their allotment. Daily scenes around coal yards in New York City.

Fort Myer, Va.—Fencing contests feature the training of the members of the Second Cavalry, in preparation for the great offensive. Subtitle (Passed by Committee on Public Information): Into the ranks of the enemy—will charge this Light Brigade.

On the High Seas.—Slowly but surely the dangers of ruthless warfare vanish as the Allied fleets clear the ocean lanes of lurking U-boats. Subtitles: Their mighty guns have accounted for many a missing German submarine. American destroyers, too, have rendered great service toward stopping murder on the seas.

Amsterdam, Holland.—The love for sport continues unabated, as is evidenced by the large crowds that attend the national swimming contest. Subtitle: Some fancy diving.

New York City.—Voted by U. S. Marines as the most popular movie actress, Pearl White, the Pathe star, sends a Yuletide greeting to the sea-soldiers "over there." Subtitle: Delivering her message of good cheer to Sergeant Miller, who will carry it to France.

Linda Vista, Cal.—Katherine Stinson, the noted aviatrix, visits Camp Kearney before starting on her record-breaking cross-country flight. Subtitles: Getting ready for the journey. The daring "birdwoman" sets a new non-stop flight record, covering 610 miles in 9 hours.

Halifax, N. S.—First pictures of the appalling disaster caused by the explosion of the ammunition ship, Mont Blanc, when over 2,000 people lost their lives. Subtitles: The Belgian Relief Ship, Imo, which caused the catastrophe by ramming the munition ship. Hundreds were crushed when their homes caved in like toy structures. Searching the ruins for bodies. Churches and schools suffered the same fate. St. Joseph's School, in which 40 children perished. The railway station is left without a roof. The Red Cross relief train succors many of the wounded. This noble organization is ever ready to alleviate suffering. Join the Red Cross and help.

HEARST-PATHE NEWS NO. 102 (Dec. 19).

New York City.—Caught in the midst of a terrific storm that sweeps the East, this city is soon buried under a deep blanket of snow. Subtitles: Little folks are happy, for snow means sleds and joy untold to them. The Polar bears at the Zoo enjoy this reminder of the frigid North. But not so with Hattie, who at once joins the park's snow-plow force.

San Pedro, Cal.—A mysterious fire on the big lumber schooner O. M. Clark is gotten under control by sinking the ship on the sand bars. Subtitle: More than $200,000 damage was done to the vessel and cargo.

Savannah, Ga.—The demand for rosin in the making of shrapnel and other munitions has given great impetus to turpentine distilleries. Subtitles: The rosin is the residue left after the oil is distilled. Sixty thousand barrels ready for shipment to the Allies.

Pelham Bay, N. Y.—Secretary of the Navy Josephus Daniels visits the big naval training station for volunteers in the Naval Reserve. Subtitles: The Naval Reserve is now an important branch of Uncle Sam's sea forces.

Perth Amboy, N. J.—Relief from the coal shortage is in sight as hundreds of cars heavily laden with the black diamonds arrive from the mines. Subtitles: The coal is frozen on the journey and the cars are steamed. A huge revolving bridge rushes the work of unloading by dumping whole carloads at a time. As soon as any coal appears in New York City, it is eagerly besieged by waiting crowds.

New York City.—On with the dance, in summer calms and winter snows; even blizzards cannot mar the barefoot art of the Crawford girls. Subtitle: Quiet repose atop a leading New York hotel.

Linda Vista, Cal.—Military envoys from Great Britain, France and Japan pay a joint visit to the National Army boys at Camp Kearney. Subtitles: The artillery squads in action. A perfect hit at two-mile range.

The Call of Humanity.—Louder, ever louder sounds the cry from younder battlefields. Who will answer it? The Red Cross needs 10,000,000 new members to aid its relief work. Subtitles: The White House sets an example of service to humanity. Has your home a service flag? Little Ellen McAdoo, granddaughter of the President, has won four members to the cause. How many have you? Its hand is not outstretched only to the war's unfortunates. It radiates sunshine everywhere. Red Cross depot at Halifax. All you need—a heart and a dollar. Join the Red Cross now. Get others to join it too.

THE HIDDEN HAND (Episode No. 6 "The Flower of Death"—Two Parts—Dec. 30).—The cast: Doris Whitney (Doris Kenyon); Doctor Scarley (Sheldon Lewis); Verda Crane (Arline Pretty); Jack Ramsey (Mahlon Hamilton); The Hidden Hand (???).

The action in this episode begins with the fight on the church roof where Verda Crane saves the life of Jack Ramsey by diverting the aid of the Hidden Hand and endangering Doris Whitney, when the bullet meant for Ramsey strikes the rope by which the girl is suspended. Ramsey saves her and the girl is lowered to the ground. The Hidden Hand and his henchmen rush from the church belfry and are followed by Ramsey and Verda. They reach the ground and find the Hidden Hand and his henchmen have escaped. They also find Doris is safe.

Later at the Whitney home, Scarley prepares a night blooming cereus, pouring into the flower, which will open at midnight, a deadly poison, whose fumes will render any one inhaling them unconscious, and if breathed long enough will kill. To get rid of Ramsey, Scarley orders it placed in the room in which Ramsey will be working that night. Doris sees the cereus, becomes interested in it, and wishing to see it bloom, orders it taken to her bedroom. Toward midnight the man who has handled the plant feels the effect of the poison on his hand. He goes to Dr. Scarley's room, as Scarley is a guest in the Whitney home, shows his hands and receives treatment.

Doris watches the cereus and is pleased to see the flower open exactly at twelve. The opening of the flower releases the poison and Doris, overcome by it, falls unconscious to the floor. Ramsey hears her fall and investigates. Scarley is told by the workman that the flower is in Doris' room and he rushes in and rescues her. When she learns that he saved her life, she is friendly to him much to the chagrin of Ramsey.

The next day the Hidden Hand plots with Verda against Doris and tells her she must lure Doris to an old house where some plasterers are working. The Hidden Hand's henchmen take the place of the plasterers and later they capture Doris. Verda escapes and rushes toward the Whitney home. She tells Ramsey of Doris' capture and that she has been taken into the old house. Ramsey rushes to rescue Doris.

Inside the old house the Hidden Hand has prepared a bed of boiling lime, and over this Doris is suspended in such fashion that the end of the rope holding her in this dangerous position will be released by the person opening the door of the house. On the release of this rope the girl will drop into the boiling lime and be burned to death. The Hidden Hand and his henchmen leave the girl to her fate and we see Ramsey about to open the door, which will spell Doris' doom, as the episode ends.

Watch the Crowd

if you have any doubts as to the value of the best obtainable projection equipment.

While some persons like one kind of pictures, and some prefer another, the theatres where the crowd continues to go regularly are the ones where the pictures are always evenly illuminated with the details sharply defined.

Marlux

lenses give that uniformity of illumination and clean-cut definition.

Although a lens may seem a small thing in size and cost, it is a big thing in its relation to your box office receipts.

The Marlux costs no more than any good lens, and gives better results.

Sure Fire Helps to Success

The CHALMERS PUBLISHING CO., publishers of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD and CINE MUNDIAL, the leading trade papers devoted to the Motion Picture Industry, are also publishers of the only library of practical text books dealing with the cinema art adapted to the every-day needs of those already engaged in the business or about to engage in it.

These text books, six in number, have been written by men carefully selected for their proven knowledge of the subjects to be covered, being almost without exception veteran members of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD'S editorial staff; entirely without exception these men are at present actively engaged in the motion picture business—they are not dreamers or theorists.

Each text book has been written to provide real help to the individual who reads it—consistent with the unswerving policy of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD—a genuine "Dedication to Service."

Motion Picture Handbook for Managers and Operators

By F. H. RICHARDSON
Third Edition

The most complete, exhaustive and instructive work ever published on the projection of moving pictures. Contains complete instruction with detail illustrations on all leading makes of American projection machines and practical information on wiring, lenses, carbon settings, screens, theatre equipment, etc., etc. 700 pages and over 300 illustrations, $4.00, postage paid.

Picture Theatre Advertising

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

A real help and business builder for exhibitors, theatre managers and owners. It tells all about theatre advertising, type, printing and paper, house programs, lobby displays, newspaper advertising, posters, heralds, etc., etc. 300 pages. $2.00, postage paid. P. S.—Mr. Sargent conducts a weekly department in this same style in the Moving Picture World, which contains many up-to-date business-getting ideas.

Motion Picture Electricity

By J. H. HALLBERG

An up-to-date work on the electrical equipment of picture theatres by a practical electrical expert. Contains chapters on electricity, D.C. and A.C. current, resistance and resistance devices, electric service, wiring, lighting, etc. Also contains practical suggestions and all necessary reference tables on wire sizes and capacity, weights and measures, heat units, etc., etc. 260 pages, illustrated. $2.50, postage paid.

Modern Theatre Construction

By EDWARD BERNARD KINSILA

Our newest book is one that will fill a long-felt want to those contemplating the building of a theatre. This is a very complete and exhaustive work by an architect with many years of practical experience in theatre and studio construction. Fully illustrated, with considerable data as to requirements, construction cost, building laws, etc. $3.00, postage paid.

Technique of the Photoplay

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT
Third Edition

Complete instruction in photoplay writing, including study of plots, how to obtain and how to develop; writing the synopsis; studio requirements; script preparation and marketing; technical terms; examples of actual scripts in facsimile typewriting, etc. 400 pages. $3.00, postage paid.

Screencraft

or the Making of a Photoplay

By LOUIS REEVES HARRISON

A comprehensive and thought-provoking treatment of the subject in a series of chapters, similar to a university course of lectures, by a successful writer of photoplays. Also contains a complete working scenario and several sample pages of manuscript. 150 pages; illustrated. $2.00, postage paid.

THE undersigned committee of the Allied Exhibitors' Organizations of America elected by the Joint Conventions of all Exhibitors' Organizations, held at Washington, D. C., December 11th and 12th, hereby request the fullest co-operation and assistance of every motion picture exhibitor in America.

We are charged with the duty of gathering the exact and absolute truth of how the war tax is affecting every motion picture theatre, with a view of securing through united effort a readjustment of the war excise taxes on motion picture theatres and film for presentation to Congress.

Therefore we respectfully request each and every exhibitor to fill out the following blank, giving the full facts and figures available, the experience of each theatre, and forward immediately by mail to:

FRANK REMBUSCH,
Secretary, Allied Exhibitors' Legislative Committee, Indianapolis, Ind.

How does the business of your theatre for the month of November, 1916, compare with the month of November, 1917?

.....

Have you suffered a comparative loss? and to what do you attribute same?

.....

DO IT NOW!

Did the war tax affect your business? and to what extent?

.....

General remarks: .....

.....

Your answer will be doubly effective if you send it immediately.

A letter of explanation will be very acceptable.

"IT IS A PEACH—IT ADDS 50% TO MY PICTURE!"

Silverton, Colorado, May 21, 1917.

UNITED THEATRE EQUIPMENT CORP., New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen:

I have my Hallberg motor generator installed and I want to tell you it is a peach. I get a perfect light at from 35 to 40 amps. and it adds 50% to my picture. All the "juice" men here gave it the "once over" and all said that it was the best little outfit they had ever seen. You may consider this a big compliment, Mr. Hallberg, as we have some of the best electricains in the country here in this town.

I want to ask you if the rotor should not have a little end play. I want you to send me a set of brushes and some grease. If you have any more don'ts to give me, all right. Send me bill for supplies and will send check.

Yours respectfully,

If Exhibitors don't know

What is in this great little "Service Magazine"; if they don't consider the other fellow's ideas of any value or use the music cues, etc. to say nothing about the news of future productions—

It's up to them—

—because it is free to any exhibitor merely for the asking, and lots of them tell us it's the most useful magazine they get.

It's just one thing more you can get with Paramount and Artcraft Pictures.

Reasons Why

the series of photoplays with Benjamin Chapin entitled "The Son of Democracy" will be one of the greatest business stimulators the motion picture industry has ever known.

FIRST It is a twenty-reel picture, bigger than any feature that has ever been released.

SECOND—Benjamin Chapin is a star attraction, big enough to play 28 consecutive performances at the Strand, and follow with 245 performances at the Globe Theatre.

Benjamin Chapin

in

"The Son of Democracy"

a series of dramatic film stories of America in the making—written and directed and produced by Benjamin Chapin—has an appeal so wide, a scope so broad, that it will stack up with the best drawing cards you ever booked.

FOURTH—As an emotional drama, literally teeming with human interest and big, thrilling situations that make the leading figure stand out among the greatest, not only of the world, but of all time.

FIFTH—This tremendous series of attractions is backed by one of the most comprehensive special National Advertising Campaigns and a big direct-by-mail campaign, and the general publicity pressure of the Vast Paramount Organization.

SIXTH—Back of all the other "reasons why" is the association of Benjamin Chapin and Paramount Pictures, backed by the prestige of Paramount Pictures, and the tremendous National Advertising Campaign —Benjamin Chapin will be able to attract infinitely more business than with any other association.

YOU ARE CORRECT, MR. MASON

The Exhibitor is tired of "Holding the bag"

Leslie Mason is managing editor of the Exhibitors Trade Review. It is Mr. Mason's important duty to reflect the views of the motion picture exhibitors of the United States.

"When the exhibitor gets tired of paying $100.00 a day for a $25.00-a-day film," states Mr. Mason in the December 22nd issue of the Review, "the producers will get tired of paying a $200.00-a-week star $2000.00 a week salary."

"Whether the producer is tired of doing this as yet or not, the exhibitor is getting tired of 'holding the bag' and the sooner the manufacturer realizes it the better for him."

Mr. Mason says the monetary value of stars is determined by the figures at which the public is willing to "redeem" them at the box office.

A great many exhibitors have already discovered that there is a very definite limit to the prices they can pay and make a profit.

Tom Moore of Washington told you last week how, when he reached that limit, he cancelled ninety contracts with a certain company.

TOM MOORE HAS BOOKED PATHE PLAYS.

Gentlemen:-

With regard to your new serial "THE HIDDEN HAND".

I want to give my fellow exhibitors a little "dope" on the serial. This is the first Pathe Serial I have used in the above theatre in three years. After being induced by the salesman to screen this serial, I gave him a three days' booking on it. The results were so surprising that I will hereafter use every Pathe Serial which looks anything like a drawing card such as "THE HIDDEN HAND".

I have one thousand one sheets, one thousand half sheets and one thousand three sheets posted from 34th Street to the Battery advertising this Serial. It is playing to standing room with my 1600 seats at 10¢, 15¢, 20¢ and 25¢.

Hoping you will release another serial real soon, for which I will hold dates open, beg to remain

THE NEW HODKINSON CIRCLE

Six years ago I laid down my first circle of principles. Since then, the trade has recognized that circle of "Longer Runs, Better Pictures, Higher Admissions, Better Theaters, Better Public, Longer Runs, etc.," as the basis of all exhibitor success.

Today I am building another circle—A CIRCLE OF BUSINESS PRINCIPLES which applies to the whole industry.

THE MOTION PICTURE PLUS, with all its unlimited possibilities, is ONLY ONE OF THE GREAT FORCES WHICH MAKE UP THAT NEW CIRCLE.

Four of these linked forces have already been announced:

1. A superior product in standard form, the PARALTA PLAYS, issued every two weeks. To these will soon be added other product of at least equal quality and quantity.
2. THE FINEST EXCHANGE SYSTEM IN THE LAND, that of the GENERAL FILM COMPANY. Through this arrangement, our salesmen and sales methods can and are being applied to our distribution without waste or duplication and WITH GREAT SAVING TO BOTH EXHIBITOR AND PRODUCER.
3. The Motion Picture PLUS. This will bring all our product to the forefront of public favor through our guarantee that the MOTION PICTURE PLUS SHALL FOREVER STAND FOR QUALITY ALONE in every element now prized by exhibitors and audiences—PLUS the greater range and power which the new process will give to any picture.
4. THE BUSINESS PRINCIPLES which we are introducing by establishing a genuine distributing organization, free from both producer and exhibitor control. BEHIND THIS IS THE FORCE OF THE WIDESPREAD DISCONTENT IN THE INDUSTRY TODAY, which is really only a blind searching for just that firm business foundation which we are establishing.

TO THESE FOUR GREAT FORCES I AM ADDING THREE OTHERS, AS PRACTICAL AND AS NECESSARY TO THE COMPLETION OF THE CIRCLE:

5. The first, now being accomplished, is PARTNERSHIPS WITH IMPORTANT EXHIBITORS OF IMPORTANT GROUPS OF EXHIBITORS in all exchange and strategic centers. These exhibitors will receive, through these partnerships, (1) the assurance of CONTINUED SERVICE OF QUALITY PRODUCTIONS and (2) A LARGE SHARE OF DISTRIBUTION PROFITS, to which they are entitled by their position, their investment and the support which they give us.
6. Coincident with the tieup with exhibitors will come A CLOSE RELATIONSHIP WITH GREAT PRODUCERS. To producers we offer an assured market, free from the restrictions of producer distribution, demanding nothing but the highest quality plays and talent which they can provide in far great degree when their only care is producing.
7. The Public will form the final link in our circle. National Publicity, tied to the unmistakable trademark-on-the-screen of the shape and size of the Motion Picture PLUS, will for the first time reach the public without waste and without confusion, assuring their support for the real quality which the public of today demands.

THERE IS A CONTACT WITH US FOR EVERY FIT ELEMENT IN THE BUSINESS.

Advertising versus Camouflage
(Pronounce Calm-moo-flawj)

When a man has a real diamond for sale

that's Advertising.
But when a man has a piece of polished glass for sale,
and he tells everybody it is a real diamond;
that's Camouflage. (Meaning fake.)
Camouflage is used by an army to fool the enemy.
By a merchant to fool his customers.
You read an AD about a picture, and it says
the picture is glorific and magnolious.
Then you see that picture.
And then you don't book it.
Then you read another AD about the same picture, and it says
the picture is glorific and magnolious.
Then you're wise. And you say: "Oh, camouflage."
You can test a diamond.
"A Man's Man" played Clune's Auditorium (seating over 3,000) for a full week, and packed-jammed them in.
Now Mr. Clune has booked "Madam Who?" for TWO weeks!
We're telling you. That's Advertising.

GOLDWYN'S SUPREME ACHIEVEMENT

Opening to Landslide Business at the Box-Offices of North America: Beginning December 30

MARY GARDEN IN THAIS

by Anatole France

Directed by Frank H. Crane

The National Board of Review

after showing Mary Garden in "Thais" to its complete membership and passing it without a single elimination, says in a special report: "This production sums up the artistic achievements of the motion picture in interpretive and imaginative drama. Photographically it is a distinct stride forward, the acting of Mary Garden is notable, and the picture as a whole is an example of creative art."

Goldwyn Pictures

ANATOLE FRANCE'S CONGRATULATIONS TO GOLDWYN FROM PARIS!

The distinguished author of "Thais" and member of the Academy of Immortals sends Goldwyn this fervent appreciation of its magnificent production and famous star:

"Allow me to express to you the extreme joy I feel at the idea that my history of Thais has been visualized through the screen by your good efforts with a splendor unheard of. I am particularly happy to learn that the admirable artist, Mary Garden, who has sung so marvelously in the role of THAIS shall represent the same person on the screen. I wish to congratulate Goldwyn Pictures that they have been able to get this valuable co-operation and present this work with accomplished art."

ATTENTION MR. JOHN R. FREULER.

Gentlemen:

It gives us great pleasure to announce that after Mr. Mack Sennett, the well known producer, has personally pre-viewed Mary Miles Minter, in "THE MATE OF THE SALLY ANN", he placed his stamp of approval on this production by booking it for one solid week showing at his Sennett's Broadway Theater, Los Angeles, starting December 30th.

He also advises that all we need to show is pictures of this standard and we will have no trouble whatever in booking them to his theater. We believe, that when a gentleman of Mr. Sennett's standing in the picture world, puts his stamp of approval on the first Mutual Picture, that he has personally viewed with the idea of booking by booking it for one solid week, is a good criterion for theater managers to go by.

Yours very truly,

Facts and Comments

JUST a word of sincere thanks and appreciation for the many tokens of good will and felicitations for the coming year of which we have been the recipients from friends and well wishers everywhere. In the rush of work unintentionally we may have failed directly to acknowledge some of these messengers of good cheer and encouragement. May we deserve them in still greater measure next year.

HAVE you, Mr. Exhibitor, big or little, organization or non-organization, filled in the form that appears in this issue for the third time? If not, why not do it today and mail to Mr. Rembusch immediately? See page 287. A big united effort will be for your individual benefit as much as for any other, whether you are north, south, east or west. Be one of at least five or six thousand exhibitors to send your report and thereby place a large fund of accurate data in the hands of the Committee as a basis for intelligent consideration and discussion of the subject with the Government. Why not lay down the WORLD long enough to mail this right NOW.

A TRADE publication assures its readers that it will not, in the future, attempt "any beating of the literary drum." Quite right! Why incite to riot by an indifferent drum solo when the performer is noted for mastery of every sort of wind instrument?

YOU pay your money and take your choice. One of our exhibitor subscribers finds fault with our attitude on the tax question, claiming that we are perforce compelled to take the side of our large advertisers, the manufacturers. On the other hand, in an effort to start still another trade paper, the argument is being put forward that the manufacturers should have their own trade paper as they are unable to get consideration of their side of any question by the trade papers now in the field. As we advised our exhibitor critics, the attitude of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD is not and never has been determined by consideration of only one angle of any question, but rather by a sincere effort to look at every side of all questions for the best interests of the industry as a whole, manufacturing, renting and exhibiting. Nothing that is of real benefit to one can harm the others and nothing that harms any one cannot but harm all in the long run.

COLD feet in the moving picture ranks! That the industry is suffering as much from timidity and nervousness as from anything else is our guess at the moment. Big salaries to a few stars, directors and officials will have to be readjusted, a better and more economical renting and exchange system should have been worked out long since and the unprogressive exhibitor will have to make way for the real showmen who are willing to put time, thought and energy into their work. The foundation of the whole art and industry, the great public need and demand for recreation still stands where it was and will continue to yield ample returns to those who strive to intelligently meet this demand. As a matter of fact, it is yielding these returns today and is likely to continue to yield them.

As was to be expected, this industry as well as all others not directly connected with war material is feeling acutely the changed conditions of trade. No doubt these things will affect us even much more in the months that are just ahead. Sails will have to be trimmed to the gale; economies in management will have to be sought out and effected; real efficiency practiced everywhere. But all of these things will be done. Keep a stiff upper lip, encourage the other fellow, be a booster, quit whining. "The fellow worth while is the one with a smile when everything goes dead wrong."

JUST a word of congratulation to Samuel L. Rothapfel upon the successful opening of the finest picture theater in New York, if not this entire country. It was some venture to project so magnificent an undertaking in the face of conditions, but "Roxy" has a way of putting things over which will, in all probability, carry him through in this instance. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD wishes him a full measure of success.

Pictures in Review

By Louis Reeves Harrison

THE critic cannot always embody in his review all that should, could, or might be said. The exact definition of a review is "a discussion of the merits and defects of a product," but there are space limitations to be considered and information to be given which will enable the exhibitor to get an idea of what is being critically examined before he comes to pass judgment on it himself. There are also standards to be considered. A picture which might pass muster with the occasional patron of the show, in which there is nothing obviously objectionable, may be a repeat of what has been better done, or what would weary the regular patron and injure the exhibitor who presents it.

Probably the most difficult thing in the business is to exactly determine what an audience thinks of intense drama. Applause may come loudly from the unthinkers, when silence would be that of high appreciation. Applause at a stage performance may go to the actor in a role which appeals strongly to feeling, yet that same role can be taken by another actor with the same effect. It is oftenest a rightly placed sentiment which stirs sympathy, and that is entirely up to the author.

On the other hand, the performer may exhibit an art so exquisite that our pulses seem to stop while he is speaking, but the scene is an intermediate one, closely followed by another which precludes open and disturbing expressions of approval. At the big picture shows I have seen an audience of two or three thousand watch the screen with absorbed attention, expectancy, only to be disappointed in the end because of a purposeless or "blind alley" theme, leading nowhere in particular. The critic is obliged to note such defects in simple justice.

The intermediate scene may be appreciated, but not applauded. The development of a story may have bright spots, eliciting some applause, and the end prove thoroughly unsatisfactory. These are minor complications. There are graver ones. Consider, for instance, the case of a large, elaborate and costly product, replete with tremendous ensembles, with evidences of care and taste in many periods of the development, which fails utterly in the end to achieve its designed purpose, leaves the mind blank, the heart empty a sense of wonderment why so much was done to accomplish so little. It is an elaborate invitation to a barren feast. It is a dinner of flowers and plates with no food.

Such products draw and fail to please. On the other hand, consider a simple little gem of a play—I wish I could give names without appearing to be partial—in which a weary heart merely reviews its blasted hopes. I saw one which was a veritable poem, not a sign of what people are supposed to want, no hero, no heroine, no villain, no chase. I praised it highly and passed on to other work, forgetting it entirely until, one night, I was thrilled to see it on the screen before a large audience. Only once before in a long experience have I ever heard such applause. It was an ovation. Every right principle of story picturing was closely observed and the complete result was a success.

Thus the reviewer comes to recognize that there are general principles to be observed. not hard-and-fast rules, not regulations which obstruct inventive genius, but vigor of purpose, continuity and right adjustment of structure. beauty and plausibility of treatment, convincing methods of interpretation. A gradually-acquired knowledge of these principles, even though unconsciously absorbed, formulates a judgment almost instinctive.

Mr. Layman goes to the picture show in a good humor and likes everything he sees, or he goes in a cranky mood and finds fault straight through. In any case his judgment is biased by feeling. On that account a doctor rarely attends his own child, but sends for a brother practitioner. Then Mr. Layman only goes occasionally, and he has never made a business of finding out what are the essentials of success. He might pass favorably on a class of pictures which, if persisted in, would close many of the theaters, and he is just as liable to disapprove those which keep the average box office busy day and night.

When Mr. Layman is non-progressive he would let the business die a natural death from lack of novelty. He is that way at home. What he likes is good enough for the rest of the family, whether it makes them bilious or not. Love of novelty attracted people to the picture show from the beginning. There was money in providing novelty, and the developments which followed were in the line of improvement throughout every department of production and exhibition. Of course, there are drag anchors, "nothing-new-under-the-sun" critics and "let-well-enough-alone" producers, who would have the art on the level of the imitator and the fakir.

Live reviewers are not synopsis writers nor publicity department adjuncts. The principal object of their "discussion of the merits and defects" of moving pictures is to improve them in the interest of the public, of the exhibitor and of the producer himself. Genuine criticism is most eagerly read by those who are vitally interested, not that the critic is infallible, but because he is making an earnest effort to identify esthetic judgment with creative art, to conscientiously treat questions of form, content and technique for our common benefit.

The products of any art, particularly a new one, are often haphazard creations, unexpectedly succeeding in one case, just as unexpectedly failing in another. Without knowing anything about art principles, the public favors one product and rejects another. It is the critic's business to be informed as to the causes of these contrary effects. In whatever manner creative talent seeks for expression, through action, through psychology, through speech, through silence, it is the critic's function to grasp the why and the wherefore and to enlighten those who get the effect only, no easy task, believe me.

Nearly all successful dramatists and novelists, strange as it may seem at first glance, place creative art second to the critical. It is because they know one to be a diamond in the rough to which the other gives the essential polish. Nearly all of them, too, have been essayists and reviewers before qualifying for the more lucrative work. The diamond of genius is a gift of nature. The polish it must receive before it can give brilliant expression to itself is a difficult art to acquire.

Moving pictures are already influential in forming our character as a people, and they are growing more so as they spread the finer filaments of artistry throughout the land. The new art may be slow to improve, but it is swift in comparison with the press and the stage. The further pictures go into questions of vital interest to all of us with strength and skill, the result of intelligent criticism, the better for the exhibitor, for the producer and ultimately for the public. Besides discussing pictures in specific reviews, there is opportunity in this column which will be used under the same general heading for a more general review of what makes for improvement, without naming the examples.

Brighten Up a Bit

By Sam Spedon

THE difference between producers and exhibitors in meeting present conditions is very marked. The producers never say die and always keep up a good front of advertising and publicity; they are not public calamity howlers and are always doing something greater or better. As a rule they have had a record breaking year and next year will be more progressive and the most successful of their existence. It is the exception when we hear anything different. They keep doing and going on in the same old way, all rumors to the contrary notwithstanding, and they never stop until they are through.

It Is Ever Thus.

We have seventy per cent. of smaller theaters and thirty per cent. of big houses and there is always some champion who is ready to make the harangue for the "70 per cent." that business is going to pieces from one cause or another. We are convinced that in some places business conditions are bad enough, but there is no use putting on sack cloth and ashes and going about shouting ruin and despair, because they are not raking and shoveling in the coin through the old hole in the wall as they did in the days of the nickelodeon and store show. If they would put on their overalls, invest a few dollars in a pot of paint and a brush, they might brighten up the old "dump" and make it look a little more inviting and attractive. If instead of shouting ruin and despair they would invest a little money in advertising in their local papers they might convince people that they are alive and up-to-date.

Chase Gloom from the Lobby and the Box Office.

Have somebody in the front who wears a smile and looks like a human being, not a scarecrow. Have an usher or ushers who act as if they were glad to welcome your patrons instead of someone who acts like a "bouncer" at a dive whose air is suggestive of a demand to sit down or have your block knocked off. Fire the individual who beats the music box until your temples throb and gets you bobbing up and down until you hit the ceiling. Don't run your place like a "drop in" on the water front, where sailors and transients come and go and may never come again. If you do, rest assured once will be enough and people will come to the conclusion you don't care whether you ever see them again and they will stay away. If you want to stay in business, you have got to give the people something for their money, whether you charge a nickle, a dime or more. You can't say: Take it or leave it.

Don't Be a Dog in the Manger and Just Snarl.

If you don't know how to run your theater, don't blame it on lack of patronage or say people don't appreciate your efforts, because you think anything will do. When you read this, think it over and try to find out if the fault doesn't lie in your lack of showmanship and a knowledge of the business you are in. If the fault is yours, try to do things differently or else go back to the shop or bench and give a real showman a chance to give the people what they want. If environments are impossible, then we must pull up stakes and depart for other fields.

Put Away the Old Things.

If we don't make our homes inviting and entertaining, we are not troubled with visitors or neighbors. If we retain the old mohair furniture and the family crayon portraits and conduct ourselves accordingly, people would as soon visit a morgue. Our theaters, like our homes, must be made cheerful and hospitable. We have been attending, periodically, some theaters where they haven't changed the screen setting for the past three years. The same old artificial flowers sticking up like sore fingers, are still there with the same old coat of paint, weather-stained and faded like the last rose of summer. They are an eyesore and no matter how good the picture these things predominate and have their effect.

Now Is the Time.

No matter how much relief we may get from inequitable taxes and the readjustment of business conditions generally, these will not make up for our deficiencies in showmanship. When someone who does know, shows us and the public what we don't know, then and not until then will we admit we have been asleep while the other fellow has won out. Now is the time to get on the job and be prepared for a revival of better times. If we cannot rejuvenate our places of amusement now, someone is going to steal a march on us and be prepared to go us one better. Just as conditions become normal he is going to displace us with the latest and best equipment. This is a progressive age and motion pictures will continue to move and not stand still.

Cheering Evidence.

Did you read about a manager in Washington who bought two more theaters and intends to extend his chain into Maryland and Delaware? Another who is building a chain of seven in Los Angeles? Still another breaking ground for one in Kingston and Brooklyn, N. Y. of 1,500 seats each, with all latest improvements? These are the things that make us think that conditions are not so bad they could be worse and have a hopeful outlook ahead. We received two letters the other day; one called attention to a community of 7,000 inhabitants where there wasn't a theatre at all. The other told us of a community of 12,000, where there was only one theater. All these reports lead us to believe there are opportunities in store for the wide awake showmen who look upon motion pictures as a permanency, a real business and not simply as an easy way of getting rich quick.

A Temporary Slump.

We have just passed through the holiday season and we are having a repetition of all preceding seasons at this time of the year, perhaps, it is a little more pronounced this year, but we are due for a resumption of patronage. This explains a falling off just now. It may continue to some extent. If it does, that is all the more reason why we should make greater effort to stem the tide and keep afloat until we reach a normal condition of affairs.

A Matter of Motives

By Edward Weitzel.

MOTIVATION is a fine sounding word, and its use by advanced students of the art of fiction need not be condemned. Indeed, to properly motivate a novel, stage play or screen drama is a task that requires skilled judgment. The trouble is that the inexperienced builder of plots is very apt to overdo the matter. It is so much easier to select half a dozen weak motives and attempt to bind them into a strong plot than to keep up the hunt until a theme is found that will carry the interest with steadily increasing force to the end. The trained observer of the photoplay has learned to recognize the employment of over three motives as an almost unfailing sign that the screen drama he is viewing is loosely constructed and feeble in plot.

In the days when Victor Hugo, Eugene Sue and Charles Dickens were weaving their three volume long stories, there was some justification for the number of motives used. The length of their novels had to be taken into consideration; and no one was expected to sit down and read one of their works through without stopping. Moreover, with the book in one's hands it was, and still is, a simple matter to turn back and refresh the memory when the plot switches over to a motive the reader cannot readily recall.

Nothing of the kind is possible for the spectator at the screen theater. The work before him is intended to be shown in its entirety to a large body of persons at one time. He cannot ask the operator to go back to a certain point and run four or five hundred feet of film over again for his especial benefit. Neither can he take his photoplay in sections, as he does one of his favorite novels, and consume a chapter or a page as the humor moves him. These are part of the reasons why complication of motives should be avoided in stories intended for screen production.

The picturized novel is often rendered ineffective by the adaptor's unwise desire to retain the complete story. Either through forgetting, or never having known how, the art of the actor throws into bold relief phases of character and springs of action not revealed on the printed page, the maker of the scenario anticlimaxes the story and kills the suspense by putting in a scene necessary to the original, but a positive drawback to the screen version. No character or situation should be used in a photoplay made from a novel that will not permit the drama to conform to the rules of construction. And the nearer it comes to being a closely knit, steadily progressive example of play making, without regard to its origin, the greater its success with the average admirer of the film. Persons familiar with the novel may exclaim against the omission of this scene or that motive; but if the work of elimination has been skillfully done the wielder of the blue pencil has conferred a distinct benefit upon all those who watch the projection of the play.

To return to the value of the simple theme that gathers strength by its always progressive action, the outstanding photoplay among the many seen by the writer during the past month answered best this description.

What's the Use of Talking Hard Times?

By Sam Spedon.

WE met a lady in New York a few days ago who had run across the continent to make a few holiday purchases for her daughter, who is a star on the coast. A little shopping tour.

We read of a star recently purchasing a seven-passenger touring car for himself and wife. His old one wasn't quite in accord with his taste. Temperamental whim, that's all.

Here is another star who displays in print a collection of furs that would make a Gunther or a Jaeckel look enviously at their variety and advertised value All at a nickel to a quarter a throw.

A permanent injunction of the courts was necessary to prevent a star breaking her contract of $127,000 a year and accepting more money from another producing company. How do they do it?

This is a great life if you don't weaken. If you must talk hard times, talk to yourself. You will have an attentive listener. Keep on smiling, even though it hurts. We are all in the show business.

The Small House Still the Backbone

IN our wild scramble for higher prices in this industry, are we forgetting that the moving picture was established by its popular appeal to the pocketbooks no less than to the minds and hearts of the masses? Outside of Broadway and the "Loop," perhaps, there will be fewer, far fewer, tickets sold at fifty cents than at ten cents, no matter how fine the program. This is a fundamental principle that no amount of specious argument or of self-deception can overcome. Again no chain is stronger than its weakest link. There can be no program for the high priced house that is not equally available for the large majority of smaller houses. The great dependable majority of picture theater patrons are not fools who will be content with a second or third rate program when they know that a better is available. They will want the best or they will stay away, and don't you forget it.

"BROWN OF HARVARD" IS SELIG'S.

Through an Unaccountable Error World Reviewer Credits This Excellent Picture to Another Company.

OUR very good friend, Colonel William N. Selig, was made the victim of an unfortunate error which appeared in last week's issue of the Moving Picture World and we hasten to make a proper correction. The Selig producers have made an excellent picture called "Brown of Harvard," which is being released by George Kleine. In writing the review our representative seems to have overlooked the title and then assumed that the picture was made by Essanay and said so.

Now, there doesn't seem to be any reason why such an error should have been made; it belongs to the unexplainable and inexcusable happenings that persist in occurring every once in a while to the best regulated newspaper and to the great disgust of everyone concerned, our reviewer most of all.

We make this extended correction because the picture, "Brown of Harvard," is really an important one and one of the best that Mr. Selig has produced. To further emphasize our desire to set our readers right as to the source of the picture a supplementary review will be printed next week.

LE VINO GOES TO COAST FOR METRO.

Albert Shelby Le Vino, Metro scenario writer, who has written the continuity of a long list of successes for the screen, will leave shortly for the firm's Western studios at Hollywood, Cal., where he will be Western Manager B. A. Rolfe's right hand man in the arranging of stories for pictures starring Viola Dana and Edith Storey.

Mr. Le Vino came to the motion picture field after over fifteen years' newspaper experience on leading papers. As a reporter he covered some of the biggest stories of the day. As a writer of magazine articles and stories he has a record of over one hundred published products from his pen. Mr. Le Vino is one of the most prolific and successful scenario writers.

SERGEANT-MAJOR KANE.

Robert T. Kane, vice-president of the Paralta Studios of Los Angeles, California, was made Sergeant-major of Trains at Camp Lewis, American Lake, Washington. He is now as high as the non-commissioned ranks extend, and is studying for a commission as second lieutenant.

Rivoli, Newest Picture Palace, Has Notable Opening

Distinguished Audience Pays Tribute to Rothapfel's Latest Effort in the Presentation of the Silent Drama—Interesting Program Commands Applause

IT WAS a notable audience that assembled on the evening of Friday, December 28, upon the invitation of Samuel L. Rothapfel to witness the opening performance of the Rivoli, New York's latest and most beautiful of motion picture theaters. An extended description of the new house was published in the Moving Picture World of January 5, but those present at the premiere must have realized that mere words did scant justice to the beauties that met the eye upon every hand. The soft tones of the decorative scheme appeared at their best under the lights which created a restful atmosphere that gave a sensation of comfort.

The program was delayed somewhat to give the guests a chance to feast their eyes upon the architectural beauties of the interior and they found much to see and admire for, while the Strand was a wonder and the Rialto a revelation, the Rivoli seems to have surpassed the older houses and is considered as just about the last word in picture theater construction.

As a testimony to the regard which New York picture theater patrons have for Mr. Rothapfel, the man who inspired this latest creation and who will be its manager, there were received hundreds of telegrams of congratulation and beautiful flowers were scattered in profusion about the lobbies—all tributes from admiring friends.

As the opening was an invitation affair only invited guests were admitted, much to the disappointment of hundreds of people who would gladly have paid several prices of admission for the privilege of being among those present. The house was crowded, however, and there were as many standees as the law would admit.

Distinguished as the guest of honor was Col. W. M. House, who occupied the President's Box, accompanied by Mrs. House, President Mezes of the College of the City of New York, and Mr. and Mrs. David Miller.

Among those present were Mayor John Purroy Mitchel, Richard Delafield, Oliver Harriman, Cyrus Townsend Brady, Herbert Brenon, John McCormack, Walter Damrosch, Irvin Cobb, C. J. Dryden, Andreas Dippel, R. H. Cochrane, James Montgomery Flagg, Captain Rupert Hughes, Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew, Charles Dana Gibson, Gail Kane, Arthur Hammerstein, Edna Ferber, Victor Herbert, Carl Laemmle, Rita Jolivet, Mr. and Mrs. Florenz Ziegfeld, Marcus M. Marks, George Jean Nathan, Madam Olga Petrova, F. D. Proctor, Lee Shubert, A. H. Woods, Lewis Selznick, William Sherry, William Fox, C. A. H. De Saulles, Paul H. Cromelin, Claude and Mrs. Petin, Walter E. Greene, Hy. Mayer, Edwin Thanhouser, Louis F. Blumenthal, Charles F. Abrams, Ad. Kessel, Jesse L. Lasky and hundreds of other picture makers, distributors, directors and players.

The program arranged by Director Rothapfel for the opening performance of the Rivoli contained several novel features and one of the most entertaining selections of motion pictures ever thrown on the screen. The first number was an original conception of S. L. Rothapfel entitled "The Victory of Democracy," lyrics by Brian Hooker and Charles Keeler, musical settings by Hugo Riesenfeld, and was divided into five episodes, "The Pilgrims," "The Minute Men," "Bunker Hill," "The First Stars and Stripes in Battle," "The Star Spangled Banner,' "The Battle Hymn of the Republic," "Lincoln at Gettysburg," and "Pershing in France." Mary Lawton and Forrest Robinson recited the descriptive lines and the last episode introduced the Rivoli Chorus in a patriotic singing feature and tableau that brought the audience to its feet and received a well-earned round of applause. The preceding episodes were not particularly well adapted to a moving picture theater.

"A World o' Dreams," a scenic of unusual beauty taken by Robert C. Bruce on the Pacific Coast, was next on the program. Then came Eugene Cowles, the famous basso of "The Bostonians," who sang a solo from "The Fortune Teller," with a special setting. Rivoli Animated Pictorial was number four, and the variety of its subjects and the manner of its presentation were quickly recognized by the spectators. Alberto Bachman, Concert Master of the Rivoli Orchestra, was the next attraction and played "Air Varie," by Vieuxtemps. Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew in a Metro comedy, "Her First Love," appeared in one of the most amusing pictures of their screen careers. There is a point and tone to this release that places it among the best comedy pictures of the silent stage.

Pupils of the Helen Moller School in a Petit Ballet, "By the Brook," and a Minuet my Rielle Dorree and Yvonne Robert of the Luigi Albertieri Ballet School, came seventh. The program closed with the principal feature, Douglas Fairbanks in the Artcraft release, "A Modern Musketeer," story and direction by Allan Dawn. The picture contained just the right amount of breezy activity and amazing stunts to put the entire body of spectators into the best of humor and force them to admit there is only one "Dug."

The musical settings of the different numbers were given the distinctive Rothapfel touch, and the Rivoli orchestra, under the direction of Hugo Riesenfeld, played with fine effect.

The projection and the appliances employed will be discussed technically in the Projection Department in a future issue. On the opening night an excellent picture was obtained from a battery of Simplex projectors.

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for the Week of December 30 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"Thais" at the Strand.

MARY GARDEN was seen at the Strand Theater in "Thais," a Goldwyn photoplay from the novel by Anatole France. "Thais" also marks the first appearance of Miss Garden in motion pictures. Permission to present this famous story in cinematographic form was secured from the author only on condition that Miss Garden would appear in it. M. France was already familiar with her interpretation of his heroine through her work in opera. The production has been lavishly staged, and Miss Garden has been given an excellent supporting cast including Hamilton Revelle, Crauford Kent, Lionel Adams, Charles Trowbridge, Alice Chaplin, and Margaret Townsend. A scenic study in natural colors, the latest war pictures taken on the European battle fields, Victor Moore in his latest comedy entitled "O U-Boats," another chapter of Ditmar's "Living Book of Nature" entitled "Nature's Songsters," and The Topical Review were also on the program.

Carlo Mari, Anita Togelli and Ernest Davis were the soloists.

"The Narrow Trail" at the Rialto.

William S. Hart in "The Narrow Trail," the Artcraft production which was delayed in presentation because of the legal difficulties involving its authorship, headed the Rialto holiday program. The picture is built around narratives of adventure related to Hart by a pioneer in what was once Dakota Territory and is full of the rough riding and wild out-of-door life. Thomas H. Ince supervised the production. Sylvia Bremer, the Australian beauty, was Hart's leading woman. Milton Ross and Robert Kortman appeared as principals in the supporting cast. Hart's famous pinto pony "Fritz" made his farewell appearance in this picture.

"Beside the Glimmer Glass," a Robert C. Bruce scenic feature, opened the ball; news events the world over were revealed in the Animated Magazine, and Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew will appear in their new comedy "Shadowing Henry."

Henrietta Mentley and Signors Seraretti and Interranta were the singers.

"Face Value" at the Broadway.

The Bluebird picture, "Face Value," with Mae Murray, was the attraction at the Broadway Treater. Robert Leonard, Miss Murray's director, is responsible for the story, and the scenario was written by Fred Myton. The cast includes Wheeler Oakman, Casson Ferguson, Mrs. E. Griffith, Clarissa Selwynne, and Florence Carpenter. In addition, the Nestor-Allen Curtis comedy "Who's to Blame," the Universal Screen Magazine, and Finlay Nature Studies were on the program.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

WRITE US EARLY AND OFTEN

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD carries the most complete record of Exhibitors' News. This department aims at being the fullest and fairest chronicle of all the important doings in the ranks of organized exhibitors. To keep the department as complete and as useful as it is now we request the secretaries of all organizations to favor us with reports of all the news. Coming events in the ranks of the organized exhibitors are best advertised in this department of the Moving Picture World.

Michigan Exhibitors to Meet January 7 and 8

President Moran Arranging Interesting Program of Live Topics for Discussion by Showmen.

PRESIDENT S. A. MORAN is working out a splendid program for the mid-winter convention to be held in Majestic Theater, Jackson, Mich., January 7 and 8. He is asking every Michigan exhibitor to be in attendance, as it will be of utmost importance. Matters relative to the film tax, the music tax, the deposit system, legislative matters, and greater co-operation between competing exhibitors, as well as greater co-operation between the exhibitors and the exchanges will be brought up. President Moran is a big, broad-minded man, who has been successful as an exhibitor. He does not believe in antagonistic methods, contending you can "catch more flies with molasses than you can with vinegar." Before the exhibitor can expect the squarest kind of treatment from the exchange managers he must be ready to give such treatment. The exhibitor must also be ready to deal squarely with his nearest competitor. All of these phases of the moving picture business will be brought up for thorough discussion at the Jackson convention.

It is likely that Detroit will send a big delegation to the state meeting. King Perry, recently made business manager, has been elected Detroit delegate, and is in turn urging every Detroit exhibitor to attend, going so far as to arrange for a private Pullman to take the boys out there. The plan is to make January 8 "Detroit Day" as a special inducement to bring the "automobile gang" and to have a joint meeting of the Detroit and Michigan branches.

Remember the correct dates are January 7 and 8—the place is the Majestic Theater, Jackson.

WELLS PLEASED AT VARNER'S RETENTION.

Percy W. Wells, president of the North Carolina Exhibitors' Association, has returned to his home in Wilmington from Washington, where he attended the "war council" of the motion picture industry held there. Mr. Wells expresses extreme pleasure at the outcome of the caucus relative to the retaining of Henry B. Varner as legislative representative at Washington to look after the business of the exhibitors at the national capital. Mr. Wells states there was no division of opinion on the subject, members of both the M. P. E. L. A. and the A. E. A. uniting in perfecting arrangements for retaining the services of Mr. Varner, who was the logical man for the position.

Appeal for Halifax Theater Men

Motion Picture League of Maritime Provinces Will Disburse Any Funds That May Be Sent.

OUR correspondent in St. John, N. B., forwards to us a summary of a letter received from J. M. Franklin, secretary of the Motion Picture Leauge of the Maritime Provinces. Mr. Franklin states a fund is being raised through Merrick R. Nutting, of the Canadian Motion Picture Digest, for the relief of sufferers from the disaster at Halifax. Funds are urgenely needed, Mr. Franklin states, and the Motion Picture League willingly will disburse them for the aid of the staffs and citizens.

"Every theater in this city suffered from the shock, and some quite severely," Mr. Franklyn says further. "Fortunately, no one among our business circle, received any fatal injury, but many are suffering wounds as well as the loss of their homes and everything they had in the way of worldly goods. The theater managers are doing all in their power to help their staffs secure food, shelter and clothing, and any financial aid that may be sent to us will come as a great help indeed, and which I again repeat will be shared with our fellow-citizens, many of whom are in great distress.

"While some of the theaters are in condition to open for business it will be some time yet before they will undertake to do so, in view of the terrible loss of life which this disaster brought about."

RODGERS MAKES SUGGESTIONS IN OREGON.

David G. Rodgers, organizer for the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, stayed over in Portland, Ore., a few days for the specific purpose of injecting a little pep into the individual exhibitors, and he seems to have been successful. One of the suggestions made by Mr. Rodgers that will undoubtedly be acted upon is the formation of locals subsidiary to the head association in Portland. This is made necessary by the great distance from Portland of many of the cities in Oregon of any size. For example, Baker, La Grande and Pendleton are all comparatively near one another, but all are far from Portland; also Medford, Ashland and Grant's Pass are near to each other, but several hundred miles from Portland. It is planned to amend the by-laws of the association so as to provide for an executive committee in such localities as these that can take care of the local business and do away with the necessity of coming to Portland except, perhaps, for the annual conventions.

Mr. Rodgers conferred with many of the exhibitors individually while in Portland, leaving for the South December 18.

TEXAS PLEASED AT OUTCOME IN WASHINGTON.

Announcement following the Washington meeting that hereafter there is to be only one national organization of moving picture men comes as satisfactory news to Texas. Managers in the Dallas territory have a state organization, but had held off from national affiliation until the situation had clarified. It is now felt much benefit can accrue, as national affiliation will follow. It is felt in Texas that the program adopted by the new national organization is a progressive one and that benefits will come to the provincial exhibitor heretofore impossible.

Coming League and Other Exhibitors' Conventions

(Secretaries Are Requested to Send Dates and Particulars Promptly)

Michigan State Association of Exhibitors at Majestic Theatre, Jackson, Mich....January 7 and 8

OHIO GREEKS FORM ORGANIZATION.

An organization of Greek exhibitors is being perfected in Ohio by the United Business Association of Pennsylvania, which has headquarters at 224 Columbia Building, Cleveland. The main object of the association, according to A. G. Panagopoulos, in charge, is to buy features and co-operate generally.

"Ours is a democratic organization," said Mr. Panagopoulos. "We are organizing the small fellows into a strong association. Whether a man holds one share or a thousand, he has but one vote, so you see no one can get control of the organization."

EXHIBITORS HELP THEMSELVES.

Frank Rembusch, the secretary of the Allied Exhibitors' Organizations of America, has requested you to send him a report of the exact and absolute truth of how the war tax is affecting the business of your theater. The object of this request is to secure, through united effort, a readjustment of the war excise taxes on motion pictures and film in an appeal to be made to Congress. Go right to it if you haven't done it already! Reports are reaching Mr. Rembusch slowly, and there is no time to lose. Your delay might be dangerous to the success of the whole project. Send your report at once to Frank Rembusch, Indiana Trust Building, Indianapolis, Ind.

MANHATTAN EXHIBITORS WILL ELECT OFFICERS JANUARY 10.

The meeting of the Manhattan Exhibitors' Local League, to be held last Thursday for the election of officers, was postponed until the regular monthly meeting, January 10, 1918. There were about twenty members only who responded to last Thursday's call, which was sent out hurriedly on the preceding Saturday. Delay in holiday mails and the shortness of the notice made it impossible for a large attendance. The importance attached to the election of officers and the selection of new quarters of league prompted the president to request an adjournment that all the members might be present. The regular monthly meeting and the election of officers will therefore be held at the league's rooms, 218 West 42d street, New York, on Thursday, January 10, 1918, at 1 p. m.

NORTH CAROLINA TO MEET IN JANUARY.

The mid-winter meeting of the North Carolina Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, originally set to open in Raleigh December 11, was postponed on account of the Washington convention on that date. The new date, which will be the latter part of January, has not been definitely decided upon by President Wells, but the meeting will be held in Raleigh, as the State Legislature will be in session there then, and it is deemed an opportune time to meet and endeavor to get the attention of the law-making body to the end that several pieces of legislation which work extreme hardships on the theaters of the state may be modified. Arrangements for the meeting are in the hands of Messrs. Aronson and Browne of Raleigh.

Newest in Industrial Film Producers

Films of Business Corporation With Camilla Donworth as President Enters the Market.

THE very newest thing in the shape of producers of industrial films is the Films of Business Corporation. Camilla Donworth, well known in the advertising world and late of the E. I. S. Motion Picture Corporation, is its president, with Charles Charlton acting in the capacity of vice-president.

Miss Donworth is a woman of large ability and enthusiasm, success to the Films of Business Corporation! May they fulfill what is required of them in the business world. and we have reason to believe that something will be doing in her particular field when she gets thoroughly settled in her new environment. With Mr. Charlton, who in addition to his past four or five years' experience in the industrial film business was formerly engaged in the same business in England, to help her, there is every reason to expect the very best of success for the Films of Business Corporation. They have equipped themselves with the finest facilities including a full complement of electric lights and are prepared to go ahead al presto. Their first picture has already been made and will be reviewed in these columns very shortly. This was made for the H. J. Heinz Company.

Washington Worried Over Jones Bill

Coast Senator Would Include Motion Picture Theaters Among Industries He'd Close on Sunday in Capital City.

EXHIBITORS of Washington are alarmed at the introduction into the Senate by Senator Jones, of Washington, of a bill (S. 3162) "For the proper observance of Sunday as a day of rest in the District of Columbia." This measure has been referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia for its consideration, and with the reform wave now sweeping over the Capital the exhibitors feel that there is no telling what may happen. If it should be passed motion picture theaters will be closed on Sunday.

When the bill was called to his attention, Harry M. Crandall, who looks out for all legislation at the Capitol having a bearing on the motion picture business, gave it as his opinion that exhibitors everywhere should give the matter their attention and be prepared, if necessary, to have representatives of the industry come to Washington to show the need for the operation of motion picture theaters on Sunday as well as any other day of the week.

Washington is always the goat when the reform workers of the country wish to put anything over. With blue law regulations in effect here, they can go before state legislatures and secure similar laws, so that what effects us locally is of importance elsewhere. Exhibitors should not minimize the effect of restrictions here. This is the nation's capital and as such it is supposed to set the example to be followed by the States, and the influence is very great.

Newcomer from Paris

Star of Palais Royal and Colleague of Coquelin Comes Here to Act in Pictures.

MLLE. MARCELLE ROUSSILLON, one of the most delightful of the younger French actresses, landed at an Atlantic port last week and expects soon to make her debut in American motion pictures and in the speaking drama as well. Both in Paris and en tour Miss Roussillon was the colleague of the great Coquelin, the immortal creator of Cyrano de Bergerac and the undisputed leader of the French stage. She was in fact Coquelin's particular protégé, the old man selecting her from a crowd of candidates, making her his leading lady, and subsequently promoting her artistic career with the most chivalric, unselfish devotion. The actress began her career as the prize pupil of the conservatory at Lyons, France, where she was born and brought up. After a further course of study at the National Conservatory she started professionally at the Theatre des Varieties, Paris, then played at the Theatre des Capucines, and attained stellar rank at the Theatre Palais Royal, where she carried off the chief honors in the amusing comedy, "Monsieur Zero."

Marcelle Roussillon.

Mlle. Roussillon is intimately acquainted with unhappy Belgium, where she was a great favorite before the war as the result of a highly successful tour, associated with M. Brasseur, in which she played extended engagements at Brussels, Antwerp, Ghent and Liege. She was also seen at the head of her own company in the principal cities of France, including Paris, Marseilles, Lyons and Bordeaux. Before coming to our shores the young artiste took up the study of English, in which language she is now proficient. As the portrait shows, she is a vivacious auburn-brunete, a good picture subject, and equally suited to roles of emotionalism and of comedy. Professional correspondence to her can be addressed to the Creighton, 128 West Forty-seventh street, New York.

Associated Theaters Elects Officers

Minnesota, Wisconsin and the Dakotas Represented at Meeting, Which Decides to Open New York Quarters.

THE first annual meeting of the newly organized Associated Theaters, Inc., was held at the West Hotel, Minneapolis, Minn., December 17. The following officers for 1918 were elected: president, Charles W. Gates, Aberdeen, S. D.; vice-president, William S. Smith, Menomonie, Wis.; treasurer, Henry P. Greene, Minneapolis; chairman board, H. L. Hartman, Mandan, N. D.; secretary, T. J. Hamlin, Minneapolis; executive board—President Gates, Treasurer Greene, Secretary Hamlin; general manager, T. J. Hamlin.

About fifty exhibitors, representing a majority of the sections of Minnesota, Wisconsin and the Dakotas, were in attendance. It was announced that beginning January 22 membership for Minnesota, Dakota and Wisconsin exhibitors will be $25 instead of $10. The following committees were elected: Committee on officers' reports: Mr. Campbell of White Bear, Minn.; Mr. Hill of Minneapolis, Mr. La Grille of Duluth. Committee on auditing and finances: Mr. Klug of Zumbrota and Mazeppa, Minn.; Mr. Eselin of Minneapolis, Mr. Rauenhorst of Fulda, Minn. Committee on incorporation, by-laws, franchise, information sheet and order blank: Mr. Lien of Jamestown, N. D.; Mr. Webb of Tracy, Minn.; Mr. Dawson of Waseca, Minn.; Mr. Anderson of Plankinton, S. D.; Mr. Schochow of Wausau, Wis.; Mr. Dean, Fargo, N. D.; Mr. Stelzner, Minneapolis.

It was announced that on January 7 Associated Theaters, Inc., would begin contracting for films and equipment. It is expected that one of two members of the executive board will be sent to complete negotiations with New York headquarters of various film producers and distributors.

To Put on One-Night Stand Pictures

Howard-Wells Company Sending Out a Show Which May Be Predecessor of Others.

THE Howard-Wells Amusement Company, owners of the three motion picture theaters in Wilmington, N. C., is equipping a portable motion picture outfit with which it intends to start a circuit of one-night stand motion picture shows throughout the small villages in this territory. Only one outfit has been equipped, but if the proposition pans out as it is expected to a half dozen shows will be put on the road immediately.

A Power 6-A projector, equipped with the special lamphouse and Edison Mazda motion picture lamps of 800 watts, will be used. For generating current a Delco portable lighting plant is used. The entire outfit, with screen and all equipment, is mounted on an automobile truck. It is planned to arrange a regular circuit of towns within easy distance, each to be visited one night out of each week. Each outfit is expected to play at least five towns a week in the thickly populated sections. The program will, of course, be changed each week, and it is planned to give an eight-reel show, consisting of a five-reel feature, a two-reel comedy and an educational subject.

The Delco plants have been thoroughly tested for this use. Heretofore they have been used in connection with small portable projectors for educational purposes throughout the state, but not before for commercial use in connection with motion picture projection. The plant of the Howard-Wells Amusement Company was tested out in the Royal Theater here, and with a throw of 110 feet gave a perfectly lighted picture.

Greene Announces Paramount Executives

Al Lichtman Is General Manager and J. K. Burger Heads New Department of Supplies and Service.

IN assuming executive supervision of Paramount Pictures Corporation, following the announcement of the transfer of the activities of Hiram Abrams, president, and B. P. Schulberg, general manager to the development of a new and more intimate association between Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and the motion picture exhibitors, Walter E. Greene, president of Artcraft, gave out yesterday an outline of the department heads of the Paramount organization, effective after January 1.

Al Lichtman, who has been general sales manager of Paramount and Artcraft, will undertake the duties of general manager of the two distributing organizations. Mr. Lichtman was one of the first general sales managers of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and also general manager of the Artcraft organization at its inception. He is one of the best known exchange men in the industry.

John C. Flinn will remain in charge as general director of all publicity and advertising of Paramount and Artcraft, and in addition to the other activities of the department will continue as director of the big national advertising campaign, now so successfully under way.

Frederic Gage, assistant sales manager, will become general sales manager and J. K. Burger will assume charge as head of a new department of the organization, the department of supplies and service to exchanges.

Norris Wilcox will be office manager of the organization and J. Albert Thorne will continue as general purchasing agent.

A Screen Actress with Ideas

Madame Olga Petrova Outlines Special Plans Made Possible by the Formation of Her Own Production Organization.

IN "Daughter of Destiny," the first of a series of eight special feature film vehicles which will present Madame Olga Petrova under the standard of her own screen organization during the forthcoming year, the famous Polish actress essays the type of role which it has long been her wish to portray. The opportunity afforded to carry out her own ideas, by the recent formation of the Petrova Picture Company, has been quickly taken advantage of by the beautiful star in her initial release to be shown at the Rialto and the other large photoplay houses of the country during Christmas week. Speaking recently on the subject most dear to her heart Madame Petrova had the following to say:

"When I signed this new contract with Frederick L. Collins, it was with the hope of accomplishing three things. In the first place I want to make high class dramatic pictures that will please the public, so that, secondly, if the public is pleased, I can repay my backers who had had such faith in me. Then thirdly, I want to put a feminish note into my pictures, as I am a great believer in woman and everything that tends to her advancement and development. Of course, I intend to do this in such a way that will not interfere at all with the value of my pictures as entertainment. They are by no means to be regarded as propaganda.

"What do I mean by feminish pictures? Why, picture dramas that show what women are doing and what they already have done, plays that are based on what women really think, and not what they imagine they think. There is real vital drama in this subject and I am willing to fight to develop these dramatic possibilities, because I have great faith in the influence of the screen. In these days of disrespect, it is one of the few influences that the people at large really believe in.

"I always have a director, of course, and I believe in cooperating with him all I can, but I do not believe in having any director attempt to make me act according to a man's viewpoint instead of my own. I want to interpret my own feelings in my own way. For instance, I can't beat on the doors or tear my hair, unless what I am pleased to call my brain tells me that there is a good cause for me to do so. I cannot play the wronged girl who is brought home repentant, with a shawl over my head, unless I am thoroughly convinced that it is proper to be repentant under such and such circumstances, which have been unfolded in the story. When a man leaves me, my self-respect will not allow me to run after him, begging him to still further ruin my life by returning to me, nor will it let me fall sobbing on the floor. I simply cannot do these things.

"Of course, I do not belive in restraint when there is nothing to restrain. I will beat on the doors, tear my hair and cry unadulterated tears if some logical reason in the story makes me do so.

"And another thing. I have refused and shall go on refusing to play stories about Scarlet Women, because these stories make no mention of Scarlet Men. In life there is a Scarlet Man whenever there is a Scarlet Woman, and he should be just as much in evidence in the picture as these women."

VIOLET MERSEREAU GUEST OF SOLDIERS.

At a benefit given at the Ansonia Hotel, New York, on Christmas Eve, by the 306th Company, National Army, Camp Upton, New York, Violet Mersereau, star of Bluebirds, was one of the guests of honor. A number of stage celebrities gathered to entertain the boys in the early part of the evening. Miss Mersereau arrived at eleven o'clock just before the dancing began and was given an enthusiastic greeting.

General Film Denies Alliances

Asserts, However, Its Principal Aim Is to Take on New Distributing Business.

CONSIDERABLE prominence has been given General Film Company during the last ten days in connection with a variety of surmises of impending realignments in the motion picture industry. These surmises have been vague and diverse. A statement from the company makes it plain that so far as it is concerned the wildest kind of guesswork has been employed.

Says an official of General Film: "Following the agreement by which the Paralta Plays are being handled through General Film exchanges by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation—a perfectly normal arrangement which is already giving signs of proving a great merchandising triumph—stories have been published that suggest an even greater scope for General Film in co-operation with other companies that have been named. Although the inference in these stories is in the main complimentary to General Film, really nothing has happened to require anything but a denial.

"Whenever anything does happen, General Film will be heard from officially. Its principal aim at this time is to take on new business as a distributing organization in the normal course of its enlarged activities. It continues to present itself as a service system ready to handle the distribution of film for any number of manufacturers without the duplication of effort, exchanges, employes and overhead expense. Its position in the trade is firmly established, rational and efficient. It should be remembered that General Film has a habit of emerging from each rumor period more serene than ever, more thoroughly organized than before, better qualified to give service.

"The company realizes that the only way for the free lance producer to survive is to concentrate his capital upon production, and not to divert any part of it into free lance distribution. General Film is dedicated to advanced methods of business in this industry.

"When all adjustments shall have been made under the inevitable pressure of circumstances in the motion picture trade, General Film will remain one of those few competent organizations that will be handling the great bulk of the country's film product by a scientific merchandising system."

Getting It Straight

The Relations Between Paralta, Hodkinson and General Film Explained.

THE recent announcement stating that Paralta Plays were to be distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation through the exchanges of the General Film Company, seems to have been misunderstood in a number of cases.

Paralta Plays, Inc., of which Carl Anderson is the president, are distributing their productions through the offices of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation which has its executive offices at 527 Fifth avenue, New York City, and which is headed by W. W. Hodkinson, who for years has been recognized as one of the most potent factors of the film industry. The General Film Company has established throughout the United States some of the most efficient exchanges in existence; located in the principal railroad centers of the country, guaranteeing the best possible shipping facilities.

Arrangements have been consummated between the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation and the General Film Company under the terms of which the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation will use the General Film Company's exchanges for the distribution of Paralta Plays. Contracts received will not become effective until they have been approved by the contract department of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Exhibitors booking Paralta Plays are therefore dealing with the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, which is merely using the distributing facilities of the General Film Company rather than to open up exchanges which would necessitate an expenditure of money which would have to be charged to the overhead of the territory and which the exhibitor would ultimately have to pay.

GENERAL FILM MAN GOES TO YAPHANK.

General Film loses one of its valued employes to Uncle Sam in C. R. Cooper, traveling auditor. Mr. Cooper, whose headquarters were in New York, entered the selective service and reported at Camp Upton, Yaphank, Long Island, the day after Christmas. He was given a rousing farewell at the home office of the company.

J. J. Raymond Goes with Fox

Well-Known Amusement Authority Will Devote His Time to Aiding Exhibitors.

TO make even more practical and individually serviceable the assistance now being given exhibitors in the preparation of publicity and advertising matter and in the solution of managerial problems, William Fox has added another executive to his staff. His position is said to be the first of the sort created by a film producer. J. J. Raymond, of New York and Boston, is the man selected, and his sole duty will be the promotion of exhibitors' interests.

Mr. Raymond has had twenty-five years' experience covering every phase of the amusement business. He began with road atractions. Then he had a long period of service with George C. Tilyou at Coney Island. For the last ten years, most of the time as general representative, he has been associated with Gordon Brothers, New England exhibitors, who operate a chain of motion picture houses.

J. J. Raymond.

Not only is Mr. Raymond well known in theatrical circles of New York and New England, but he also has been widely quoted in the trade press on subjects pertaining to theater management. "Why Exhibitors Fail" is one of the subjects on which he has written frequently.

"My endeavor as a Fox Film Corporation employee," Mr. Raymond says, "will be to render both general and individual service to the exhibitor. I am to be the exhibitors' representative in this office. My work will supplement that already being done by the publicity and advertising department, extending to problems of management and especially to the important matter of profit making. My business will be to show how to win and hold patronage."

It appears also that there is another phase of Mr. Raymond's proposed activities. He will keep the exhibitors' viewpoint constantly before the Fox corporation departments which do not come in direct contact with the theater.

S. S. HUTCHINSON'S SON ENLISTS AS PRIVATE.

James Hobart Hutchinson, eldest son of Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, Inc., of Chicago, who is enlisted with the First Company Military Police, 310 Train, 85th Division, at Camp Custer, Michigan, writes that army life is the life for him.

Mr. Hutchinson, who was a student of Armour's Technical Institute, enlisted the minute he was twenty-one, which was early in December. He chose the Military Police because of his love for hosemanship in which he excells. He enlisted as a private on principal and proposes to win his commission on his merits.

"Uncle Sam needs men in the ranks," he argued. "Everybody cannot be officers," and tumbled right into service, being one of many rich men's sons who have taken this same practical and manly viewpoint.

HUGH JEFFREY IN "UNDER SUSPICION."

Hugh Jeffrey, who has long been a Metro favorite, has a prominent part in "Under Suspicion," a forthcoming Metro screen romance starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne. In "Under Suspicion" Mr. Jeffrey is associated with William S. Davis, who directed the first motion picture in which Mr. Jeffrey ever appeared. Later he was under Mr. Davis' direction for more than a year at the Ramo studio. For Metro he has appeared in "The Wager," "A Magdalene of the Hills," "The Call of Her People," and other important productions.

What "Motion Picture Plus" Is

Proposes to Make and Project Pictures the Other Way of the Film—Process May Have Advantages.

THE Motion Picture Plus, W. W. Hodkinson has announced, is a process of manufacture which uses the standard film and makes a picture which is as high as the present width and twice as wide as the present height of the film. In other words, the film runs sideways through the projector instead of up and down, and two frames are used for each picture. The new process is fully described in a four-page advertising supplement in the Moving Picture World, dated January 5. The Hodkinson corporation is also distributing folders to the trade on request.

The first picture under the new process is now being made at the Paralta studios at Hollywood, Cal. Miss Bessie Barriscale is the star, and the picture will be ready for trade showing next month and for regular release in January.

The new process will give, it is claimed, the stereoscopic effect to the figures which has been sought for so long. In addition, not only is the field of action nearly twice as wide, but, owing to the lens arrangement of the camera, the wide pictures will have the same depth and clarity of focus as is now characteristic of the narrow film in the very finest productions. The new shape should not be confused with the pictures now used by some directors, in which the top and bottom of the screen are masked off and a full-room scene is shown. In these pictures the depth of focus is entirely lost and the actors seem to move like paper figures against a painted background. The new process absolutely gives the same depth as is now obtained in normal picture scenes from the standard film, the Hodkinson company claims.

The process is said to be the result of the investment of a fortune and years of work by the inventors, the Photo Motion Company of Kansas City, Mo. The patents not only control the use of the standard film in this sort of picture, but also patents to a simpler and better movement of the film in the projector, which allows for the movement required by this longer strip of stock.

It is stated that the first regular releases of the Motion Picture Plus will be one a week, and that in addition to the productions of the producing companies affiliated with the Hodkinson organization, producing franchises will be granted to individual productions of other companies when the story, star and production measure up to the quality standard set.

An Eight-Year-Old-Star of Big Picture

THE central figure in the big Maeterlinck spectacle, "The Blue Bird," being produced by Maurice Tourneur for Artcraft, is Tula Belle, the prodigy of the screen, whose work is known to motion picture patrons. Though Tula is but eight years old she has been playing in pictures for several years and has taken important roles. She is a daring youngster, and in one picture rode a horse which leaped from a cliff into the water, a distance of thirty-five feet. She can swim and is an accomplished dancer.

Tula Belle.

Tula was born in Norway, and came to this country when a baby. Her parents resided in New Rochelle, and her precociousness and beauty attracted the attention of a local producer, who tried her out in pictures. It was discovered that she possessed great dramatic ability and extraordinary intelligence, and from that time on her services have been in demand for picture work.

In "The Blue Bird" she and Robin Macdougall, aged ten, are the children who go in quest of the Blue Bird and experience wonderful adventures. Very often allegorical subjects are not easily understandable by the average audience, and Director Tourneur determined to establish a precedent by making "The Blue Bird" absolutely clear to a child. As the picture progressed he assured himself that the scenes were understood by little Tula, and in a number of instances he permitted her to direct the action in which she and Macdougall and other children took part.

Theoretically, Tula is the star of the production, in which about a thousand actors appear, for, according to the story, it is for the benefit of the little girl and her brother that the Fairy Berylune causes the events to take place that constitute the big spectacle.

Metro's Service Flag

It Boasts of Twenty-eight Stars—Only One Man on the List Is in the Navy.

THERE are twenty-eight stars in the Mutual Film Corporation's service flag. The younger members of the Mutual staff have rallied to the colors with enthusiasm and the names included in the roster are those of men resident in many states.

Messrs. Roger M. McCullough, Ellis Merkley, Herman Cislak, and John Dromey of the home offices in Chicago were among the first to join up and some of the men whose names are included in the following list are already in France or on their way.

Most of the Mutual's men have joined the infantry branch of the service, but there are some of them who have had previous military experience and who have preferred the artillery and cavalry. One Mutual man, Joseph E. Farrow, of Philadelphia, has joined the Navy.

The complete roster of the Mutual men now in the service includes the following: Samuel Levine, Infantry, Boston; Isadore Wartikowsky, Infantry, Buffalo; P. A. Schmidt, Infantry, Cincinnati; F. A. Tomes, Infantry, Dallas; Richard O. Battles, Ambulance, Denver; Ellis Merkley, Infantry, Home Office; Lieutenant Roger McCullough, Infantry, Home Office; Herman Cislak, Infantry, Home Office; John Dromey, War Department, Home Office; L. A. Anger, Infantry, Indianapolis; Rudolph M. Freuler, Infantry, Milwaukee; E. H. Gilley, Infantry, Milwaukee; Floyd H. Vogt, Infantry, New York; Herbert C. Luce, Infantry, New York; Jack Beam, Cavalry, Oklahoma City; Will Withrop, Infantry, Omaha; Joe Cowan, Infantry, Omaha; Jesse Jessen, Infantry, Omaha; Roy Malcolm, Infantry, Omaha; Joseph E. Farrow, Navy, Philadelphia; Maurice Rose, Infantry, Philadelphia; Harry Booth, Artillery, Pittsburgh; Whitney Taylor, Artillery, Pittsburgh; R. C. Lutes, Infantry, Pittsburgh; H. F. Hastings, Artillery, Portland; L. A. Cahill, Infantry, Salt Lake City; Thomas Herbert, Infantry, San Francisco; Jack L. Raper, Infantry, St. Louis; George Line, Infantry, Salt Lake City; Ben Oppenheim, Infantry, New York City; John Briggs, over sea forces, Montreal; G. E. Beck, Aviation, Omaha; Ralph Sampson, Quartermaster's Department, Home Office; E. F. Carruthers, Infantry, Vancouver.

CAVERLY TO COHN FROM THE FRONT.

From "Somewhere in France" there has been received by Jack Cohn, manager of Universal's Animated Weekly, Current Events and Screen Magazine, a letter from one of his former cameramen, Leon H. Caverly, now Quartermaster Sergeant in the U. S. Marine Corps. As he explains in his letter, Mr. Caverly has been appointed official cinematographer for the United States Marine Corps. Writing of his work he says:

"My collection of both movies and stills are growing daily with some very good stuff. Light conditions are very bad as it is pitch dark by three thirty, and besides it rains and rains and rains, with the result that we are knee deep in mud spelled with a capital letter. If 'War is Hell,' as Sherman said, it should be fought in the tropics to carry out the proper idea of heat. Incidentally light conditions would be greatly improved."

"THE COUNT AND THE WEDDING GUEST" (O. Henry).

With his usual sympathetic insight into the more amiable peccadilloes of the human character, O. Henry produced one of his most playful masterpieces in "The Count and the Wedding Guest." This story of New York boarding house life dwells upon a lonely girl's aspirations for grandeur and her heart hunger for love, these being by the way favorite themes of the author. As the current Broadway Star feature, released through General Film Company, a most appealing picturization of the story is presented.

"The Count and the Wedding Guest" is a two-part photoplay fashioned under the sympathetic touch of Martin Justice, director, and Jean Paige and E. Webster Campbell, leads. The action progresses in an absorbing fashion to the surprise climax.

Interesting Educationals

Three Scenic Subjects, Two Zoological, Three Topical, and One Industrial Subject.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

"A World of Dreams" (Educational-Bruce).

ONE of the most beautiful of the many charming scenic pictures given to the public by Robert C. Bruce via the Educational Films Corporation of America. This particular picture is almost indescribable in its beauty. The subject is treated on the basis that to the man of imagination belongs the world; and again skilful subtitling has added its bit to the charm of a picture. Opening with a series of snow-capped mountains more beautiful than the most extravagant imagination could conjure, a subtitle in the course of the series reads "I know a mountain thrilling to the stars; and at her feet there dreams a quiet lake." Others are equally suggestive of the character of the scenes presented. Following the mountains are wonderful studies in brooks and waterfalls. But what is the use of trying to describe in words a thing so beautiful?

"Beautiful Rivers of France" (Pathe).

In this half-reel of tinted scenic picturesque views along the beautiful River Tarn in France are shown. This stream changes constantly in character, passing through gorges, under bridges and past cities and villages. The ancient city of Millau, the village of Payre and church of Notre Dame are among the special points of interest.

"Here and There in Keswick" (Pathe).

The county of Cumberland comes in for a share of attention in this half-reel of nicely tinted views. The particular part of the county visited by the Pathe cameraman is Keswick. In the picture we must imagine ourselves in a stage driving across rolling hills, and over winding roads through a country of great beauty. Vividly beautiful is the presentation of these scenes; and in the course of our drive we visit Ladore Falls, quaint inns and many features of interest.

"Nature's Songsters" (Educational-Ditmars).

The usual thing in pictures presenting "nature's songsters" forgets some of the most important though not perhaps the most musical of her warblers, if such a term may be applied to the tree toad, the locust and the katy-did. In this picture Ditmars has given us something novel and something unlike other Ditmars numbers. Strange illustrations of what the same volume of sound emitted by a creature the size of a man might mean to New York skyscrapers afford considerable comedy; and although the picture opens with attractive scenes showing the robin and some associates, we find the closeups of the tree toad who sings his song when the rain storm has swelled the lichens, and of the insects who sing in the night most interesting The cricket ushering in the fall of the year also comes in for attention.

"The Bee, Suffragist Supreme and Worker Extraordinary" (Universal).

In the 54th number of the Universal Screen Magazine will be found as nicely presented a study on bees as has been seen recently. The fact that this subject has been subtitled with care and that the bee has been given an individual character and has been credited with the building of a republic adds a great deal to the enjoyment of the picture. The idea carried out in this subject will be recognized by many as identical with Maeterlinck's in his "Idyl of the Honey Bee." In a moderately brief series of scenes we learn most things that there are to know about the honey bee.

"The Dictagraph" (Universal).

A series of interesting scenes will be found in the Screen Magazine No. 54 acquainting us with one method of scouting in the vicinity of the enemy trenches in France. This is done by means of the dictagraph which is stationed at various points to listen and record what it hears. An interesting subject.

"Picking Dates in California" (Universal).

In the Screen Magazine No. 54 are a number of scenes photographed on what was once a barren desert in California, and which has been transformed by means of irrigation into a veritable fairyland where delicious dates are grown. Scenes explaining the system of irrigation are shown as well as closeups of wonderful clusters of the fruit ready to pick. We also witness the picking and packing of the dates. An instructive subject.

"War Dogs" (Paramount-Bray).

To many of us the extent of the work of the Red Star Society is not as familiar as it might be. The funds of this society are devoted to the care and relief of animals employed in the great war. In the 10th release of Pictograph are a series of scenes on the ranch of Anita Baldwin where dogs are being bred for use in the war under the supervision of this society. The particular dog that is being reared on this ranch is a cross between an English sheep dog and an Airedale. Scenes show the feeding of the dogs in the breeding pens and other views of interest on the ranch.

"Knit Your Bit" (Paramount-Bray).

An inspiring subject to be found in the 100th release of the Pictograph points to the necessity of knitting as many articles of comfort for the soldiers as is possible. Scenes showing even children at work with the knitting needles are shown as well as the receiving and donning of numerous knitted articles by a soldier boy. A timely subject.

Visual Education Company

Irving Place Manufacturers Strive to Improve Methods of Visualizing Educational Subjects.

AT 67 Irving Place, New York City, the Visual Education Company, with Joseph T. Shaw as president, and George H. Breed treasurer, is endeavoring to intensify the efficiency of the educational film. They are paying particular attention to those of industrial character and are succeeding in giving well-detailed, clearly defined illustrations of the subjects attempted by them.

One of the subjects reviewed by the writer is entitled "A Brush with the Enemy." This picture, which is in one reel, is based on a slender story which serves to illustrate the great necessity of caring for the teeth. The manufacture of a sanitary tooth paste is one of the main features of the picture. It is interesting to note the absolute cleanliness with which this dentifrice is prepared. The principal ingredients used in preparing it are also noted.

Another subject made for the U. S. Steel Corporation is entitled "The Reason Why" and is intended as an aid in the prevention of accidents. The various safety methods supplied by the U. S. Steel Corporation for the protection of employees are shown and the penalty paid for disobeying necessary orders and printed warnings. The film is well made and interesting. It serves its purpose well.

"How Uncle Sam Has Outgrown Homespun" is one of the most interesting of the kind we have seen. It shows us the old methods of obtaining the wool from the sheep, the old-fashioned way of washing the sheep before shearing by hand as contrasted with the modern methods made necessary by the larger requirements of the present generation. In the woolen mill we are shown the different processes through which the wool passes on its way to the loom. The scouring, carding, gilling and drawing bring us finally to long aisles of spindles where "one man and two 'mules' do the work of a thousand Priscillas." Step by step we follow the product of the sheep until it is converted into cloth and ready for shipping.

Associated with Mr. Shaw and Mr. Breed in this work in an editorial capacity are Frank McMurry, Ph.D., Jeremiah W. Kenks, Ph.D., Grant Karr, Ph.D., and George E. Meyers, Ph.D.

Technique of the Educational Film

Ernest Howard Culbertson, Assistant Editor of the Universal Screen Magazine, States Interesting Facts Based on Observation and Experience.

(By request Ernest Howard Culbertson, assistant editor of the Universal Screen Magazine, has written for the Motion Picture Educator an interesting story encompassing facts regarding the development and presentation of the educational film gained by observation and experience. It is as follows:)

I have been placed in a peculiarly fortunate position, due to the kindly interest and generosity of Mr. Jack Cohn, editor-in-chief of the Universal Animated Weekly, Universal Current Events and Universal Screen Magazine, who has given me every opportunity to work out and apply certain technical theories which I believe are of cardinal value in effectively presenting the educational and informative motion picture.

The technique of the average educational reel (or one of that large and polyglot variety which comes under the head of educational) seems to me, so far as I have observed, to be deplorably haphazard and inept. In view of the wealth of vitally interesting material which is being offered to the public in reels of this character it is unfortunate that so little effort—relatively speaking—is being put forth to make them the popular, pulsing and constructive mediums they potentially are. The whole realm of Science, Industry and Manufacture—every phase of human activity has been explored and superficially exploited in motion pictures. We have gone into the air and taken pictures, we have taken pictures of the air itself, we have gone down into the sea and secured wonderful views of teeming under-water life, we have followed the physician into the laboratory and, with the aid of the microscope, reproduced germ-life on the film, we have made people cringe by showing them the wrigglers in the water they drink, chemistry has revealed some of her stellar secrets to us—we have become the intimate friends of nature, and have vividly depicted the activities, habits and eccentricities of birds and insects—we have been instrumental in furthering the acquaintance of the general public with animal life—far and wide—and when it comes to geography and sociology probably no other single medium has played a more valuable role—as far as visualization goes in constructive presentation—in disseminating knowledge of these subjects.

Taking them all in all they have not been adequately dealt with. The appeal that has been made has been for the most part casual, flamboyantly "punchy"—and hardly with the idea of building up a steadfast clientele with that vast public which is at all times tremendously interested in subjects and things worthwhile. We have pandered too much in our attempts to capture the volatile public of today without bending our efforts toward the complete enfiladation of the solid public of tomorrow—next month and next year.

It is the primary duty of the editor to see that a subject "gets over" at all costs, but the value of the picture as a whole can be immeasurably enhanced by a nice adjustment of the two elements of vivid and human appeal. So often it is possible to relate a subject up with some vital idea—or some big psychological idea—or political or economic movement and give it a breadth and a depth which in addition to its vivid pictorial appeal will make it something which will not only impress for the moment but make it live in the minds of those who view it for months and even years afterward. Thus, the educational film can have a definite shaping and controlling and constructive influence in their daily lives and also possibly play a formative role in the development of their characters. The editor should be quick to take advantage of every sentiment, inclination, hope, aspiration, generous impulse—tendency to broad-minded judgment of which Twentieth Century human nature is heir to—to drive home the full import of a picture. The vital significance—the big moving idea is so often sacrificed for the sake of vividness. Vividness of course should always be sought for, but it should never be employed as a technical expedient at the expense of the broad human appeal.

Technical economy here should play the stellar role the same as it does in the creation of every work of art—the same as it does in the building of a great play. Hamlet is a great play because every element of dramatic appeal is taken into consideration and handled with consummate skill. The external action is vivid, intense—melodramatic in the extreme, making a tremendous appeal to the primal instincts in men and women. This has been incomparably coordinated with the intellectual philosophical and spiritual appeal of the play. So in the educational picture the vivid—the striking, the momentarily gripping elements should be coordinated and adjusted and made the basic "getting over," medium for the big telling idea. This may all sound like the finespun theory, but I frankly believe, and my experience has proven it to be practicable and based on thoroughly sound principles. Send people out of the theater remembering what they have seen. Appeal to every side of their nature. Why not dispense with the mad hunt after the obviously striking and unusual by discovering and presenting the striking and unusual in the apparently commonplace.

Each subject presented should as far as possible have as its basis a coherent story, in short, the editor and the cameraman and the cutter should combine to dramatize each subject. The elements of contrast and connotation in my opinion have not been given enough consideration. Connotation may sound exceedingly "high brow," but in reality its meaning ought to be comprehensible to even the novice in motion pictures. Writers and playwrights give it no end of attention. It simply means that each scene should suggest a great deal more than its pictorial objectivity would indicate. For instance when we made our mosquito picture last summer we had a doctor in one scene standing near several stagnant pools of water directing workmen who were spraying them with oil. This was done in order to kill the larvae of the mosquito. In the background we showed a yard with a number of small children playing in it. The doctor paused for a moment in his work and gazed apprehensively in the direction of the children. Thus connoting for the moment the idea—which it was our aim to drive home at every stage of the picture—that the mosquito is a flagrant menace to the life and health of the child. In the picture which we took of the Grand Central Station, showing just how trains are controlled in that great terminal we aimed at every stage of the picture to drive home to the spectator the idea of the immensity and colossal intricate character of the task involved. Every time we showed the man in the control tower we flashed immediately before or immediately afterwards a vista of outer yards of tracks—thus attempting to fully impress everyone who sees it with the magnitude and responsibility of the man's job.

I know of nothing that is a more valuable technical asset than contrast. Used judiciously it can be employed with telling effect again and again and again, but this and connotation and vividness—each and all—should be germane. No scene or scenes should be interpolated for the sheer sake of effect. Here is where art is required—real art. Coordinate and adjust—make each picture phychologically symmetrical. Drive home the big idea waves of subordinated, controlled and sublimated sentiment, sympathy, humor, pathos—fused by contrast and connotation.

Sequence is another important technical element which should never be lost sight of. I have discovered that it can be made to play relatively the same as tempo does in music. Vary your tempo you get radically different effects in a musical composition. Vary your sequence in the educational picture and you get an entirely different effect.

One hears so often "Titles are half the picture," and in truth they are—and not infrequently they are even seventy-five per cent. of a picture. Nine times out of ten they can most assuredly make or break a subject.

The relationship between the title and the scene it seeks to explain is a matter which warrants an endless amount of studious consideration on the part of anyone who is striving to get a picture over fully and completely. A title should never be so lengthy that it draws the pictorial value of a scene, nor should it be so brief as to even appreciably jeopardize the full import or contributory value or fail to suggestively develop the full connotative possibilities of a scene.

Humor and pith are all well enough, but should never be striven for at the expense of explanatory succinctness and dignity when the proper presentation of the subject in hand is imperatively dependent upon the judicious application of these factors. The mental attitude with which a spectator views a picture—especially in an educational reel—is an important consideration and the atmosphere which inspires the proper attitude can only be developed in titles. One can kill the impression—the lasting impression—a subject should make by the use of "flip" titles. In writing titles make the vital, "cosmos searching" appeal paramount. Let humor and "pep" play a secondary role.

I believe it is important that we should make the primary appeal of our pictures to women and children in view of the fact that it is variously estimated that 75 per cent. of our movie audiences are made up of women and children.

Pathe Making Big Plans for 1918

General Manager Berst, Now on West Coast, Outlines Coming Activities of Company.

EN ROUTE to the Pacific Coast where he has gone in accordance with big plans, J. A. Berst, vice president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, issued a statement revealing his aims for the future and the steps he is taking to assure their realization.

"The year 1918 will be the greatest in the history of Pathe Exchange," said Mr. Berst. "Each move we are making is a step to bigger things. The industry has come to a critical period in its development and Pathe is on the right side of the fence.

"By the time this is published I will have arrived on the Pacific Coast in accordance with plans that will give Pathe more and better pictures for the new year. The quality of Pathe releases all along the line is destined to improve and go on improving, and every day I am confronted with new evidence that our policy of giving the best possible films to the exhibitors at prices that will allow them to make a profit on their investment is the only one that will win out.

"During the past year Pathe has scored many achievements, not the least among them being the formation of an organization, the completeness and efficiency of which are showing themselves all the time.

"I feel that our machine is now ready for the big drive of 1918 and I have no hesitancy in saying that this year will see the survival of the fittest in the motion picture business, and if there is anything that money and brains can accomplish still further to assure Pathe's position as one of the most important if not the most important of the successful companies, it will be done.

"Results are not only necessary, but I feel sure will be attained because of the ability and loyalty of the men and women whom I have carefully selected and whom I am proud to have in our organization.

"I am now planning the addition of several names to our list of Pathe Plays stars and will also probably organize another serial and another comedy producing company. Our sales department, under Mr. Quimby, a practical man who has demonstrated his worth, I look upon as full of great possibilities. The accounting department under our Controller, Mr. Brunet, is known in the industry, and all the other parts of our big machine are oiled and ready for the campaign in which the efficient co-service of every one in the home office and every branch will play such an important part. Our determination to make Pathe bigger and bigger gives our organization the driving power that will enable us to attain our end.

"Our seven studios are now working at high speed to give us the finest box-office attractions that have yet been seen. Our Pathe Play stars, Irene Castle, Bessie Love, Fannie Ward, Frank Keenan and Bryant Washburn have strong stories by well known writers, produced by big directors. Gold Rooster Plays with Baby Marie Osborne, Gladys Hulette and Creighton Hale will continue better than ever."

The men whose works are to be seen in Pathe films include Rudyard Kipling, Henry Kitchell Webster, George Randolph Chester, Arthur B. Reeve, Cyrus Townsend Brady, Sir William Young, Fred Jackson, whose latest Broadway play is one of the biggest successes of the current season and many others.

Among the plays which Pathe has bought there are a number of A. H. Woods' biggest hits, such as "Innocent," "For Sale," "The Other Woman," "Wanted—Jim Bennett" and "The Power of Money," each of these being an immensely valuable theatrical property in itself.

"Already we have laid plans for the production of five serials in 1918, including one by Charles Logue and Arthur B. Reeve, authors of 'The Hidden Hand,' with scenario by Bertram Milhauser, who wrote 'The Fatal Ring,' and another founded on Guy de Taramond's famous novel, 'The Mystery of Lucien Delorme,'" said Mr. Berst. "The Russian Art Films, which we will release at monthly intervals during the New Year, are now going over well.

"During the year we will have more Official War Pictures, and just as each we have released in 1917 has been greeted as better than the one that preceded it, I hope and expect that each to come will be a corresponding improvement.

"The Pathe News, the Argus Pictorial, the colored scenics, cartoons and other specialties will get better all the time.

"In closing I want to repeat in other words what I have said before: 'Bigger, Better Pictures for 1918' is our slogan and with them we will attain greater results than ever before."

Brady Featuring George MacQuarrie

IN furtherance of his policy of direct recognition of effective work in World Pictures, Director General William A. Brady has arranged to feature George D. MacQuarrie with little Madge Evans in "Gates of Gladness," recently completed. Many of the scenes of this photoplay were taken in the house and grounds of Georgian Court, the magnificent estate of George Gould. The first engagement of Mr. MacQuarrie by Mr. Brady was as leading man for the principal traveling company playing "Bought and Paid For" as a spoken drama.

George MacQuarrie

Under Mr. Brady's direction in World Pictures Mr. MacQuarrie has acquired a reputation as one of the most dependable of actors for the screen, appearing successfully in a very wide range of roles of varying requirements. He has impersonated George Washington twice upon the screen—once in "Betsy Ross," with Alice Brady, and once in "The Beautiful Mrs. Reynolds," the forthcoming World Picture showing the dramatic parts of the lives of Alexander Hamilton and Aaron Burr, with a star cast embracing Carlyle Blackwell, June Elvidge, Evelyn Greeley and Arthur Ashley.

Mr. MacQuarrie has invested prominent roles also in "Diamonds and Pearls," with Kitty Gordon; "The Tenth Case," with June Elvidge; "Her Hour," with Miss Gordon; "A Maid of Belgium," with Miss Brady, and many of the other notable photoplays published by the World Film Corporation.

DIRECTORS' ASSOCIATION TO HOLD MEETING.

At the next regular meeting of the Motion Picture Directors' Association, which will be held Thursday evening, January 3, at eight o'clock, in the Studio, 234 West 55th street, the officers for the ensuing year will be elected. The following have been nominated by the nominating committee: director, J. Searle Dawley; assistant director, Maurice Tourneur; technical director, Edwin Carewe; scenarist, James Vincent; treasurer, Robert G. Vignola; inside guard, Paul Scardon; outer guard, Wally Van.

It is hoped every member who is in the city will attend the meeting not only because of the election, but to discuss the dance, which is to be held at the Biltmore Hotel on January 26, as well as to hear Thomas Bedding, F. R. P. S., speak on "The Art of the Motion Picture."

The members must not forget that the dance is a strictly invitation affair, and as the number is limited they must send in their lists early if they want to be sure that all their friends receive invitations.

The Business to be Safeguarded

Important Movements by Producers and Distributors Are Now Under Way to Reduce All Unnecessary Expenses.

SINCE writing the opening article of my letter in the issue of January 5, I have learned from reliable sources that important concerted movements are now under way among producers of films and distributors, which aim at the elimination of all unnecessary expenses in their operations. As I understand it these movements are directed towards duplicated distributing systems, the salaries of stars and near stars, of directors and of the managers of branch exchanges. Not this only, the reorganizations under discussion touch every angle of the producing and the distributing business.

The movements are based on the belief that the salaries now being paid by the producer in his various departments are excessive; also that the services of many men working in these departments are not needed, while others are incompetent and can be easily spared. It is also believed that in the excessive total of distributing organizations many branch exchanges are included which have no economic excuse for existence, while the number of distributing systems themselves can be largely reduced to the great benefit of the business. In the distributing branch also it is conceded that many salaries are far above those paid to men of equal capacity in other lines of business, and that many of the men employed are superfluous.

A reduction along these lines will lower the cost of production and of distribution, and in the end will lead to lower rentals for exhibitors.

Exhibitors who operate first-class houses in cities of varying population, have been complaining bitterly for some considerable time of the fact that their receipts have not warranted the rental charges made for expensive "star" films. Quite a number of these exhibitors have stated that the losses sustained by them on "star" days have been made up by programs which have had no conspicuous stars and which were rented more cheaply.

To revert to the waste under the present system of distribution, it is the opinion of some prominent men, long in the business, that the highest efficiency would be secured, in all probability, if three-fourths of the present number of exchanges were closed, and the entire output distributed by the remaining one-fourth.

I have not been able to learn exactly how many exchanges there are in this country, but some conception of their number can be arrived at by citing the fact that in one city alone, with a population of 185,000, there are 45 exchanges! Each of these has a high rent to pay for offices, never to speak of the salaries of manager, booker, salesmen, clerical force, film inspector, the cost of circularizing exhibitors with expensive printed matter, stationery, postage, etc. All this burden must be carried by the business in that city and the territory it covers, and the money to meet it must come through the exhibitors from the people, in addition to the profit that makes business possible.

The army of film salesmen throughout the country brings us to another most extravagant item. A competent authority places the number employed in the United States at 2,000, conservatively estimated. The same authority figures that their general average income, including commissions, is $45 per week. With traveling and entertainment expenses added, the average will be about $60 per week, making a total of $120,000 per week for this item alone. It is estimated that 12,000 picture theaters, out of about 18,000 in the United States, are visited by salesmen, which gives one salesman to every six theaters, and an average cost to each of the 12,000 theaters of $10 per week, as that amount is included in the cost of film service.

Just think of it! An annual burden for salesmen alone of $6,240,000, or thereabouts, is carried by the business under the present system! And the exhibitors pay that vast amount yearly, because it is included in the cost of their film service.

In the face of all this it must be borne in mind that neither the producer nor the distributor, under the present system, can make any better showing on their side of the ledger. It has been a case of ruinous expenditures all around, and the time for a halt has arrived.

The movements now under way mean the laying of solid foundations for the business and the safeguarding of its welfare during the trying times that are upon us and for the years that are to come.

Chicago Film Brevities.

C. A. Ziebarth, secretary and production manager of the Bell & Howell Co., returned from an eighteen-day trip last week, during which he visited Washington, D. C., New York and Detroit in the interests of the company. In Washington he installed a laboratory equipment for the Committee of Public Information, in the Agricultural building. Mr. Ziebarth also visited the Signal Corps, which will shortly install a laboratory equipment in a new building that will soon be under way, under the supervision of Capt. Theodore Williams, who has charge of the moving picture department of the Signal Corps service. In New York, Mr. Ziebarth visited all the plants which have installed the Bell & Howell equipment and was accompanied on his rounds by Don Bell, New York manager, who also accompanied Mr. Ziebarth to Washington, D. C. In Detroit Mr. Ziebarth installed a printing machine in the Ford laboratories. He spoke highly of the private plant conducted by the Ford Company.

Dan L. Martin, who has been traveling manager for one of the "Intolerance" shows for nearly two seasons, has been appointed district manager for the Allen Film Corporation in the States of Ohio and Indiana, in the booking of "The Warrior." Maciste, the giant slave of "Cabiria," is starred in this strong, seven-reel feature.

A private presentation of "The Eternal Temptress" (Paramount), in which Mme. Lina Cavalieri appears in the title role, was given that lady and her friends at the Ziegfeld theater, Thursday noon, Dec. 27. This feature will be the leading number on a special New Year's Eve program, given in the same theater Monday night at 10.30 p. m. The regular weekly program for the Ziegfeld during the week beginning Sunday, Dec. 30, will be headed by the "Seven Swans" (Paramount), with dainty Marguerite Clark in the lead.

The "best-ending" contest of the "Mystery Ship," the Universal serial now running in Chicago picture houses, will end March 1, 1918. The contest in which only children of fifteen years old and under are permitted to compete throughout the country, is very spirited and the interest keeps growing. Prizes amounting to $1,000 will be distributed in Liberty Bonds, war savings certificates and thrift stamps to 388 boys and girls. The judges are: Bide Dudley, New York World; Louella O. Parsons, Chicago Herald; Harriet Underhill, New York Tribune, and T. E. Oliphant, New York Evening Mail.

The staff of Bluebird's Chicago office will celebrate the second anniversary of its opening Jan. 14. On the same date, "Face Value," with Mae Murray, will be released to Chicago exhibitors. Mme. Sarah Bernhardt started the Bluebird series on Jan. 24, 1916, with "Jeanne Dore" and since that time Bluebird has released one hundred and four features at the rate of one every week.

About 12,000 Chicago soldiers, all from Camp Grant, Rockford, Ill., came home for Christmas, and legitimate houses as well as picture theaters opened their doors wide to entertain them. It is needless to state that few vacant seats could be found during their stay.

The popular Pathe serial star, Pearl White, had the signal honor bestowed on her recently, of being selected by the officers and men of the United States Marine Corps, from all the actresses on the stage and screen, to send them a message of Christmas cheer. One of the men of the Marine Corps, in explaining his vote, paid Miss White the following compliment: "We all like Pearl White and we all voted for her, because she can do 'stunts' that would stump the best of us, and she comes up smiling every time. She has plenty of 'pep,' isn't afraid of anything, and is one of the prettiest girls to be seen anywhere."

The owners of several moving picture theaters in Chicago omitted to observe "lightless night" Sunday, Dec. 23. They were warned the following day by Fuel Administrator Williams that one more violation of the rule would lead to cold theaters in every case, as the supply of coal would be cut off.

The regular meeting of the M. P. T. O. Association was held Friday, Dec. 21, at headquarters, when the nomination of candidates for office during the coming year was made. The nominations were as follows: For president, E. Thomas Beatty; for vice-president, Geo. Henry and Aug. Zilligen, Jr.; for treasurer, Louis H. Frank and H. A. Gundling; for secretary, A. Powell and M. A. Choymski; for financial secretary, Miss Anna Kesner, and for sergeant-at-arms, Aug. Zilligen, Jr. The following were nominated for membership on the executive committee: Max Jesselson, H. J. Corbett, August Krug, W. J. Mulligan, Jacob Krueger, M. A. Choymski, H. A. Gundling and Aug. Zilligen, Jr. The next regular meeting of the association will be held Friday, Jan. 4, when the election of officers will take place.

The Marshfield Amusement Company, this city, opened its sixth theater, the Marshall Square, Marshall boulevard and 22d street, Saturday night, Dec. 22. This theater has a seating capacity of 2,000 and its cost, with the surrounding building included, was $325,000. The opening program consisted of "His Mother's Boy," "The International Sneak" and a Universal Weekly. Music was provided by a ten-piece orchestra and an organ. Miss Ruth Holdt also rendered vocal solos. The crowd was much larger than expected during the holiday time. The Marshfield Amusement Company also owns the Orpheus, at 12th and Ashland, the Marshfield, at 12th and Paulina, the Illington, 22nd and Leavitt, the Broadway-Strand, at 12th and Marshfield, and the Grand at 12th and Winchester. A new theater on the extreme South Side will soon be erected by the company, which will vie with the finest houses in America. Its seating capacity will be 2,800, and the cost of the entire structure, including offices in addition, will run from $400,000 to $500,000. John Gallagher is manager of the Marshall Square and the programs are selected from the open market.

The last scenes of "The Rowdy," the Selig-Polyscope Company's latest feature, were taken one day last week by Director Harry Beaumont. In the cast are Hazel Daly, who appears in the title role, Harry Hilliard and Sidney Ainsworth. This Selig production is said to have a delightful story, with a strong heart appeal and numerous humorous touches.

Tom Santschi has stirred the patriotism of the lady players on the Selig's Los Angeles staff by offering to furnish the wool for any of them who will volunteer to knit sweaters, stockings and other comforts of that ilk. Tom proudly tells the girls that they can't fool him about knitting, as he learned the art when a child from his thrifty Swiss mother.

"Little Orphant Annie," adapted from James Whitcomb Riley's poem "Annie," was recently finished at Selig's Los Angeles studios and the negatives arrived at the Chicago plant last week. All who have read James Whitcomb Riley's poems cannot forget his imitable "Annie," from which the story of the Selig feature has been adapted. This should prove one of the most feel[illegible] subjects [illegible] screened

Wm. N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Co., recently received a letter from T. A. Smethurst, owner of the Palace, Blackpool, London, from which the following excerpts have been taken: "To me, personally, 'The Crisis' was a beautiful production, portraying as it did so faithfully and well the love and sincerity of the two old friends. Again, what a fine rendering of President Lincoln. You ask for guidance as to what class of subjects you should recommend America to send here. Gentlemen, the producers of 'The Crisis' and 'The Garden of Allah' are not in much need of advice from anyone. Keep on supplying subjects which portray the best and most artistic of all that is noble and uplifting, and you must remain, where to my mind you have always stood, in the very foremost rank. The sublime peacefulness which your 'Garden of Allah' conveys, is beyond description. I hope I shall be fortunate enough to secure it."

Business at Chicago moving picture theaters during Christmas week, as a rule, was better than for the corresponding period last year, judging from the reports from several Chicago theater owners. At the Lubliner & Trinz theaters, business has been very much better than for the same time in previous years and it far exceeded business for the five or six weeks previous to Christmas. The regular style of programs only were given. Ascher Bros. report that milder weather, "Go-to-Movie-Week" publicity and the lull after the holiday rush have all helped to swell the results on their chain of theaters in the city. Last year's record, however, was not broken. The programs used for Christmas week were of the general standard. Complaint of poor business for the preceding month was made by the Ascher Bros. The big Central Park theater, at Twelfth street and Central Park avenue, showed an increase in receipts for "Go-to-Movie-Week," Sam Kats informed this office. Mr. Katz is of the opinion that while Bob Reel's campaign might not have swelled business much, it certainly didn't do any harm. The receipts in other theaters run under the management of the Central Park theater did not come up to last year.

The following letter was received from E. C. Bostick, manager of the Merrill Theater, Milwaukee, last week, by W. H. Jenner, manager of the Chicago office of the George Kleine system: "Just got through screening "Brown of Harvard" and want to say that in my opinion you have a one hundred per cent. picture, and no doubt the bookings you will receive will verify this statement. Kindly set it in for the Merrill for the week of January 27." "Brown of Harvard" is Selig's fine six-reel feature, which will be released through the George Kleine system on January 10. The demand for this striking picture is extraordinary.

SCREEN CLUB HAS CHRISTMAS TREE.

The Screen Club held a Christmas celebration at the club house, Saturday evening, December 22, at which about one hundred members and guests were present. A large tree stood in the alcove at the end of the reception room and humorously appropriate presents were distributed by Santa Claus William H. "Silent Bill" Haddock. When this portion of the program had been completed and the hearts of all made glad by receiving a toy from the tree members and guests descended to the dining room and were served with a substantial hot lunch. The evening wound up with a concert of old favorites in which everyone joined. Jack Harvey, the chairman of the committee in charge of the celebration, covered himself with glory and received the hearty congratulations of everyone present.

Additional Details of Campbell Tragedy.

THE news of the death in an automobile accident of Eric Campbell, the popular member of the Chaplin Company, was printed in last week's issue of the Moving Picture World. Later word is to the effect that Miss Gene Crosby, one of the three in the big Campbell car, was not injured so seriously as was at first feared. She suffered a sprained arm and other slight injuries. Harold Schneider, scenario and magazine writer, was the third occupant of the Campbell machine. Schneider's hurts were of a minor character. W. A. Hollenbeck, driver of the lighter car into which Campbell's machine crashed, also was badly injured. One of his legs was broken and his head was considerably scratched.

Eric Campbell in the Final Scene of "The Adventurer," the Last Mutual-Chaplin in which the Big Comedian Appeared.

Campbell, who lived at the Los Angeles Athletic Club, left a daughter, Eunice, who attends a Los Angeles school. It is said that Mrs. Campbell, who lives in San Francisco, had sued for separate maintenance, but that a reconciliation had been effected.

Los Angeles Mayor Pushing Consorship.

Revival of the censorship of motion pictures under a film commission has again been indicated by Mayor Woodman, who said he believed the censoring of motion pictures is needed in Los Angeles, and that he probably would make an appointment to fill the position of film commissioner, under an ordinance that has been prepared by City Prosecutor Widney.

The prosecutor has the ordinance in his possession, but will not forward it to the council until it has been approved by the mayor. It revises the present ordinance creating a film commissioner, which never has been appointed.

"I have received many complaints in regard to objectionable moving pictures, two of them this week, in fact, and from what I can gather conditions could be much improved by an intelligent supervisor of the films and their licensing by the city before they are permitted to be shown," said Mayor Woodman.

Activity at the Ince Studios.

The trio of studios under the Thomas H. Ince management and direction—the W. S. Hart, Charles Ray Edendale and main studio at Pico and Georgia streets—are all working overtime on important productions for Paramount and Artcraft.

Enid Bennett's first Paramount picture, "The Keys of the Righteous," is completed. Miss Bennett is supported by George Nichols, Joseph Swickard, Charles Formes, Earl Rodney, Gertrude Claire and Lydia Knott. The subject was directed by Jerome Storm.

Enid Bennett.

Dorothy Dalton, with R. William Neill in command, is well under way with the first story C. Gardner Sullivan has written for her. She is supported by Melbourne MacDowell, Jack Holt, Robert McKim, Dorcas Matthews, and William Conklin. The story is "Love Me."

William S. Hart is almost through with his new Artcraft offering with the Canadian northwest as its locale. The star and his company went to Mount Wilson to film snow scenes. This is the first picture Hart has ever had that has no heroine. The only woman in the story that approaches being a heroine is an old lady—an Englishwoman—who comes to the northwest lumber camp in search of her son, only to find him dead on her arrival. The role is played by Gertrude Claire. The story is by J. G. Hawks.

Victor L. Schertzinger is directing Charles Ray in the screen version of "His Own Home Town," from the magazine story by Larry Evans.

Goldstein Denies Charge of Espionage.

Robert Goldstein, indicted by the Federal grand jury on the charge of violating the Espionage Act, in exhibiting the moving picture "The Spirit of '76," is apparently having trouble to secure legal defense as well as bondsmen. If there is to be any reduction of the $10,000 bond required for the appearance of Goldstein, this duty will devolve upon United States District Judge Bledsoe, upon his return from San Francisco, Monday, December 24.

This was plainly indicated December 18, when Judge Trippet was apprised by Earl Rogers, of counsel for the defense, that such a motion would be made. All efforts to raise the required bond have failed.

In presenting a demurrer to the indictment, which was overruled by Judge Trippet, Mr. Rogers stated that, in his opinion, Goldstein is entitled to the services of an attorney, if it could be shown that he in justice ought to be defended. Goldstein has lived in California all his life, Mr. Rogers stated, and an investigation had led him to believe that there is no suspicion of pro-Germanism attached to his activities.

The attorney stated that he only sought to protect the rights of his client by filing the demurrer, and admitted that there are no precedents governing the case.

Goldstein then pleaded not guilty to each count of the indictment, and the case will go on the calendar for setting in January.

It is understood that quite a fund has been raised for the defense of Goldstein. When he was examined by Judge Bledsoe on the motion to have the films of "The Spirit of '76" returned to him after they had been seized at Clune's Auditorium, Goldstein declared that he was unable to raise a dollar. On the first day the case came up before Judge Trippet, his attorney stated it was not a question of money to secure his services, that had been cared for, and the only thing that caused him to further investigate the employment was whether or not Goldstein had been engaged in a pro-German propaganda.

Fairbanks Rodeo to Be Elaborate Affair.

The Douglas Fairbanks Red Cross Rodeo, to be held at Washington Park on January 12, promises to be an elaborate affair. Dark Cloud, Sioux Indian chief, will take part in an Indian war dance. A Mexican raid will be another feature, in which fifty Mexicans will supply the thrills. Toto, the Hippodrome clown who now appears in Rolin films, has also promised to appear. Charlie Murray has volunteered his services as ringmaster. "Doug" himself will ride a bucking broncho, and he has picked a live one. If "Doug" sticks on this bronch for more than two minutes he will be hailed a champion.

A unique advertising stunt is being conducted for the rodeo, that of a stage coach crowded with cowboys parading Broadway distributing handbills, announcing the date, place, and time of the Fairbanks show.

All the Broadway picture theaters are running slides and the city is almost covered with window cards, photographs and one, three, and twenty-four sheets. A large banner is being prepared to stretch across the Fifth street corner at Broadway.

A majority of the boxes have been sold at apremium, and it is expected that "Doug's" slogan of "$10,000 or bust" won't hold good, because from present indications it will be a $15,000 house.

A special section has been engaged by Mary Pickford to be occupied by 165 children from the Los Angeles orphanage.

Quinn to Build Another Theater on Broadway.

J. A. Quinn, who owns and operates Quinn's Rialto Theater, at 812 South Broadway, informs us that he has closed a deal for a new motion picture house on Broadway. Mr. Quinn has secured a long time lease on the property directly adjoining the Rialto and will here build a first-class motion picture theater. The two houses will be only a few feet apart and the new house will be built along the same lines as the Rialto, and have the same seating capacity.

Mr. Quinn also says he will soon close other local deals, which will give him seven modern first-run theaters in this city. He is also negotiating for a valuable theater location in San Francisco, and his intention is gradually to join the principal cities in California, Arizona and the rest of the country with a complete chain of motion picture theaters. These theaters will compose the Quinn Circuit and will be conducted along the plans laid out by Mr. Quinn in an interview printed in this paper a few weeks ago.

Elaborate Theater for San Pedro.

N. O. Anderson is planning a $75,000 hotel and theater building at San Pedro, to be erected on Palos Verdes street, with a theater lobby and entrance from Sixth street. The lease for the theater has already been signed by Ray Pierson and F. O. Adler, who have purchased the store room of O. B. Sadler on Sixth street for $22,500, for the entrance. The sale was made on a basis of $600 per front foot, the property being 25 by 75 feet and improved, with a one-story brick building.

The theater at the rear on Mr. Anderson's property fronting on Palos Verdes street will be 57 by 125 feet and will seat about 1,000 persons. On the remaining portion of his property, and over the theatre, Mr. Anderson plans to erect a four-story hotel. The property has a frontage of 87 feet on Palos Verdes and is 160 feet deep. This will give room for stores on the Palos Verdes street frontage 35 feet in depth.

What's Doing at Triangle-Keystone Studios.

Comedy production is skimming along at a rapid rate since the Triangle-Keystone forces have become accustomed to their new quarters at the Triangle Culver City studios and the four companies making two-reel Keystone comedies have productions well under way, two of them already near completion.

Charles Avery, the speed demon of comedy directors, who is making one-reel Triangle Komedies, has already completed one story and has started on another since moving to the new "lot." Reggie Morris is "shooting" exterior scenes for "Did She Do Wrong?" which will feature Harry Gribban. Director William Beaudine's laundry story is nearing completion and has been titled "The Tell-Tale Shirt." Harry Edwards is doing a story which will feature Ray Griffith and which has been titled "His Double Life." Director Herman Raymaker has completed his ship story, which has been titled "A Sea Serpent's Desire," and has started production on "A Lady Killer's Doom."

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

B. A. Rolfe, general manager of the Metro Western studios, departed for New York on Tuesday, December 18, carrying with him the latest Edith Storey and Viola Dana productions. Mr. Rolfe is expected to return to Los Angeles within a short time.

At the Culver City studios of the Triangle Film Corporation, two five-reel productions have been completed during the past week, one new subject has been started, four other pictures are in various stages of production and four directors are waiting for new stories. The pictures just completed are, "Heiress for a Day," featuring Olive Thomas, and "Captain of His Soul," with a cast including William Desmond, Charles Gunn and Jack Richardson.

Victor L. Schertzinger made a new record for speed when he completed Charles Ray's latest Ince production, "His Own Home Town," in ten days. There were several times when the Ray company was summoned for night work, but Schertzinger points with no little pride to his ten-day achievement. Ray has a new leading woman in this picture, Katherine MacDonald, a sister of Mary MacDonald MacLaren.

Director Edward Sloman has completed the final of a series of six William Russell feature productions, produced under the working title of "Detective Dan Cupid." The story is by Charles Turner Dazey, who also wrote "The Sea Master" and "New York Luck," recent Russell releases. Francelia Billington appears in the leading feminine role.

Director Cliff Smith, maker of Triangle western thrillers featuring the cowboy star, Roy Stewart, is more than half through with his latest offering, "Keith of the Border," from Randall Parrish's novel by the same name. A feature of this picture will be a fight between Roy Stewart and Pete Morrison, both powerful men, engaged in a hand-to-hand battle until both fall from exhaustion. Director Smith, who is an authority on rough and tumble fights, declares the one put on by Stewart and Morrison is one of the most tense he has ever seen.

Douglas Fairbanks has disappeared! When last seen he was headed for Texas with Allan Dwan and a fairly well-developed scenario. The supposition is that the next Fairbanks vehicle will be a straight shootin' story of the land of cactus, where romance gets an early start in the morning. The picture will be directed by Art Rosson, who has been assisting Allan Dwan in the staging of recent Fairbanks productions. As a reward for his loyalty and in recognition of his ability, he was promoted to a directorship.

With the completion of E. Mason Hopper's latest Triangle picture, "Her American Husband," the director and a number of friends were the guests of honor at a Japanese banquet, given by the Japanese actors included in the cast. The hosts were Tom Kurihara, Jack Abbe and Misso Seki. The banquet was held at a Japanese cafe and more than a score were present. Entertainment was furnished by four Japanese children who did native dances. Instead of chairs, all squatted around the tables on mats, in true Japanese fashion, and chopsticks were used instead of knives and forks.

One of the principal numbers on the program given at Shrine Auditorium the Saturday night before Christmas in connection with the Christmas-tree party given more than four thousand needy children was produced by Mae Murray and two tots. Miss Murray was formerly with Ziegfeld's follies, and for several weeks she had been teaching the two children a dance. The Shrine Christmas Committee was in charge of the affair. Motley Flint was chairman and James W. Jump was his chief assistant. Other performers were Franklyn Farnum, Dorothy Phillips, Jack Wells, Harrison Brockbank and the Al Malaikah band and the Al Malaikah chanters.

Waldo Walker, assistant Lasky director, has enlisted in the Aviation Corps. Mr. Walker, who is above the draft age, early volunteered his services.

Eddie Gribbon, Triangle-Keystone comedian and brother of the famous "Silk Hat" Harry Gribbon, has joined the submarine division of the Navy. He will have charge of the athletics in his division when not routing the Germans. "Tex" Jordan, of the Keystone Cops, also has enlisted in the Navy and was on the lot recently in uniform, saluting his friends and fellow-players.

At the Fox Studios Tom Mix has started a Western feature. The scenario was written by Bernard McConville and the picture is directed by S. A. Franklin. In the cast with Mix will be Sam DeGrasse, Charles Stevens, Enid Markey, George Stone, Virginia Corbin, and Violet Radcliffe. Jewel Carmen and her company, under the direction of C. M. Franklin, are now in the land of the deep snows, where the greater part of her picture is to be created.

Gladys Brockwell is well started on her latest production. In the cast with her are Colin Chase, Bertram Grassby, G. Raymond Nye, and Kosita Marstini.

Charles J. Brabin, director for Metro, is on his way to Los Angeles. He will alternate with John Collins in directing for Viola Dana.

Mrs. Margerite Raub, a trained nurse, has been placed in charge of the Emergency Hospital at the Culver City studios of the Triangle. She is working under the direction of Dr. Charles F. Nelson.

LANG RETURNS TO NEW YORK.

Captain Arthur J. Lang, export manager of the Nicholas Power Company, returned to New York the other day from Mexico, where he went on business. He sold a number of Cameragraphs and established an agency. At some time in the near future the captain will talk on film conditions in the neighboring republic. The most remarkable thing about Capt. Lang's return is that he has fallen into the Mexican habit of eschewing politics. He talks freely on business conditions down there, but when either politics or cactus oushes are mentioned he becomes as taciturn as an Egyptian mummy. All of his friends in the motion picture industry are glad he is back again.

Metro to Enlarge Coast Studios

Adopts Extensive Production Plans Requiring Larger Facilities—Rolfe Enthusiastic.

B. A. ROLFE, western representative of the Metro Pictures Corporation, made a hurried trip to New York last week to attend a production conference of Metro officials concerning Metro's plans to expand its present work on the coast. Mr. Rolfe has obtained such excellent results with his production work since the company established itself in its new Hollywood studios that Metro has decided to enlarge its plant on a scale that will not only accommodate its present stars and their companies at the same time, but others that are expected to begin work there soon. Plans for the numerous improvements and alterations were decided upon before Mr. Rolfe's departure in order to enable him to put them into effect immediately upon his return to Los Angeles. That no time might be lost on the work, Mr. Rolfe left for the west two days after his arrival in New York, imposing upon himself the hardship of spending his Christmas on the trains.

The confidence of Metro's other heads in their new undertaking was greatly strengthened by Mr. Rolfe's enthusiastic report of his production work the last two months. He expressed the conviction that Los Angeles and its surroundings surpasses all other places as a production field, and that Metro pictures would in no way suffer from production in such ideal environs. He exemplified this by a showing of Viola Dana's "The Winding Trail" and Edith Storey's "The Legion of Death," which is to be a Metro production de luxe, which he brought with him from the coast.

"Our plans to enlarge our present studio and put Metro on a permanent basis on the coast include the construction of convertible stages—either open air or inclosed, the enlargement by many feet of our floor space and the equipment of the plant with every known facility for the making of pictures. For instance, an entirely new lighting equipment is to be installed, the first appropriation in this direction being $25,000. Our stages will be enclosed in glass, the advantages in this being obvious. Our laboratory is to be entirely overhauled and supplied with every modern device for perfecting of pictures and conducting experiments along original lines for new improvements in this department. California was combed for a staff of experts to handle the negative and positive film, and we believe we have the best in the game.

"Actual production work had been started on the new Storey and Dana pictures when I left the west. While these productions are in the making, the studios will be enlarged according to our adopted plans and put in readiness for the reception of several other Metro companies that are to begin work on the coast as soon as feasible."

Hauck Appointed Receiver for Pinkiert

New York Exhibitor Is Bankrupt—Wall Street Dealings and Cards Contributed to Trouble, He Admits.

PETER PINKIERT, who formerly operated a motion picture theater at 555 Eighth avenue, was petitioned into bankruptcy on December 27 by Weil & Purvin representing creditors, and Judge Manton in the United States District Court appointed Charles A. Hauck receiver of his assets.

The former exhibitor sold his theater last February, and since that time has been having bad luck. His house furnishing goods store at 767 Amsterdam avenue proved unprofitable and speculations in Wall street and gambling at cards failed to recoup his lost fortune, he confesses in affidavits on file in court.

Examined in supplementary proceedings Pinkiert testified that he speculated extensively in Amalgamated Copper in July and August, and while he recalled that he lost heavily he was unable to recall the name of his broker or the buying and selling prices of the stock which he speculated in.

Pinkiert apparently is not an adept at cards, as he confessed that he had lost about $1,800 playing sociable games of pinochle and poker at his home at 170 West Ninety-seventh street. He added the limit was $1 in the poker games and that they played as high as one dollar a hundred in the pinochle games.

"Quite a high limit for a modest operator" remarked the examining counsel, who ventured the opinion that the debtor would do well to stop gambling and speculating and devote his energies to the moving picture industry or some other legitimate business enterprise in the future.

Grants Performing Rights With the Music

How a Prominent Publisher Stands on the Music Tax Controversy.

AS a matter of information to those exhibitors who are in doubt as to their rights in regard to the use of music composed by members of the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers when such music is offered tax free by publishers holding copyright on it, we publish below a communication just received from G. Schirmer (Inc.). The communication is comprehensive and self-explanatory.

3 East 43d street, New York,
December 20, 1917.

Moving Picture World,
New York City.

Gentlemen: We do not in the least hesitate to explain to you our attitude in the matter of meeting the demands of the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers with reference to its exacting fees for the right of publicity performing musical compositions. Fully cognizant of the fact that, by virtue of the decision of Supreme Court Justice Hand, the society is within its rights in exacting performing fees for works under its jurisdiction either in relating to author, composer or publisher, we nevertheless, not being members of the society, are free to follow our own views and intuitions. For reasons too numerous to account, we deem it wiser to grant free license to the performance of any of our publications. This policy we have purchased from the start and it is our intention to continue it. Through our action we do not renounce sole proprietorship of our rights to dispose of performing privileges. We maintain, on the other hand, that we grant performing rights with the purchase of the music.

The question that seems to have caused most anxiety among musicians is whether compositions by an author, a member of the society, and published by a firm, a non-member of the society, may be considered exempt from taxation. On this point our views and those of the society conflict. Under the Copyright Law the performing rights belong to the publisher and not to the composer except when the latter has specifically reserved them for himself. There are few instances on record when a composer has done so. In our own immense catalog of publications we have but one or two exemptions. These we withdraw from the classification of non-taxable music. The balance of our publications we consider absolutely within our own control, irrespective of the fact that composers or authors may be members of the society.

What we have said so far covers the situation in a general way, but speaking of it in even a stricter sense, we do not hesitate to say further that it is our opinion, and which opinion is supported by legal counsel, that all music is practically free to be played in public which was published at least one day prior to the date when the first legal action was begun, which eventually led to the handing down of the decision by Supreme Court Justice Hand, thus establishing a foundation for the recognition of the demands of the society.

Yours very truly,

G. SCHIRMER (INC),
D. Kamb.

Abrams Visits Old Home Town

Paramount Official Tells Former Neighbors Government Expects to Get $280,000,000 from Screen This Year.

HIRAM ABRAMS, of Paramount, visited Portland last week at the psychological moment when the Chamber of Commerce was agitating the plan of closing the theaters on account of the coal shortage. Mr. Abrams didn't want to butt into local affairs, and preferred not to make any comment on the situation, but he did remark that he didn't believe the United States could well afford to close the theatres on account of the tremendous revenue received from this source.

This brought out some of the astounding facts and figures in regard to the money paid into the Federal Treasury by moving picture houses throughout the country.

"The United States Government expects to clear $280,000,000 revenue from the moving picture interest this year," said Mr. Abrams. "There is three-fourths of a cent war tax on every foot of film used in this country for the making of photo plays. The Eastman Kodak company, which manufactures this film, collects it on their bill for the raw material to the producers. The Paramount company alone pays the Government $15,000 a week in war tax on the film it uses."

"I am not joking when I say that the movies will help to win the war," continued Mr. Abrams. "It is the constant argument of all the people who are working for the betterment and high standard of morale for our soldiers that the men in the trenches must have amusement and recreation. There is no doubt that the most popular form of amusement among the boys is the moving picture. It is the form of amusement that includes good humor, and optimistic spirit in the men, which means high morale. The movies more than any other thing divert the minds of soldiers from their depressing environment."

In speaking of the moving pictures as connected with the world war, Mr. Abrams incidentally remarked that the United States has taken over the moving picture business of the Allies and is even now making official films for Great Britain. Three manufacturers in America already have been appointed by the Federal Government for motion picture work.

Asked whether many of the screen stars had been drafted for the army service Mr. Abrams replied in the negative, and this inspired another comment: "It would be really a mistake to take such men as 'Fatty' Arbuckle and Charlie Chaplin for the trenches," he observed. "Both these men can do much more good just where they are. They would be ordinary men in fighting the Germans, no better than thousands of others who would be drafted right beside them, but as movie actors these two comedians amuse thousands of soldiers in the pictures shown both on this side and at the war front, and as I have said about the moving picture in general are part of the scheme of diversion that helps maintain the morale of the fighters in the trenches."

Mr. Abrams told of his first plunge into the theatrical and moving picture business. "I was working in the Steinert music store on Congress street about eight years ago," he said, "when I got my first peek into the business that has since developed into such a monster industry. At that time the illustrated song was the rage of the vaudeville stage. The Steinert company secured scores of these slides for songs, and leased them to local theaters for $5 each. This set me to thinking. I knew these slides didn't cost but a very small amount to make. I went to New York one day and purchased 500 of them at $2 each. Then I returned and began to lease them to theaters myself. My first illustrated song slides were shown in the old Portland theater, and this was my start in the moving picture business."

Mr. Abrams did not jump directly from his illustrated song venture into the photoplay business, however. His second venture was as owner or part owner of a chain of theaters throughout the New England States and finally the old Portland theater was torn down to make room for the present Fidelity building, and the New Portland theater was built for Mr. Abrams and his partner, Mr. Greene.

Mr. Abrams soon established a big business throughout Northern New England as agent and promoter of films. Two years ago he was elected president of Paramount.

Walsh Talks About Casting

New Fox Director Says There Must Be Acting Ability as Well as Fidelity to Type.

ABSOLUTE accuracy in casting," said R. A. Walsh, newest of Goldwyn directors, when asked to define the forces which enter into his film productions. "I do not choose players only for their fidelity to the part as I see it, but for their ability to project the character as I know it." The success of Walsh as a director both powerful and subtle can easily be traced to this element in his work—that of using actors who can not only look the part, but act it.

"It is not easy to discover the combination, but with patience it can be done. Too often I have interviewed candidates for a part—scores of them for the same role—and found no lack of perfect types. Rarely, however, do I succeed in finding at first hand the player who acts as well, even though each applicant assures me that such gifts are his.

"And with experience in picking the right people a director acquires a certain psychic quality. This enables him to sense the acting ability of an applicant even before he sees it. It eliminates costly, time-wasting tests and tryouts. He can interview the greatest number of people in the shortest time and altogether the process is made an agreeable one.

"It is not always possible, of course, to spend the time necessary to bring out this latent ability to act. The demands on a director are many and pressing. He cannot afford, except in rare cases, to give a novice first lessons in acting; he must have a groundwork of experience, just as an artist must have his certain colors, to work with. Then the director can build up the character as he understands it."

PROGRESS MAKING ON EXPOSITION.

Various exhibitors' organizations connected with the motion picture industry and their locals in a number of cities in eastern states plan to convene at the Motion Picture Exposition in Grand Central Palace during the week of February 2 to 10, which will be held under the auspices of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. Associations in the States of New York, New Jersey and all of the New England States will be represented, while those west of New York will be represented to no small degree.

Despite the usual holiday rush in the motion picture industry considerable progress has been made during the past week in securing new exhibitors for the exposition. Eleven more concerns were added to the already large lists of exhibitors who have contracted for space and many more will be closed by January 1, as many of the communications addressed to Manager Frederick H. Elliott state.

GARFIELD SAYS LIGHTLESS NIGHTS SAVE COAL.

United States Fuel Administrator Harry A. Garfield, testifying before the Senate subcommittee of the committee on manufactures, last week stated that the order for limitation of electric signs and all outdoor lighting made effective for two nights in the week (Thursdays and Sundays) should save between 150,000 and 200,000 tons of coal. There is a shortage this year of about 50,000,000 tons of bituminous coal, additional to which there is a shortage in anthracite coal. The former is required very largely by munitions plants and factories; the latter is used by the householders and by some of the public utilities.

Foreign Trade News

Deplorable Export Conditions

Illicit Trading in Copies of American Productions Brings Protest—Great Need for Control and Regulation of Positives.

New York, December 18, 1917.

MovingPicture World, New York.

Gentlemen: I suggest that you give space in your columns to the following warning:

TO ALL PRODUCERS:

Under date of July 5, 1917, I acquired the exclusive rights for the moving picture "Her Fighting Chance" for Argentina, Uruguay and Paraguay. Under date of September 1, 1917, I sold the exclusive rights for the exploitation of this film in Argentina, Uruguay and Paraguay to Max Glucksmann.

Jacobo Glucksmann, manager of the New York office of Max Glucksmann, shows me a cablegram from his Buenos Aires office stating that this picture has been exhibited in the Argentine by one of the local exchanges which has been making a practice of continually introducing into their territory pictures to which they have no rights.

I am informed, further, on good authority, that the buying representative of the concern in question in New York has offered for sale prints of Selznick films coming through questionable channels.

I am placing this matter directly before you, not doubting that you fully appreciate the value of this matter to the trade in general, and will consequently give it the necessary publicity.

These illegitimate transactions cast a stigma on the trade in general, and especially on the export market, and I am sure you will spare no effort, in conjunction with every respectable concern in the trade, to keep the moving picture export field as clean as any reputable business should be.

Very respectfully yours,
(Signed) José Manuel de Aragón.

This is a representative case. Their frequency during the past year is actually threatening the whole export business of films. It would be difficult to estimate the actual loss suffered by the manufacturers through this practice. The fact that some of the smaller Latin-American markets are not placing any orders for new copies direct with the producers is not due solely to the activities of the New York exporters doing a legitimate business in pictures. Much of the American film shown in those markets cannot be accounted for, but there seems to be no doubt of it being obtained in this country.

If no means are devised to put a stop to this illicit traffic, an intolerable state of affairs is bound to develop. A powerful concern like Glucksmann, of Buenos Aires, may be able to stand for some time this underground competition, but the small buyers—and there are hundreds in the Spanish and Portuguese-speaking world—will either be driven away from New York, or, if compelled to buy here while the war lasts, will make their purchases from the dealer offering the greatest inducements in the way of prices. Why should they cool their heels for days and weeks in the outer office of a film company, to pay two or three thousand dollars for the privilege of exploiting a feature, when there is every possibility that a competitor may be buying as many copies as he likes of the same subject at five or six cents a foot or even less?

The large foreign exchanges are in a different position, of course. Their capital, international standing and the amount of their purchases give them the right to impose certain protective clauses in the contracts, clauses which have meant, to our knowledge, the loss of quite a few thousand dollars to some of our producers with hazy ideas on the whereabouts of a majority of their positive prints. And if the manufacturers have no effective control over their production they cannot expect the foreign exchanges, even the most important ones, to buy from them and not from illicit traders who sell the same article fifty per cent. cheaper.

The large foreign exchanges can defend themselves; the small buyer cannot. If the producer here is not familiar with export, the foreign exchange takes good care to protect itself and has the means to do it. The small buyer always pays for whatever blunders the producer may make.

A buyer from Cuba, for instance, pays a heavy royalty on a special picture and advertises it thoroughly in the local press. He is just about to show it when somebody else comes along with another copy, releases it the day before and reaps the benefit of his investment and propaganda. Now, when things of this kind happen—and they are happening frequently—the attitude assumed by some producers borders on the outrageous. In nine cases out of ten, the man who had the misfortune to secure the picture by legal means gets neither sympathy nor redress and very often finds himself an object of distrust. Instead of being reimbursed for the loss or compensated in some other way, he will have to listen to the ravings of the producer against the laws of Cuba and can consider himself lucky if he is not told that he is trying to "put something over."

European middlemen have a great deal to answer for in this connection, and it is notorious that the trade in "contraband" film has thrived for years in some of the markets of Europe. The Latin-Americans are not angels, either. However, before trying to regulate our film trade in foreign countries it is absolutely necessary to dominate the situation at the source of supply—right here. It would be foolish to attempt to regulate abroad without proper control at home.

Instead of blaming the foreigner, our manufacturers should ask themselves the following questions when cases of this nature are brought to their notice:

Could these fraudulent copies be shown in Latin-America if they had not been bought in New York?

Is there any efficient way of checking up the copies in the local exchanges?

Has anything been done to prevent the state rights buyers from selling their pictures to some broker in New York for export after exploiting their own territory?

Has any concerted action been taken against the thefts perpetrated daily and the duping that is again becoming an established branch of the industry?

Indian Notes

By S. B. Banerjea.

I WAS interested to read in one of your recent issues that a newly-started producing company had arranged to film Chinese comedies. China certainly offers a virgin field for exploitation purposes.

India also offers a fine field for exploitation. It will not do to produce "Indian pictures" in the U. S. A., or England, or Italy, or Denmark. Not one "Indian picture" which I have so far seen is free from defects of some sort or other. Certain pictures have actually annoyed people, and I have had to listen to bad language used against their producers. It will not do to employ any Indian—be he a student or a traveler or a merchant—who may be in the States, to advise upon the proper "rendering" of Indian scenes. Very few Indians who have been or are in the United States have traveled widely in their mother country. They are not familiar with the manners and customs of the different peoples. Most of them have not studied their country's history. So to employ an Indian, because he is an Indian, will be nothing short of foolishness. I have not said all this in disparagement of Indians, but I have simply given expression to hard, cold facts. Producers would do well not to take on any or every Indian on the strength of his color only.

There are certain subjects which may be filmed very profitably. The cost of their production will be high, but it will come back several times. Some time ago a well-known American producing company requested a famous Bengali actor, now dead, to produce a certain film. A decent salary, commission, and royalty were offered; but, for certain reasons, these were not accepted. One of the said films will not be less than 30,000 feet, will be full of incidents, and, being of a religious character, will appeal to India's millions. It will draw crowded houses wherever it will be shown. It will take about a year to produce, and the details will require careful attention. The total cost of production will not exceed $300,000. There is another religious work which also will yield a big revenue. For obvious reason I don't give the names of the two subjects referred to. I only indicate them to show that India offers a fine field for exploitation. There are, of course, many difficulties in the way of success; but, with the active co-operation of a successful Hindu director, these can be overcome. Will producers who are thinking of exploiting India please note my remarks?

A serious attempt is being made by certain Europeans to induce the Government to ban long serials, like "The Master Key," "The Shielding Shadow," etc. I hasten to add that the Indians are lovers of serials, and they will be sorry if they are deprived of a good treat. I confess the arguments of the anti-serialists are not convincing. If these hold good in the case of serials, they hold good in the case of every three, four, or more-part film. In other words, the cinema business will then have to be stopped. I think nobody outside Bedlam will propose a step which is bound to kill an important industry of such huge proportions as the cinema industry. I trust the Indian authorities will not listen to the outcry of the handful of European grumblers and give the Indians a cause to complain against their action.

During the Pujah holidays the Elphinstone Bioscope people exhibited a number of well-known films—like "Protea," "Tigomar," "Master Key," etc., in their several theaters in Calcutta to crowded houses.

The director of the Bijou Grand is to be thanked for introducing stars of the American film world to the Calcuttaites at frequent intervals. To him we owe the "Universal Screen Gazette," which is quite new to us. The idea is excellent, and is sure to receive a hearty welcome everywhere. During the long Pujah holidays he has exhibited several old favorites, and among his new films I may mention "The Devil's Bond Woman" and "A Child of Paris Streets," which deserve more than one visit.

The Bioscope theater authorities have of late been giving away Bengali plays, novels, etc., to their patrons. At Bombay certain theaters present watches, but the prizes are only two or three in number. But the Bioscope Theater people give presents to every ticket holder. Naturally the one rupee ticket holder gets a larger number of books than the four-anna patron. I am not surprised to see that the theater is always overcrowded. The non-Bengali patrons, of course, do not get any prizes; but I have seen some of them—including two or three Chinamen—asking for books, which, I must say, are given without any grumbling. The Bioscope Theater authorities show American films mainly. At frequent intervals, they screen old favorites, like "Trey o' Hearts," "Peg of the Ring," and so on.

The Presidency theater is the latest addition to the Calcutta cinema houses. It is a Bengali-owned theater. The opening performance was, I regret to say, disappointing. Some old films, already shown by Messrs. Ducasse, were exhibited.

Mr. Sathe of the Picture House has screened "The Rise of Susan," "Molly Bawn," "Coming Up Thro' the Rye," and several other well-known films. Of late he has been giving a special "children's performance" every Sunday morning at a uniform rate of admission. The films are carefully selected.

The Theater Royal authorities screen American films mainly. They give two changes weekly. They don't go in for lengthly serials. Their patrons, who are mainly Europeans, do not like them. I regret to say very few Indians patronize the T. R. Perhaps, if films of the "Master Key" type are screened, they will swamp it. At least, the T. R. authorities should, for once, screen a lengthy serial, like "The Lost Express," for instance, which has not yet been secured by any house in India. It will yield at least 300 per cent. profit. Why not try to secure Indian patronage, which no house can afford to ignore?

The Indians have become good judges of films. If you show films of your choice which are not to their liking you may rest assured you will not be patronized by them. The other day I went to a well-known theater—I shall not name it for obvious reasons—and found that about fifty persons only were present. The pictures were old and not good at all. I was not surprised that the attendance was so small.

Australian Notes

By Thomas S. Imrie.

PARAMOUNT HOUSE, the spacious premises which have been acquired by Feature Films, Ltd., at 302 Pitt street, Sydney, was officially opened by the Lord Mayor, Alderman Meagher, M. L. C., yesterday. The building is composed of four floors, in which all the firm's rapidly expanding business will be transacted.

The Lord Mayor in performing the function, said he was pleased to know that the firm was essentially an Australian institution. Every member of the staff with the exception of the managing director, Alec Lorimore, was an Australian.

Since the beginning of the year the organization had made phenomenal strides, and though hampered by the destruction of the fire-fiend, it had risen today, phoenix-like, from its ashes, with an irresistable driving power at its back in the person of the managing director. He understood that the firm was starting home industries here to manufacture electrical and other necessities for picture theaters, while arrangements have been made to have large quantities of lithographs printed, which have hitherto come from abroad.

After the official opening the guests were given a special screening in the new projection room of two coming Artcraft releases, "The Little American" and "Broadway Jones."

Another exchange which is expanding very rapidly is the Progressive Service, distributors of Mutual productions. The Sydney offices are being further increased this month by the addition of another floor of Photoplay House, while the staff is being added to. O. G. Sudholz, manager of the exchange, is at present in New Zealand arranging for a new branch to be opened in Wellington. When this is finally settled, it will complete the chain of exchanges throughout Australasia distributing Mutual films.

An indication of the growing favor bestowed on these productions by exhibitors here is the fact that the Piccadilly Theater, Sydney, has contracted to share the first release each week, making two city houses screening all first-run Mutuals.

John F. Gavin is taking the last scenes this week of his latest feature, "For the Term of Her Natural Life." Unseasonable weather for the past fortnight has delayed many outdoor scenes, but it is hoped that these will be completed within the next few days. The action of the film largely takes place outdoors, and so contains many fine scenic views. Mr. Gavin expects that the picture will be from 5,000 to 6,000 feet in length.

The Antipodes Film Company has completed a three-reel historical subject on the Burke and Willis Expedition of 1858-9. This picture, which is to be released next month, is to be entitled "Flirting With Death," and although of historical interest, has a powerful dramatic story running through it.

A press and trade screening of the two initial Goldwyn releases, "Polly of the Circus" and "Baby Mine," was given in the Sydney Theater Royal last Sunday night to a very enthusiastic audience. Very good press notices have been given to the productions. Natives of this city should be in a good position to judge, as the stage version was given here only a month ago.

Australasian Films, Ltd., announces that it has secured the Australian rights to Petrova Pictures, in addition to several big features, the names of which will be given later.

Fraser Films Ltd. are presenting two big features to the Australian public next month. One of these will go on at the Sydney Theater Royal, while the other will be screened at the Palace theater. The first is "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," which opens for a three-weeks' run on the 1st of December. The other is "Idle Wives," which will be the attraction at the Palace theater from the same date.

THOS. S. IMRIE.

Sydney, N. S. W., Australia, November 16, 1917.

POSITIVELY NO NEED FOR CHICAGO CENSOR BOARD.

There does not seem, according to the laws at the present time on the statute books, that there is any great necessity for the retention of the Chicago censor board. One of these laws, which can be found on Page 337 of the laws of the Fiftieth General Assembly, which have been recently published, reads as follows:

That any person who prepares, advertises, gives, presents or participates in any obscene or indecent drama, play, exhibition, show or entertainment, and every person aiding or abetting such act, and every owner or lessee or manager of any theater, moving picture house, garden, building, room, place or structure who leases or lets the same or permits the same to be used for the purpose of such drama play, exhibition, show or entertainment, or who assents to the use of the same for any such purpose, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction thereof, shall, for the first violation of this act, be subject to a fine of not less than $25 nor more than $200, or imprisonment in the county jail or house of correction for not to exceed one year, or both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court, and for each subsequent offense the defendant shall be subject to a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $500, or imprisonment in the county jail or house of correction for not to exceed one year, or both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

On Page 362 of the same compilation a second law is found which reads as follows:

It shall be unlawful for any person, firm or corporation to manufacture, sell or offer for sale, advertise or publish, present or exhibit in any public place in this state any lithograph, moving picture play, drama or sketch which publication or exhibition portrays depravity, criminality, unchastity or lack of virtue of a class of citizens of any race, color, creed or religion, which said publication or exhibition exposes the citizens of any race, color, creed or religion to contempt, derision, or obloquy, or which is productive of breach of the peace or riots. Any persons, firm or corporation violating any of the provisions of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $200.

An editorial in the Chicago American, recently published, justly states:

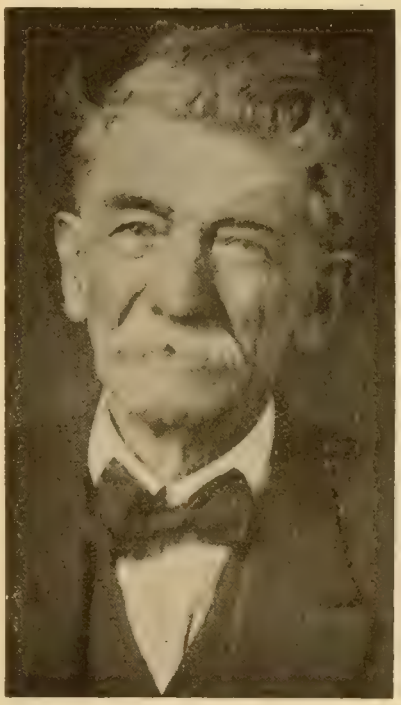
Chicago censorship means this: It compels the moving picture man, before he can do business, to report to the police station, to the office of the second deputy and satisfy that whimsical officer that he contemplates no violation of the law.

Why should the moving picture man alone be singled out for such indignity and inconvenience? The grocer has his scales, the druggist his poisons, the ship chandler his ropes. We do not compel the grocer to report each morning to the police station to satisfy the officers that he has no intention of giving short weight. The druggist does not have to give daily assurance that he is not going to poison anyone, nor does the chandler have to assure the police that he is not going to hang folks.

Is it fair to assume that the moving picture man, alone among all lines of business, is about to commit a crime every time he presents a play? Is the dreamy-eyed playwright, with his latest manuscript in his pocket, more dangerous than the ordinary man who deals in the things which go to make up life, society, civilization?

"Daddy" Strong, Fine Old Veteran

DADDY" STRONG has just turned seventy-six. And, "Daddy," who was properly renamed, is still on the job daily—looking after the inspection corps at a Minneapolis film exchange. "Daddy" Strong is to Minneapolis film folk a living "landmark," so to speak. He operated the first motion picture machine ever run in Minneapolis. It was an Animatograph, brought from England, and "Dad" has met about every film man of any importance that ever visited the Northwest.



"Daddy" Strong.

"Daddy" Strong was a veteran film man in Minneapolis when S. L. Rothaphel was first connected with the Lyric theater there; when C. E. Van Duzee opened the first exchange there and when the motion picture "craze" first hit the public. When any local newspaper or film man wants anything from Minneapolis film history the old slogan "ask 'Dad,' he knows" is brought into play. "Daddy" Strong began his show career with a wagon circus in 1859, traveled with Jim Bailey's circus, and joined P. T. Barnum's organization in 1878, being known as "Signor Giovanni, famous bird trainer."

In his younger circus days "Daddy" had done flip-flops, played musical glasses and trained canaries and traveled all over the world. He wound up his "show career" by introducing a "Pinafore" company of 120 people to America, a venture that brought him considerable praise, but eventually financial ruin. The overhead of a traveling company of 120 people almost thirty years ago was enormous and the immensity of the Pinafore production was not appreciated by the public until later (after "Daddy" Strong had given his last penny to pay his employees). Strong was with Ringling Brothers' circus also for three years, exhibiting motion pictures, which he had to hold with one hand as he cranked them through the machine with the other. Despite his age "Daddy" Strong has missed only one week at work in seven years, and the old veteran expects to keep at it for a few years more.

JAMES H. HUTCHINSON ENLISTS.

James Hobart Hutchinson, eldest son of Samuel S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Company, Inc., of Chicago, who is enlisted with the first company Military Police, 310th Train, Eighty-fifth Division, at Camp Custer, Michigan, writes that army life is the life for him.

Mr. Hutchinson, who was a student of Armour's Technical Institute, enlisted the minute he was twenty-one, which was early in December. He chose the military police because of his love for horsemanship, in which he excels. He enlisted as a private on principle and proposes to win his commission on his merits.

How It Is Done at the Strand

A Discussion of Methods Which Have Actually Been Worked Out Successfully.

By Harold Edel, Managing Director.

MUCH has been written and said on that ancient problem, "How can we build up the matinee business?" With the largest number of seats of any cinema theater in New York City, the Strand had a particularly hard nut to crack in solving this question. However, after trying various ideas and suggestions we have finally hit upon an original plan, the execution of which has made our afternoon business a source of no further worry. We are now able to point to our matinee attendance with pride, and our orchestra is responsible for it.

It is my contention that every theater in the country carrying an orchestra can overcome the matinee slump just as the Strand has done. The answer is a high-class popular concert as an added attraction for the afternoon show. When we first announced our afternoon symphony concerts various people shook their heads and smiled. The result, however, is that the Strand Symphony orchestra is not only one of the most noted motion picture theater organizations, but it is classified with all the great musical concert institutions in the city. In other words, we have not only attracted to our theater lovers of photoplays plus good music, but we have brought to our house lovers of high-class music, people from the musical world who seek their entertainment at the most prominent recitals in the city.

When I say that the Strand orchestra is classified with all the big musical organizations I mean just that. Through our symphony concerts we have enlarged our scope. We have gone into the world of high-class music. In the newspapers our activities are not confined to the pages or spaces devoted to the silent drama. In the columns devoted to music and read by many persons who never look at the motion picture departments appear notices and reviews of our orchestra and musical artists. In publications read exclusively by the patrons of high-class music we receive the same recognition. What is the result? New Yorkers who patronize afternoon recitals have become patrons of the Strand and have told their friends that high-class popular music at reasonable prices can be heard here.

With the engagement of Oscar Sperescu, the noted conductor, and the installation of a thirty-minute concert preceding our regular afternoon show we have attracted patrons to our theater that otherwise would never think of going to a photoplay entertainment. Among our afternoon audiences will be found prominent persons of the musical world enjoying the efforts of our artists. It is always said that the photoplay is the entertainment of the masses. This is true, but with extra effort it can be made the entertainment of the classes as well.

I cite the case of the Strand as an absolute denial to the feeling that a noticeable number of empty seats are to be expected during the afternoon performances. Every exhibitor should endeavor to seek new fields of patronage. In view of the fact that music is so closely associated with the presentation of pictures, it is easier to reach out to the musical world in addition to the cinema world, than any other art. However, to do this, real orchestral entertainment must be presented and to the man who does not carry an orchestra this article is of little interest. To the exhibitor who has an orchestra I would suggest that he make an honest-to-goodness bid to the music public. Get a conductor of local popularity and engage him to direct your orchestra a half an hour in the afternoon. Get recognition in another channel aside from your regular motion picture field, but be sure you give them the right kind of music, which is the most important of all.

By the right kind of music I do not mean ragtime, nor do I mean music that is so "high brow" that no one excepting an expert would understand or enjoy it. The kind of music we offer is popular high-class offerings, with as much emphasis on the "popular" as on the "high class." Selections taken from well-known operas, music familiar to the average person of any musical instinct at all, is the class of entertainment to present. Favorite selections done perhaps in a new way or introducing novel solo bits; this is the kind of music that will please the "high-brow" as well as the average person who likes musical entertainment. The Strand is not merely a photoplay theater; it is a place where music lovers as well as screen patrons may find real entertainment, and this has answered our afternoon attendance problem.

Vampire Is Eternal, Says Mary Garden

Thais Is a Woman As Women Always Have Been and Lives Today, Actress Adds.

"THAIS, the Eternal Vampire'. I should not have objected if Goldwyn's scenario editor had decided to expand the title of my first screen play in that manner. Thais is the vampire. And the vampire is eternal—as eternal as woman."

Thus speaks Mary Garden, who is to signalize her entrance into the new world of the screen by enacting the notorious courtesan of Alexandria. And those that know the famous prima donna and no less famous public figure may bear witness that no fear of the epithet "vamp" could have deterred her from her choice of "Thais," as she considered the many parts she has made famous in the world's opera houses before the nature of her first screen play was determined.

"'Thais' to me is the drama of life and death," she said. "She is woman as we know her today. She is woman as woman has always been. Thais is essentially the predatory female, using her physical attractions to gain those ends which dwarf her soul. She is, in the parlance of the cinema, a vampire.

"Call it what you will, the motives and the actions of the Alexandrian courtesan are those of the eternal woman. She knows what she wants and she gets it by means of what the gods have given her. She becomes wily, a great schemer, using her body always as her weapon, so nicely gauging her favors that she knows precisely what a glance will command for her.

"Thais," like every woman of this character, does not employ her beauty of body without becoming debauched. She cannot refrain from using to the utmost the force within her to bring her luxury after luxury—always the demands of the flesh, you see. Flesh is never satisfied, and Thais is engulfed in the sin which makes the Egyptian city a place of pestilence.

"Thais is not dead. She lives today. More than one Thais will see herself on the screen, and to those women the coming of Thais' moment of awakening will, I earnestly hope, show them that the glories of the flesh are forgotten in the ecstasy of the soul's birth. If it were not for the spiritual significance of the character the vampire's story would hardly be more than a pageant of passion. And that is not life as we live it."

MEETING OF DIRECTORS' ASSOCIATION.

At the last meeting of the Motion Picture Directors' Association, held at the Studio, 234 West 55th street, on Tuesday evening, December 18, the following directors were initiated: George Irving, Kenean Buel, Hobart Henley and Charles M. Seay.

The invitations to the dance, to be given at the Biltmore Hotel on January 26, 1918, will be ready very shortly and the members are requested to send the names of those they wish to receive them to Wally Van, chairman of the dance committee.

The date for the next regular meeting falling on New Year's Day, it has been postponed until Thursday, January 3, at eight o'clock, when Thomas Bedding, F.R.P.S., will address the members upon "The Art of the Motion Picture," and it is hoped a full attendance will be present.

The association wishes to call the attention of the company managers to the fact that only directors of ability are admitted to membership and when the services of a director are required they can be secured by calling Circle 1844 upon the phone and a list of those directors who are available will be submitted to them.

NO BLACKBERRY LIPS FOR MAE MARSH.

No one has ever seen Mae Marsh with black-rimmed eyes or beaded lashes, nor have her lips ever looked as if she had been eating blackberries just before she came on the screen. In fact, it has always appeared that Mae Marsh used no make-up at all. Such, however, is not the case.

She employs the monotone color of paint and powder used by all motion picture players, in her case a soft cream tint. Her eyes are untouched save by a light pencil on the brows, and her lips likewise scarcely know the taste of rouge. Yet this reticence in the use of make-up is by no means the timidity of one who does not know what can be done with paint and powder. It simply is the delicate artistry of the experienced, finished actress, developed to an extent not often found among her sisters of the studios.

Join This Club, and Stick.

KATE ERBER, of the Lincoln Square, Decatur, Ill., has started a club and wants the rest of the exhibitors to come in. He calls it Theater Service for Enlisted Men's Children Club. There are no dues or fees or collections. Each member merely promises to set aside from ten to twenty-five children whose parents have gone to the colors, setting aside the designated number of seats each week for the benefit of those kiddies, many of whom have had their pennies cut down by daddy's absence at the front or in camp. No house should be unwilling to set aside these few seats each week, and it should be possible to enlist the interest of local workers in locating the proper children. Perhaps the best scheme would be to list all those entitled to the courtesy and then give them tickets in rotation. It might even lead to an extension of the idea along other lines to the same end, but at any rate the exhibitor who grudges a few seats a week to the little ones who are left behind should be running a theater on Unter den Linden instead of over here. Let's all go to it! Send in your names to Mr. Erber, and, if you will, to this department. This is one of hte most practical suggestions yet made. And if you want to look on the practical side of it there are few newspapers that will not give you a boost for the idea and help you along with it.

Fine for Carpenter.

Please pass the laurel wreaths to George E. Carpenter, of the Paramount-Empress, Salt Lake City. While other managers were taking quarter-pages to tell about the war tax, Mr. Carpenter remembered that what's news is fit to print, so he took a photographer and went over to his bank, where he persuaded the president to put on his hat and coat and have his photograph taken holding out a tax-paid ticket. Then he had the print cut out and pasted over one of the tickets. This, as a two-column cut, got on the front page of the Salt Lake Telegram. The reproductions shows the strip headlines, but it was necessary to cut off the reading. The story ran to the effect that the president of the National Bank of the Republic was the first person in Salt Lake to purchase a tax stamp. As such, that was a news story and ran for its news value. That the photograph was made the day before, in order to get the cut up and have the story written, does not appear. The Salt Lake papers come out about two in the afternoon so that it might have been made that same day. The other cut is a three-column from the morning paper. It shows Mr. Carpenter and his assistant getting the pennies ready. This also has a news value, but perhaps not so strong as the other. But the point is that both papers had front page news stories about the tax—as did practically all the other papers of the country—and the Paramount-Empress, of all the houses, ran with the story. The news items have many times the value of plain display advertising. We think that Mr. Carpenter should get the award for the best handling of the situation. And it is well to note that the plans were laid the day before. Mr. Carpenter is too good a newspaper man to try to plant a story at the last moment. He knows that editors like to get the stuff as far ahead as possible. He is ready for them. That's the secret of getting space. Make it news and anticipate the news, if possible. And note that Mr. Carpenter merely adds the tax to the present cost of tickets, instead of making a two or three-cent tax the excuse for a five-cent raise. There may be every reason for the five-cent increase, but the houses that merely add the tax now are holding their business best.

The Parkway, Baltimore, sends in a very attractive mailing card in brown on white, the measurement being 4¼ by 6 inches. One side is shown in the reproduction. The space is a trifle too full of type for the very best display, but the composition, considering this slight excess of copy, is unusually good. The address side carries a panel to the left, giving the name, the times of performance and the prices, together with the telephone number. All the information needed is there in compact form, where it will not detract from the advertisement of the current offering, and yet supplement it. This means a second printing, but since the prices are permanent it is possible to reduce expense by running these through the press in quantities and using them as needed.

Eight Pages.

J. S. Woodhouse, of the Lagoon, Minneapolis, must have found his program a good investment for he has raised it to the same page size as this paper and gets out an eight-pager. This permits a clean, open, readable type picture, as is shown in the right-hand side of the cut.

The left-hand side shows the front page with the space pretty evenly divided between the films and the jazz band. Mr. Woodhouse has taken the suggestion offered some time ago to complete the "if it is good it is at the Lagoon," and he offers a catchy phrase in the heading with his "Where your money does its duty." Smaller pages might give an equally pretty display, but if the paper cost is not too great, the style followed certainly does give a pretty display. The text is rather open, but with wide lines and a large space this looks well. On a smaller page or with a narrow column the leading would look too white. It is all a matter of proportion.

Used a Cartoon.

The house organ of the Poli theater, Scranton, Pa., used a cartoon to get over the idea of the war tax. It is not too late yet to get something along these lines, for which reason it is reproduced nearly full size. The original is two columns wide. The cut tells more than much larger display advertising would. A small box on an inside page gives another view of the tax, the matter reading:

> TO AVOID THE THEATER WAR TAX IS TO PLAY THE PART OF A SLACKER.
> Remember the theater only collects the tax—the U. S. Government gets every red copper of it.

Both ideas are excellent. The public must be educated to the new idea, not through a single reference or a drive of a week or two, but through a steady and persistent campaign.

Topheavy.

Stanley Chambers, of the Palace, Wichita, Kan., send in the proof of a three tens, and asks for comment. The cut does not give a very clear idea of the layout, as it does not indicate the white space used, which amounts to about an inch and a half in the width. We do not like advertising layouts in which the cut rises above the text. It does not seem that the cut properly connects with the copy. The copy should be set opposite the cut or around it, with at least a bottom or top line clear across the type-space taken. The result of this advertisement is a cut of Miss Clarke and an advertisement of Miss Clark, but the two have little in common as compared with an advertisement of the "Sub-Deb" story illustrated by a cut of Miss Clark. It is better to build the advertisement around the cut than to use the cut instead of an attractor line. Four sevens would give a better layout than three tens and still save two inches of space. The cut itself is 4¾ inches deep by about 3½ wide. It would not work well in a three, with the text alongside, but it would work well in a four, with a top line for Miss Clark and a bottom line for the house and date, the title and the small type matter running opposite the cut. The same text will do, but the lines must be rearranged to suit their new placing. There is a lack of date here. The play stays three days, but what three? Is it today, tomorrow and the day after, or yesterday, today and tomorrow? If there is only today and tomorrow left play up the fact, for someone might come along the day after and want to see the play. The only time when a cut may properly ride to the top of an advertisement is in a full page. There you have the entire page to yourself, and it does not matter so much, but even here it is a good plan to sink the cut to the copy and connect up more closely, and a good general layout is to plan a sort of U of type, the letter laying on its side, and put the cut into the open space. Then the cut cannot run away from the copy, but must stick around and help out. There can be no fixed and definite rule for the placement of cuts. If there were, then advertisements would look too much alike, but this is a safe plan as a general thing, and where the eyes of the portrait are not looking into those of the reader they should be regarding the copy. One more thing about this layout. While it is a three tens, the type display is only about 9 by 4½, and this gives a rather topheavy effect. The effort should be to get a nicely proportioned space, and three tens is a little too long for the width. Three nines is better, where the type goes to the rules, but with a white space the measurement is generally only the measure of the type and not of the space paid for. Here there is less space top and bottom than there is at the side, and so the layout falls out of proportion.

Almost Too Handsome.

One of the most pretentious advertising booklets ever issued in behalf of a film is that for the Jewel Pay Me. It is almost too good, for that matter; but this is intended primarily for distribution to photoplay editors and others who are likely to be influenced by the richness of the offering to regard with greater attention the general Jewel product, in which case the effect of the sheet will repay the cost of the production. The cover is rough paper, done in black and gold; embossed. Inside are thirty-two sheets of high-grade surfaced paper, each printed in black and with a tint block worked into the color scheme of the cuts, which adorn each page. There are several portraits of the star, scenes from the play, reproductions of the New York criticisms and advertisements for other notable Jewels The whole forms a book that most photoplay editors will keep upon their desks, for it is an excellent example of the printer's art, and the money, if lavishly, has been intelligently spent. It cost money, but it results in a book that gives the impression that if the company can get out a work in such good taste it is evident that its plays will be in equal good taste. It has not been a case of merely spending money; it has been spent to get results in appearance. Few of those books will find their way into the waste paper baskets within the next six months, if at all, and for this reason the expenditure is justified.

Philadelphia Programs.

The Palm Theater, Philadelphia, uses a blue on blue program that is laid out in accordance with the best rules. It will not reproduce or we would try to show the front cover. It is all type and rule work, but a drawn design would be no better. The house name comes to the top, with the address, slogan and name of the manager all together; the date lines come next, cut off above and below with rule; then a brief house brag, and in the lowest box full information about times of performances, prices, showings of the feature film and about everything else but the telephone number. Apart from this you can look at that front page and know all about the house from the fact that William S. Jones runs it to the news that the feature is run about 1:30, 3:15, 7:45 and 9:45. Inside, by dated days, are the casts of the plays, with titles of the added attractions, and a talk about the play instead of a synopsis that will spoil the surprise.

The Paschall, a suburban house, makes the mistake of announcing a war tax of one cent instead of the ten per cent. tax. Probably the patrons know better, but it will take a deal of explaining should the prices be advanced later. The box arrangement of the inside pages would be better were they not so crowded. There is a certain lack of accuracy to the matter, as the announcement of "Edgar Lewis in The Bar of Justice," which was produced by Mr. Lewis. There is always the suggestion of lack of management when a patron finds that the house program does not know about the film it praises. The sample shown is that for the first collection of the admission tax. That cross line box can be made very useful to the house. Breaking the small type into two columns helps much to make it readable. The type display is poor, partly because of the excess of type, but more largely on account of the choice of faces.

The Ridge Avenue, Jay Emanuel's old house, uses about the same make-up that Jay used, though his single cards were handier than the four-page folder. They, too, name the added attractions instead of merely saying that they have a comedy. The back page gives a brief but clear list of the underline and takes the lower half for house talk.

Emanuel, who is the only one of the Philadelphia exhibitors who sends stuff in himself, contributes three pieces. One is an ordinary baggage tax, printed up for Parentage, which was to be shown at the Jefferson for two days. Whether these were used for door knobs or merely slipped onto any convenient projection Jay does not explain. They can be used for either purpose, and a couple of boys can put a lot of those where they will do real good. The second exhibit is a ticket, 3 by 2¾ inches, cheap stock, printed in black. These are sold by the school children on behalf of the Red Cross or one or two churches, according to their preferences. Two cents (20%) is paid on the sales to the beneficiaries. Jay is sticking to his monthly program for the two houses, but Jay's "month" is only four weeks long. Where he uses the same attraction for two or more days we think he would do well to break the rule and take the full space for a slight display instead of repeating copy for the second and following days.

The Pastime has a sad looking colored stock, with a flash announcement of one of those "adults only" subjects. Children under twelve must be accompanied by an adult, but children in arms are positively not admitted, though we should not suppose that their morals could be affected. To help along a well meaning woman physician is announced for a lecture on The Actualities of the Underworld, which sounds interesting to those who do not know. One of those subjects in a locality will do a lot to hurt business for some weeks.

The Holme Theater suffers from its printer. The front page looks cramped because the stuffed, hard lines are held in by too heavy a border. Eighteen point is far too heavy a border for a space only 2½ inches wide inside. The entire page is but 3¾ inches wide and the eighteen point has no place there at all. To make things worse the cut is rather small and gives further emphasis to the suggestion of narrowness. A larger cut, almost filling the width, would have been better. Inside there is too much type matter and it is all set in full face; not very heavy, but not easy to read. In most of the boxes there is not even a single two-point lead, but the lines lie one against the other with a black effect that robs even the larger lines of their value. In most cases the only display the large lines get arises from the fact that they are in all capitals, and the room below, left for the descending lines, is unused. On a twelve-point face this gives the effect of a two-point space below, which is the only relief afforded the display line.

The Palm, Collingswood, N. J., near Philadelphia, uses a narrow folder, 2½ by 5½, colored stock. It is much on the lines of the Garfield, Chicago, but longer. The days should be dated, but apart from this they manage to get a fairly good display in a small space.

Jay Emanuel also sends in an envelope he uses for his mailing list. This is printed up, with a card announcing the attractions current during the life of the list. Jay has a mailing list of 1,200 names. A recent envelope was printed on the back for Jack the Giant Killer, and he played to 1,629 children in a morning and afternoon show. It costs money to print up envelopes, but it pays if you do it right. Sometimes the envelope will reach several persons before it comes into the hands of the person addressed.

Changes Form.

Mr. Bayer, of the Opera House, Leighton, Pa., has changed his program style to a six-by-nine, an attractive grey stock done in a good black ink, and using the side-boxed day and date with the chief attraction, making the inside pages serve for two weeks at a time. This is an excellent form, originally shown, we believe, in the Colonial program, Camden, N. J., but now widely adopted. We think it would help to name the comedies instead of merely saying that it is a Drew comedy one night and a Hughie Mack another. Give all the titles, but centre interest on the chief attractions. The back page is used for house talk, including the "phonograph record" argument on prices and service. Grey and black is an unusual combination, and the paper Mr. Bayer uses is a bit too expensive for general use, but there are more moderate-priced greys and they work well both with black or a deep blue, and to some extent with red and green in the darker shades.

Two Men.

In announcing a double bill with Hart and Arbuckle, the Victoria, Buffalo, calls them "Will Hart, the gunman, and Fatty Arbuckle, the funman." Another good line is "side dishes at the film feast," used in announcing the added attractions to "The Woman God Forgot."

No Cause for Alarm.

The Mikadow, Manitowoc, Wis., for a recent attraction sends out a folded circular sealed with its own stamp, with "Don't be alarmed! ! !" just above the address. This rouses curiosity, but you can turn the folder over and see on the other side an announcement for the attraction. It is not until you open the piece further that you reach the "France is invaded" that is supposed to connect with the reassurance. It would have been better to have put the "France is invaded" at the bottom of the address side leaving the back blank, and then repeating the "France is invaded" on the inside, giving the explanation that it is merely invaded for the locale of a play. The idea is good, but it does not carry through. And to quell alarm it might be better to use a very red ink instead of blue. There is the making of a capital mystery advertisement here.

Adding the Parents.

The Fenray, Martins Ferry, Ohio, has something instead of the kiddie matinee. It offers a "Children's and Parents' night" once a week. Of course one of the main advantages of the kiddie matinee lies in the fact that it is given on Saturday mornings when the house is idle and represents a clear profit, but there are certain advantages in this dual night that commend themselves. The opening announcement explains the idea and can be altered for program material by those who wish to follow:

of today are the leaders of tomorrow. Consequently their mental development is an important obligation. The active mind and body of a child demand, however, relaxation in the form of amusement. This amusement should, so far as possible, add to the mental development as well as to the physical. One of the best methods of combining these two elements of "child play" is through the medium of proper photoplays; the mind is unconsciously forced to action, thus giving relaxation, enjoyment and education without fatiguing the mental or physical system.

In furtherance of this need the management of the Fenray is inaugurating "PARENTS' and CHILDREN'S NIGHT," to begin on Tuesday, October 16—this week—and to continue every Tuesday thereafter. Parents should endeavor to bring or send their children to the Fenray on this night, because the program we have arranged combines value to the child both entertaining and instructive. It includes a drama feature and an excellent comedy attraction; as an ADDED FEATURE we have arranged for the BOBBY CONNOLLY kiddie films. These pictures combine all of the charm of "kid" pranks and mischief with regular stories of human interest and heart appeal that make them popular, not only with the children but with the grown-ups as well.

PARENTS' and CHILDREN'S NIGHT represents a big step forward in moral uplift by presenting a "program with a purpose"; and we trust it will elicit each Tuesday a hearty response from PARENT and CHILD alike.

The initial program offered Marguerite Clark in "Snow White, Chaplin in "The Immigrant" and a Bobby Connolly story.

Optimistic.

The Third Street theater, Easton, Pa., opens a recent appeal for suggestions from patrons with "To run a Ford is easy, but to manage a theater to please a majority of the patrons is a 'durn' hard job." They must have a different brand of "rattlesnakes" in Pennsylvania Fords are not easy to keep running.

We Do Blame the Exhibitor.

One exhibitor, in circularizing his patrons on the tax, heads his story, "Don't blame the exhibitor," and goes on to explain it is a Government tax. The heading is unfortunate. It is a mistake to suggest that the tax is something to apologize for. We'll never get ahead with this sort of thing. Point out that it is an opportunity for patriots. Make the tax popular and the efforts will be over much more promptly.

Try This.

Why not print up punch tickets to be punched to the face value of the war tax, a penny for each penny paid in war tax, and offer a fifty-dollar Liberty Bond to the person paying the largest sum in taxes between now and the date set for the closing of subscriptions. You do not know what that date is, but neither does your patron. You can get them interested in the war tax and it will be worth a great deal more than the cost of the bond.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

Send in Your Best.

PROBABLY those who most need this advice will not be reached by this appeal, but with the market opening up, it is most important that if the open market is to be maintained the percentage of scripts should be smaller and vastly better. As a matter of simple sense it should suggest itself to the free lance as being a waste of money to spend a dollar or so in postage on a story he knows is not above the average. Editors do not want average stuff from the free lances. They can get all of this they need from their staffs. They must have something very much better than the average if they are to be induced to buy, and the percentage of unusual stories must be larger than in the old days or the market will close down again. With not more than four or five fairly good stories in each hundred and perhaps not more than one of these five suited to the needs of the studio to which it is sent, there is small profit in paying an intelligent reader to wade through the mass of junk in search of the one good idea. It was precisely this dearth of good ideas that closed the market down. We know of one case where a new editor started in with the intention of giving the fullest possible chance to the novice writer. He felt that in spite of a lack of finish, there must be many good ideas in the rough which other editors were passing over. He was going to buy these cheap, have them given a skilled reconstruction and then show the boss how many good stories he got for small cost. The theory was all right, but in the first month he went through more than ten thousand scripts with the aid of a staff of trained men, and of those ten thousand he did not find a sufficient supply of material to keep his companies going for a week. He took his staff off the reading job and put an office boy at work sending all the stories back save the few sent in by writers whom he knew to be competent. He had more than one thousand stories of a certain type, and from three to five hundred each of other well-worn plots. He could not be blamed for feeling that he was wasting his time working on this material when the return was so small. No grocer would expect to sell oleo for butter or at the butter price. No shoemaker would expect to get the same money for cowhide as for patent leather, no butcher prices porterhouse and liver on the same flat rate, but hundreds of half-trained writers offer liver to men who are looking for porterhouse and wail when their offerings are rejected. If you want the market to stay open, send in only your very best. Do that and when the boobs close the market down again you'll be on the inside looking out instead of on the outside looking wistfully in. Begin now to weed out the usual ideas and hold those until you can make them unusual. It is the only way to gain a position.

The Reason Why.

Someone wants to know why we don't have plays "as good as those we used to see in the old Biograph days." We have, though some of those old Biographs still rank among the best productions of the screen. We have many better plays, but we also have a better educated taste—that's all. We have been given knowledge of better things and plays that are several times as good as the old Biograph average do not seem as good now as those old one-reelers. Perhaps you can remember back to the childhood times, when a slice of bread thickly spread with brown sugar was a real treat and ice cream was a thing for Christmas and the Fourth of July. Today you rather despise brown bread and sugar, because you know of so many more delicate desserts, and even the kiddies of today demand ice cream cones against mere bread and sugar. That's why the old-fashioned stories no longer seem good. We have raised our standards. Broncho Billy would never be the hero today that he was five years ago. Perhaps five years from now we'll be wondering what we ever saw in Bill Hart.

Beat a Record.

Phil Lang denies that he ever said that the old-time writers could not supply the present material, and we like him too well to argue with him. But it must be admitted that many writers have let the business grow away from them, and many more will find this out as time goes on. We can look out of our office window at huge piles of masonry that line Broadway. In a small town any three blocks of these building would be Main street, but right in our immediate vicinity the buildings are really small and old-fashioned, for the greater part, yet we can remember this strip of Broadway a quarter of a century ago when it was modern and up to date, when there was little beyond Thirty-fourth street, and it was not until four or five years later that Oscar Hammerstein built his first downtown theater at Forty-fourth street and pulled the theatrical district across Forty-second street; a thing that even experienced theatrical men said could not be done. We knew the Flatiron building when it was but two stories high, and an eyesore, and used to cover shows in the old Lyceum theater that is now a part of the Metropolitan Life site. No one dreamed then that an office building covering the entire square would ever be built. There is constant movement forward. Maude S. would be a back number on the trotting tracks today, and a mile a minute is no longer regarded as the extreme limit of man-created speed. In its smaller way the photoplay has gone ahead and bigger and better ideas are demanded than in the halcyon days of the one-reel stories, when all plots were new to photoplay and almost anything was as good as the home-made stuff it replaced. You must keep on advancing or you will be left behind, so cover up the speedometer and step on the gas if you still want to play in the motion picture yard. What you used to do won't do now. The successful man is doing today what the others will be doing next year. That is why he is a success now.

Frills and Fuss.

"Why is it that in your book you preach against the leader before the first scene, and why do you also object to a series of introductions to the characters? If you went to the theater more often you would find that most plays start with a leader and the first scenes are largely introductory." That's the kick one student makes, and from his point of view he is right. The leader before the opening scene is almost a disease, and we have an interminable succession of close-up introductions. Yet both are radically wrong and both will be dispensed with when we have the real photoplay. Introductions are a confession that it is not possible for the director to get his action over so clearly that it is understandable without labored explanation. An excess of leaders is also an admission of incompetence, for the properly-told story does not require an excess of explanation. The teaching is correct and will eventually become standard practice. Meanwhile it is better for the free-lance writer to tell his story as a story and not try for the introductions. The method of introduction varies with each director and cannot be laid down. The staff writer is told just how to work these preliminary scenes or else the director adds them himself. It is the province of the author to supply the story. What goes before the first real scene of the story is no more a part of that story than the design head is a part of the fiction story. No magazine editor expects the author to be his own artist and supply an illustrated title. The photoplay writer cannot be expected to supply the preliminary scenes where practice is so widely variant. Start your story with the first scene of action, and tell your story. Let the director muss it up to suit himself—no author ever could suit the director and it is foolish to try.

Filler Stuff.

Most of the writers who turned to fiction when the photoplay market closed have either dropped photoplay or fiction, finding it almost impossible to work both. It is like trying to play the organ and the piano. It can be done, but a good organist is seldom a good pianist, or vice versa, and there is no performer who is really great in both lines. The touch is so different that the organ touch spoils the piano technique and the pianist cannot acquire the sherring organ touch. Either you will write good fiction or good photoplay, but if you try to do both, your fiction will sound like a photoplay and your plays be too much like fiction. But you can write filler stuff and make some money on the side. If you own a camera it is twice as easy, for illustrated articles are in greated demand. And just remember that what is old to you may be new to others. For example the New York Subway platforms have long boards, painted red, suspended from the overhang at the upper end of each station. No one knew what they were for until a paragraphist asked a guard and found out that it was to show the guard on the first car if it was safe to open the middle door. If he could see the red board the door remained closed. It made a sixty-cent paragraph in a Sunday paper, and a lot of people wondered why they had not guessed the idea. Getting good filler is merely a matter of keeping your eyes open, your mind active and sending to the right market. It is chicken-feed, but it helps pay the stamp bills. Try it for yourself. If you can get the hang you'll find that it does not hurt your photoplay work and is not hurt by it.

Technique of the Photoplay

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost, will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

The New Year.

Very soon now will we mostly all be busy with the eraser, rubbing out the 7 we, through force of habit, wrote after the 191, and substituting therefor an 8. And another year more will have become merely a matter of history; another drop will have been poured out from the great ocean of time, and we will all have passed one more of the milestones on the road which leads to the final goal of humanity.

The past, with its smiles, its tears, its things well done and its many mistakes, is behind us. The errors we cannot recall, nor will the most scalding tear blot them out. But we may let them teach us to avoid errors for the future. What is done is done, so let us not grieve overmuch for mistakes, since grieving cannot undo them, but face the future with stout hearts, determined to be better men and better women than we have in the past.

And we of the projection field have much—oh, very, very, much! to do. Chicago Local Union No. 110 has pointed the way when it styled itself "Scientific Projection Engineers, Local Number 110, I. A. T. S. E. and M. P. M. O." There is, as I have long since learned, very much in a name, and Chicago operators took a long stride toward raising projection to the level of dignity it deserves when it adopted for itself the name it did. The unthinking or the non-progressive may smile, or even sneer, but when he does he merely advertises his own foolishnss.

This department has for years been trying to literally drag the profession of operating out of the gutter. It now is out of the gutter, but is still very far from that high plane it should occupy . Therefore I say to you the new year holds in store work in plenty for us all. This department has in the past tried to do its best for you all. It has made mistakes, yes; moreover, being but a human institution it will doubtless make mistakes in the future. But it will nevertheless strive to aid you in every possible way, because in aiding you it is but aiding the moving picture industry, which means aiding us all.

So all aboard for New Year! It s going to oe a good voyage, friends, so get your ticket, check your baggage, climb up to the top deck and we'll enjoy the scenery along the banks of the river of time.

Practical Suggestion.

Cecil G. Parker, Shreveport, Louisiana, sends the following:

> For quite a while film exchanges have been trying to prevent their films from being punched and k cking like Texas steers about misframes. But I have yet to find one of them making one single step toward co-operating with the operator in the matter. In making a splice all we have to go by is the frame line, yet quite a few manufacturers are turning out films without any frame line. As to the punch mark, could not each producer use a standard close-up? If this were done it would very soon come to be recognized all over the world as the change-over sign and thus, punching the film would very soon become unfashionable, since there would be no need for it. As to frame lines, if they are from any reason objectionable, why not use dots at the edge of the film, as the Thanhouser did some years ago?

Your close-in change-over sign is entirely practical. All that is needed is its adoption, but how are we to get that? The editor worked on that particular thing until he was thoroughly disgusted with the apathy of film manufacturers, who, while howling like a pup with a sore tail about the punch marks did not have sufficient enterprise to adopt and use any one of half a dozen perfectly practical change-over signs we presented to them, because their introduction would require a little trouble, though no expense, until the factory became accustomed to its incorporation as an integral part of multiple-reel subjects. As to the lack of frame lines, why it is quite an inconvenience to the operator or film spl cer if the line happens to fall where two light or two very dark portions of the scene, such, for instance, sky and water, join.

Universal Enlarges Its Plant.

The Universal Motor Company, Oshkosh, Wisconsin, which makes and markets an excellent electric lighting outfit for theaters, has just completed a two-story addition to its plant, the same being 40 by 180 feet. The new building is now being occupied. The machine department has been greatly increased in size and many special machines, designed to turn out standard parts for Universal machines, have been added to the equipment. The assembling department has also been increased in size, and the offices have been made larger.

The sales department will be under the personal direction of Mr. C. J. Pope, sales manager for the company. The Universal electric light set has the approval of this department. Bulletin 26, which may be had by adaressing the company, describes its generating sets. The motor is a 4-cycle, 4-cylinder standard motor. Quite a number are in use in theaters, and to date we have had no complaints, either as to the machine itself or the business methods of the company.

Why Not Work Together?

There is, on the part of both the Exhibitors' Leagues and operators' unions a decided inclination to regard each other as enemies. The exhibitor and his union (league) has the perverted idea that the operator's union is a thing formed simply to annoy him and to force from him a part of h s profit.

What the operators' union really is doing is to create conditions such that men of greater skill or possibilities of skill will be attracted to the profession of operating. True they may not themselves realize that this is or will be the ultimate effect of their work nor may they actually wish this to be the outcome. But the fact remains that that will be the exact effect of their efforts at increased remuneration and betterment of working conditions, unless they themselves improve and raise themselves to a higher level of proficiency. And this all eventually reacts to put on the screen a better show, which means more money at the box office—FAR MORE THAN THE COMPARATIVELY PIFFLING ADVANCE IN REMUNERATION SOUGHT BY OPERATORS' UNIONS.

Why, then, should the Exhibitors' League and the operators' union be bad friends? WHY SHOULD THE EXHIBITOR OR HIS UNION OPPOSE THAT WHICH IS FOR HIS OWN ULTIMATE BENEFIT? WHY SHOULD NOT THE EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE AND THE OPERATORS' UNION WORK TOGETHER AND CO-OPERATE TOGETHER? Why, for instance, should not the exhibitors' league of Noname City send a committee to the operators' union of that city, suggesting that its members co-operate with the members of the exhibitors' union in lessening film damage? And when the operators' union makes a request for changed cond tions or increased remuneration why should not the exhibitors' league appoint a committee and the operators' union appoint a committee and those two committees meet together, NOT as employer and employe; not in the spirit of "I am greater than thou," but as sane, sensible men, met together to discuss certain differences, each willing to concede that the "other fellow" may be e ther partly or wholly right on any given point. WHY FIGHT WHEN THERE REALLY IS NOTHING TO FIGHT ABOUT? The exhibitor is not always an unfair, self-seeking, to-hell-with-the-other-fellow demon. Approached rightly he is more often than not found to be a very decent sort of chap, though not always able to forget his I'm-the-boss pose, and all too often obsessed with the fallacious idea that any added operating room expense is just so much lost money. By and large, however, if rightly approached, he is reasonable. On the other hand, the operator is not a naughty highbinder seeking but to delve into your cash drawer each week and withdraw all your hard-earned profits. True there are too many "horrible examples" who think only of the pay envelope, but I am very sure that if exhibitors' leagues showed the right spirit of co-operation with operators' unions they would find four unions out of five perfectly willing to assist in weeding out men of that type.

But to get back to our subject, why not less swearing at each other and more co-operation? The operator, Mr. Exhibitor, is the one most-important man in your entire theater, not excepting the orchestra leader or any one else. Your course in opposing your operator instead of co-operating with him and the course of your league in opposing his union instead of co-operating with it, makes for inferior work on your screen, makes for waste in every direction, makes for lessened box-office receipts.

The Exhibitors' League is here to stay, for which I am duly thankful; also the operators' union is here to stay, for which I am duly thankful. Let us hope they both prosper, cut out the two-stray-bulldogs attitude, get down to business and co-operate together ,substituting argument for growls, each remembering that the other is composed of men who occupy important positions in the industry, the positions being so corelated that ne ther can suffer reverse without working inevitable injury to the other. But particularly the exhibitor needs to come to an understanding that A DOLLAR SAVED IN OPERATOR SALARY WILL MOST LIKELY, IN THE LONG RUN, MEAN TWO LOST AT THE BOX OFFICE, and this even though the loss be not immediately apparent.

Dangerous Reasoning.

A certain manufacturer of appliance, designed to be used with the mazda incandescent lamp for projecting pictures, has just issued a rather elaborate booklet under the caption "Bulletin A," in course of which the following occurs:

> It must be remembered that mazda projection is new in its application to motion pictures, as ideas and attitudes have changed toward new developments in other fields, so ultimately the idea of projection with mazda projector lamps will be accepted. Sound engineering reasons, backed with years of research by the best experts in this line, govern the many changes in practice and equipment recommended. Do not be too ready to condemn mazda projection, with the old arc methods as a basis for comparison; but rather judge by screen results and the important feature—decreased operating costs.

Well, in the name of common sense what basis of comparison would we use other than the "old arc methods," since it is those methods the incandescent proposes to supplant; Talk sense, man! The statement, "sound engineering reasons, backed by years of research by the best experts," is just a little misleading, is it not? Conveys the impression that engineers have been working on this problem for many years. Umph, the industry itself is still rather young! But I only name this as indicating a tendency to exaggeration. "The idea of projection with mazda projection lamps will be accepted." Why, as to that, the idea has already been accepted! But the idea of pushing the incandescent lamp into theaters where it has no proper place and may never have any proper place is not accepted. And at present the incandescent has no proper place in any theater except those in which, by reason of low amperage of a. c., lack of skill of available operators or other reason, the screen illumination is poor. The incandescent cannot as yet hope to give equal results with a well handled arc supplied with 50 or more amperes a. c. or 25 or more amperes d. c.

But the reason for the heading of this article lies in the half of the last sentence of the quoted paragraph, viz., "The important feature—decreased operating costs." This is dangerous reasoning, all the more so because it is likely to focus the theater manager's eyes at the wrong end of the glass. The company in question, I very strongly suspect, well knows that there are a too large number of theater managers and exhibitors who will almost jump down the throat of a chance to save a few dollars in operating room expenses, never stopping to consider what effect the "saving" is going to have on box office receipts. It is quite true that you will reduce your current bills by substituting mazda for arc for projection, but if by so doing you put a less beautiful picture on the screen you are likely to lose anywhere from two to two hundred times the "saving" in loss of patronage.

The apparatus put out by the company in question seems to be very good, and I am indeed sorry it does not confine itself a little more closely to fact and legitimate argument in its literature. This department welcomes the incandescent projection lamp, but serves notice right here and now that it is not going to sit idly by and permit its exploitation into fields it is not as yet fitted to fill, which same are fields it may never be fitted to fill. Within its legitimate field (which may grow and expand with time) the incandescent is a step in advance. But it may do great and lasting injury to the industry if it be forced into theaters where it cannot deliver the goods.

Apply the Golden Rule.

From Elyria, Ohio, comes a letter which I quote in part:

> It would seem some theater managers imagine a union to be some sort of carniverous an mal which eats theater managers and exhibitors alive. On November 7 three men from Loran local union 474 came over and asked Elyria operators to join the local. When the head of the theater managers' corporation heard this there were doings at once. They pay us $21 per week to work from 1 to 11 P. M., with about an hour and a half for supper; also there is an occasional spec al show from 9 to 11 A. M., for which the operator receives not even so much as a thank you. Thus far no one has joined the union, though I am in hopes we all will, before long.

Aside from long hours, your $21 is about equal to New York City union scale pay in houses of probably equal class, when difference in cost of living is cons dered; also, whereas operators cannot reasonably be expected to meet the tremendous increase in living cost except with correspondingly advanced remuneration, still there should be very careful consideration given before making any demands of that kind just at this time, remember ng that exhibitors are themselves literally between the devil and the deep sea. To them the war tax in different forms is presenting a very real problem. Many of the smaller theaters have already closed their doors and gone out of business. Personally, I am of the belief that eventually the public will be made to stand most, if not all of the burden, as it ought to do, since it w ll even then be receiving huge value for its money. In fact, many theaters have already added the tax, and in some instances, I believe more than the tax, to the price of admission, and that, too, with no appreciable diminishment of patronage.

Although there is apparently no wage controversy in the Elyria matter, I use the incident to admonish unions that even more than ordinary care should be used in formulating wage demands during this time of unusual stress and excitement.

As to the attitude of the exhibitor or manager in question, why I would wonder what he would say about or think of the man, especially if he were an operator, who opposed exhibitors jo ning the Exhibitor's League? Yet the Exhibitor's League is merely an organization designed to protect the interest of the exhibitor, precisely as the operator's union is an organization to protect the interest of the operator. Seems to me a little study of the Golden Rule might prove beneficial to the man in question. It is just exactly as right and proper that the operator join his organization as that the exhibitor jo'n his; also it is eminently right and proper, as has been repeatedly pointed out in this department, that they both join their organizations.

Local Union 110 Adopts Educational Methods.

Chicago local union 110 has adopted a plan which gives promise of improvement for its members. It has established an educational bureau, divided into two sections, called "Class A" and "Class B," the former devoting its energies to elementary work, consisting of a short treatise on mathematics, formulas, physics and the phenomena of light, heat, magnetism and other things intended to prepare the operator to enter into the real study of projection from a scientific basis. Class B will include practical work, such as testing, apparatus, machine design and a practical treatise on ventilation, practical set-ups of latest equipment and testing for and remedy of troubles such as are likely to arise from time to time. Class A men will be required to pass an examination at the end of each term of one year. After having passed a satisfactory Class A examination they will take up Class B work.

> President Armstrong says: Our educational bureau is of great importance in the advancement of the operator to the plane of projection engineer. In the past the operator has not even been an operator. He has used up his energy in hanging posters, acting as expressman, twisting a crank all day and part of the night for an insignificant wage, which made us smile when you first called it a salary. He returned to his home in the very late (or very early) hours, snatched a few hours' rest and tumbled out to repeat the same discouraging routine next day and for all days thereafter. It naturally followed that the men were not satisfied. A few studied hard to improve matters, and when the engineers finally discovered that motor energy could be supplied to the projector at about three-quarters of a cent per hour a part of the battle was won. The energy which had been consumed in useless manual labor was then available for better purposes, and by many was devoted, at least in part, to study. Naturally conditions began to change and to improve. Local union 110, realizing that the average operator either did not possess the patience or the necessary inclination to apply himself to the grubbing out of the knowledge necessary to place him in the projection engineer class, appointed a committee to compile data designed to raise the membership above the level of the ordinary and keep it abreast of the times. Classes A and B are a part of the result of this committee's activities.

In the language of the immortal Samuel Weller, Werry good! Werry good, indeed! Chicago is the second city of our land, and due to the extremely cosmopolitan membership of the local of the first city 110 has a great opportunity before her. She can take the lead if she really wants to. Chicago local 110 has it in her power to become the Moses to lead the operator out of the wilderness of operating into the Promised Land of Projection Engineering. There was a time when I had expected San Francisco to do that very thing. But while that local is an efficient body, viewed purely as a union, it has not quite lived up to its promise of some years ago in the matter of assuming the lead in other ways. Chicago, on the other hand, is but just starting on the upward path in the matter of improving its membership in knowledge. The local is a large, powerful one, possessed of ample income. In the past that income has been a curse rather than a blessing. Diverted to right channels, however, it may enable the Chicago men to outstrip all others and become the leaders of the world in the field of scientific projection. But she will have to dig, for there are a few small (small as compared to Local 110) but high-class locals, to carry a card in which is an honor. Offhand I would cite Utica, New York; Chattanooga, Tennessee; Vancouver, British Columbia; San Francisco, California; (yes, I know what I just said, but while San Francisco has to some extent been a disappointment, still I would nevertheless feel proud to carry her card), and a few more which do not at the moment present themselves to memory. Then there is a large number of locals having a small leavening of very energetic, high-class men and a mass of pretty ordinary dough which they may or may not cause to "raise." Then there are a few locals which are energetic enough in some ways, but in sad need of a thorough shaking up in others, as, for instance, Kansas City, Missouri; Memphis, Tennessee; Lexington, Kentucky, and Cincinnati, Ohio. And lastly, comes a few (thanks be) locals which are utterly dead from the shoulders up, Albany, New York, being an example.

Chicago has great opportunity. Great will be her honor if she is big enough, as I believe she is, to rise to it. This department stands ready and willing to help in any possible way. Incidentally I intend spending one or two weeks in Chicago every year hereafter. I find it is a very necessary thing to do, in view of the many manufacturers located there.

Serious Mistake.

C. Elmer Deitrich, Tunkhannock, Pennsylvania, has made a rather serious error and seeks advice concerning a lock for the stable door subsequent to the purloining of the horse. He says:

> The electric plant was consumed by fire a short time since and I immediately installed a plant of my own, without taking time to ascertain exactly what was needed. Just grabbed what I could get quick. My throw is 90 feet and the picture a twelve-footer: Simplex projectors. Have 50 fifteen-watt street lamps, four 15-watt entrance and six 15-watt s de lights. The generator is a Westinghouse d. c. 110-volt, 24-ampere machine, designed to run 1,700 R. P. M. It is operated by a Fairbanks-Morse throttling kerosene engine. We are using a Power's 25 to 45-ampere rheostat in the projection arc circuit, Speer cored carbons top and bottom. We are unable to get a clear field on screen, and when projection arc is burning street lamps are very dim. Will you kindly advise as to what kind of generator we should have? Want the best there is and would like d. c. for projection arc. Put on a grid rheostat today, but it did not improve matters.

Your trouble is too high voltage, with consequent lack of capacity, by reason of waste in rheostat. There is absolutely no difference in effect as between a wire coil and a grid rheostat, if each be of same size or capacity. Your generator is rated at 24 amperes and you have a 25 to 45-ampere rheostat. Heavens, man, at its minimum of 25 amperes your generator would be overloaded just supplying the projection arc alone. What you need is a 70-volt generator, of suffic ent capacity to supply the amperage you desire at the arc and whatever is needed for your incandescents, plus some margin in case you should desire to install additional lights at any time. The 110-volt generator is more convenient, since 110-volt incandescent lamps and rheostats are standard, but there 's too much waste. Your projection arc will only operate at between 45 and 60 volts; probably about 45 with the amperage you are using. Your current being supplied at 110, it is necessary that you use sufficient resistance (rheostat) to reduce the voltage to that of the arc, and all this represents waste, pure and simple, since the surplus energy used up in resistance is equal, in wattage, to amperes multipl ed by difference between line and arc voltage, thus: suppose you use 20 amperes with a 45-volt arc, taking current from a 110-volt generator. 110—45=65 and 65x24=1506 watts used up in the resistance and only 24x45=1080 watts used for light. Do you see the point? With a 70-volt generator you would only have 70—45=25x24=600 watts wasted. You cannot use a 45-volt generator because it is necessary to have some resistance to act as a cushion for the arc or else you will be unable to handle it satisfactorily. You can use a 60-volt generator and thus reduce the loss somewhat more, but the arc w ll not handle nearly so well. It is possible to use a specially wound generator supplying arc voltage, but such a generator would not, I think, work well with a kerosene engine; also, you could hardly get satisfactory current for incandescent lighting from it. It would vary too much in pressure, since the arc voltage varies, unless an arc controller is used, and that would be too expens ve for you, I should imagine; also it might not work well under the conditions. Therefore, under all the circumstances, I would advise you to get a generator suitable for your work, a d. c. machine, of course, and of ample capacity to supply present and future needs, the generator to be not more than a 70-volt machine. With this you will want about a 20-ampere, 70-volt rheostat. I am requesting one of our advertisers to take the matter up with you at once. You may feel safe in following his advice and in securing the generator he suggests.

Address Unknown.

Joseph E. Bliven, New London, Connecticut, writes:

> W ll you kindly supply me with address of the Wm. Rhodes Film Cleaner makers. Have tried all kinds, but his cleaning compound is the best ever. Are you going to start another series of questions? I received the question booklets and am studying continually. Also have your latest handbook, Hawkins' Guides and all the departments since 1913. My experience 's that the more one studies the more one must. Am running two Power's 6-B machines, motor-driven, giving three shows per day. Am obliged to speed the first night show because the state police have stopped all standing and there is such a crowd that it really is almost imperative to speed the first show in order to give the waiting ones a chance. Personally, I object to running the show any faster than the action calls for, but what is one to do under such circumstances? I trust you will be able to continue the good work for a long time to come

I have the address of the Mortimer, Rex, Ideal and Leland film cleaner manufacturers, but not of Rhodes. That manufacturer has not thought it worth while to bother with the department I guess, though yours is not the only inquiry we have rece ved for his address. Will republish former list of questions when there is a demand for it.

As to your speeding your first show, I well know the difficulty of such a condition, but suppose your manager actually had Clara Kimball Young or Douglas Fairbanks working n a play on his stage under precisely the same conditions. Would he go down to the stage and order them to jump around lively because a crowd waited outside? Would he??? Well, hardly! The difference is that in their shadow form Miss Young and Mr. Fairbanks are helpless. They are at his mercy and he takes advantage of that fact. Is it not so? Th nk it over, friend manager. Is it fair to the artist? Is it fair to your first audience? Think it over.

Absurd.

A. N. Thuness, Spokane, Washington, sends one leaf of a booklet issued by a patent attorney of Washington, D. C., with the remark: "Isn't it surprising what amaz ng knowledge these patent attorneys are possessed of?"

And the Spokane brother is not to be blamed for his indignation. The booklet leaf is really good comedy to one who is in the know. It purports to set forth information of inventions the moving picture industry stands in need of. Here is one paragraph. It is a fair sample of several. Comment is obviously unnecessary.

> "Preventing Flicker in Motion Pictures: One of the most serious objections to the motion picture and one which is causing the medical profession to make vigorous protests 's the flickering or vibrating of the image as shown on the screen. While the camera is perhaps the logical point at which to start in the elimination of this flicker, yet any refinement 'n the projecting apparatus which will aid in accomplishing this desired result will not be passed over by the manufacturers."

Editor Lectures.

On Frday night, November 30, the editor, in response to an invitation, lectured before the International Projection Association, which has headquarters at 652 Bergen avenue, The Bronx, New York City. The subject was Efficiency in Service in Return for Adequate Remuneration. Considering that it was a night of beastly weather, the audience was large and the men listened attentively.

At the end of the address Ira G. Sherman, late of the Moving Picture News, and a member of the association, notified the editor of his election to honorary membership in the body, at the same time presenting a hand-engrossed certificate in token thereof.

The membership is prized for two reasons. First, it was totally unexpected and entirely voluntary on the part of the association. Second, the association seems to be a very live wire. It numbers one hundred members, all operators, and not only affords social entertainment for its members in its club rooms but holds lectures regularly, the same being educational, along projectional lines. The address of the association is as above. Letters to its secretary at that address will reach the body.

Incidentally, the editor is accumulating quite some few memberships, honorary and otherwise. He is honorary member of Hudson County (New Jersey) Local Union 384 and Chicago Local Union No. 110; also of the North Carolina Exhibitors' League and the South Carolina Exhibitors' League; also of the International Projection Association. In addition he is a member of Local Union 306 of the American Projection Society and of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers.

He values the honorary memberships because they have in all cases been entirely unsought, and therefore represent real friendship and friendliness on the part of the unions and leagues.

Correct.

Edward Hitchcock, Painesville, Ohio, answers query propounded in December 1st issue correctly. He says:

> Question—Projecting a given subject at 60 and 70 feet per minute, other conditions precisely the same, will screen brilliancy be the same in both cases? My answer is, Yes! Using a 50-50 three-wing shutter, running at 60, there will be 60 x 16 x 3, equals 2,880 light periods and as many dark ones per minute. By running at 70 we increase the number of light periods and dark periods to 70 x 16 x 3, equals 3,360, but we make them both correspondingly shorter in duration, so that the total amount of light passed is the same. I shall be watching for other expressions of opinion.

Brother Hitchcock not only is correct, but he grasped the idea. It was, of course, purely a revolving shutter question, since it could be nothing else. My compliments! I have had other correct replies, but to date you are the only one who "saw the point" and instantly placed the matter where it belonged. You must have a good think works. My compliments!

Photographic Division of the Signal Corps.

So many inquiries have come in regarding the photographic department in our Army, that the following description will doubtless be of interest both to the inquirers and other readers of this department.

Official war photographers are now with the United States forces in France. Wherever American soldiers and sailors go, they will be followed by the faithful moving picture man, ready at any minute to grind out, "U. S. troops go over the top," or "Heavy gunfire on the firing line." Other members of the photographic division will take "stills," and yet others attached to the aviation sections are preparing to secure photographs of enemy trenches and fortifications in the face of hostile fire.

Our photographic division was planned and built up almost over night. It is only a few weeks old, but already it is one of the most important branches of the service. There are no raw recruits in the division. Every man is there because he can do some particular thing, and do it well. When the War Department decided that the time had come to organize the staff of camera men and laboratory workers, it did not wait for casual volunteers. It got in touch with the Committee on Public Information, and the committee immediately produced data on the best available photo-scientists, moving picture men and still-camera men in the country. Two months later the photographic division of the Signal Corps was occupying four rooms of Washington's priceless office space, and four majors, a captain, two or three dozen lieutenants and a number of enlisted men were directing, studying and experimenting in laboratory, office and training camp. Just exactly how many men are, or will be in the division cannot be made public, as this information would indirectly disclose the number of men abroad.

At the beginning of the war unofficial photographers were allowed on all the war fronts by the foreign authorities. The belligerents quickly learned that this was an unwise procedure, for it resulted in a leakage of valuable military information. Today the official photographer has the field to himself, working as a part of the military machine. The British government has three official camera men to take war news pictures for the public. All our war pictures will also be official, but out news camera force will run into the hundreds.

From abroad we secured the idea of releasing the pictures for the benefit of the war relief societies. The Russian war news pictures are in the hands of the Skobeleff committee, an organization for the relief of Russian wounded in the hands of the enemy. This committee is authorized by the Russian government and headed by a Russian army officer. It sends out its official photographers on assignments, and then manufactures and sells the pictures taken, the proceeds going for the benefit of the relief work. Our use of the Red Cross in this matter will be limited to the distribution of the pictures to picture companies through the nation. A special Red Cross committee will distribute the official pictures that are turned over to it by the Committee on Public Information, and the net profit will be added to the Red Cross fund.

The photographic division is so new that it seems natural to refer to its activities as affairs of the future. The fact is that even now its pictures are being printed in the newly created Signal Corps photo laboratory in Washington, and results of its work are ready for use. Lenses, paper and photographic apparatus of all kinds are being studied and improved, though the most up-to-date and labor-saving equipment is in use.

Many of the officers in charge of the photo laboratory are news photographers who have seen service on every European front. The enlisted camera man faces the same dangers and hardships as the soldier in the front line of trenches, but the civilian war photographer has a few extra worries, such as being continually taken for a spy, and often nearly shot, and having his best pictures held up by the censor. Diplomacy is more essential to him than a passport, for by diplomacy a general may be induced to trot out a battalion or so and stage an attack or shoot off a few four-inch guns. He may even, if properly approached, send his army out of a city already taken and let the camera record the triumphal entry for the benefit of the public. Such pictures are not properly speaking fakes, because they represent true conditions, and merely have the advantage of being taken under favorable circumstances. Most war pictures, however, are snapped without special preparation.

Pictures by our men, stamped with the seal of approval of the Committee on Public Information, will soon be featured at local moving picture theaters. Already they are being displayed in newspapers and magazines. These and other pictures of a more technical or confidential character will be studied in training camps and at the War College. Representative pictures will be laid aside for historical purposes; so that America's share in the great war will be vividly preserved for future generations of Americans.

At the beginning of the present war Germany was the only country prepared to put aerial photography into practice. England, France and Italy had experimented along this line, but a practical camera had not been evolved. Certain early German successes were attributed directly to efficient work of scout photographers, who secured sufficient information to enable German troops to attack without hesitation at critical points. But by October an Italian moving picture camera was taking pictures at a height of 4000 feet, and cameras achieving varying degrees of success have been in use on both sides ever since. Clarity and sharpness of lines and detail are essentials of military photographs. A lack of perspective in pictures taken from directly overhead gives almost the effect of a map, and a map with blurred and hazy lines is not satisfactory in any way. German airplanes falling within the allied lines have several times placed unique cameras in the allies' hands.

Film Shortage Imminent.

In consequence of the urgent need of the Government for nitrates for nitric acid for the manufacture of high explosives, it may become impossible for film manufacturers to obtain enough for the production of tri-nitrocellulose which is the principal ingredient of celluloid.

That this danger is very serious may be judged from the following circular letter sent out to the film producers by the Eastman Kodak Company:

> As there is likely to be an immediate shortage of the ingredients entering into the manufacture of motion-picture film we feel compelled to anticipate this in order to safeguard the industry against possible shortage of all supplies of film. Therefore we would advise you that on and after February 1st next, it will be necessary for you to return to us all the old negative and positive scrap film and worn-out prints that you may have on hand or can accumulate between now and that date. This material we believe we can handle in such a manner as to make it available for the base of motion picture positive film.
> The customers who send in the largest quantity of old film in proportion to their purchases will be the ones who will get the largest quantity of new film in case of a shortage.
> We believe this is a vital matter and urge you to extend your fullest cooperation in order that the manufacture of motion-picture positive film be not curtailed, and trust that you will make an effort to meet the situation by giving positive instructions that all of your accumulation of this material be reserved for us.

Another indication of nitrate shortage is the fact that Du Pont people, the largest manufacturers of explosives and celluloid in the United States, have lately been buying old film which they formerly refused to do saying that it was easier for them to manufacture than to bother with separating the celluloid from the adhering emulsion.

Film stock production has already dropped off 33 1/3 per cent since the beginning of the war and will doubtless be still farther reduced by the demand for chemicals used in the production of explosives.

Army Photographic School.

Sergeant William Groat, photographer for the United States Army, and, as such, official photographer of Pershing's expedition into Mexico, will be in charge of the photographic instruction to be given in the School for Photographers, to be opened in San Antonio, Texas, for the Signal Reserve Corps. Sergeant Groat's pictures already are well known in army circles. On the Mexican expedition alone he took over five thousand views, which have become part of the Signal Corps records.

Instruction for the movie operators who also are to be enlisted to film the Government's record of the War of 1917, will be in charge of Roy E. Reeder, of Eallinger. Mr. Reeder, who is both a motion-picture show proprietor, having a string of shows in Texas, and a student of cinema photography, is considered an expert in that line.

Motion Picture Studio Lighting.

Bulletin No. 77, issued by the Cooper Hewitt Electric Company, Eighth and Grand Streets, Hoboken, New Jersey, treats very fully on motion picture studios and the advantages of Cooper Hewitt Electric Lamps as the ideal light. Fourteen years of cumulative use is the record of one large producing company that installed nearly a thousand of the lamps in their modern plant. One of the illustrations shows a two hundred and thirty-six lamp equipment in a large California studio, and numerous other photographic reproductions add interest to the booklet; one, showing motor driven camera being used for title and cartoon work, being noteworthy.

A copy of this bulletin should be in the hands of every motion picture photographer.

"The Seven Swans"

Paramount Presents Marguerite Clark in a Beautiful Fantasy from Hans Andersen by J. Searle Dawley.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE Seven Swans" is a fairy story, the like of which came not to the most fantastic dreams of childhood before this generation. The poor little picture books of other days than these were as the stage settings of Shakespeare's time compared to the marvelous poetic and historical scenes of modern art. There is no attempt in this fairy story at any painful accuracy of detail, but its beauty is made distractingly realistic by some admirably selected exteriors, which are skilfully intertwined with the studio sets until the illustration is wellnigh perfect.

In one of these exteriors, near the bank of a dark and rapidly-flowing stream, a striking effect has been obtained through double exposure, showing a band of good fairies emerge from the water and dance gracefully on its surface, an exquisite idealization. They do not vanish in thin air, but sink back into the stream, their spiritual dissolution accomplished at the same time. Some of the palace chambers, throne rooms and prison scenes are theatrical, but they become satisfying through careful attention to picture contrast of light and shadow, affording a sub-conscious influence on the spectator.

The same attention to light and shadow gives poetic beauty to the water scenes, most of which are naturally and appropriately framed. As in all spectacles, there is a tendency to overdress the characters, but attention is well-fastened on the star and good taste marks all she wears.

Miss Clark's performance grows in merit as the theme of the tale affords her more emotional opportunity. The idea is that of girlish devotion and self-sacrifice. She must preserve silence under trying circumstances while weaving a spell to restore her seven lost brothers. She weaves in silence when implored to declare her love by Prince Charming, when a word would restore her to her father, when it means death at the stake if she does not speak, weaves up to the last moment, when horrible death is imminent, to be saved and restored to those for whom she has risked so much. Miss Clark endows the character with great sweetness, submission and repressed emotion, displaying high qualities as an artist in subtle revelation of feeling during this trial.

While it is difficult to make a story of this kind interesting in these days of stress and storm, especially when its appeal is to imagination and sympathy of childhood, good construction results, after the action is well under way, in a suspense which holds to the last. The presentation pleased a large audience at The Strand and should prove an exceptionally attractive number for the holidays.

"For Liberty" Has Patriotic Theme.

"For Liberty," one of the latest of the William Fox photoplays in which Gladys Brockwell is starred, has a timely and patriotic theme. Soldiers go "over the top," and the battlefield scenes are among the best in motion pictures.

"Heart of a Lion"

Ralph Connor's Novel "The Doctor," Picturized by Frank Lloyd, with William Farnum in Leading Role.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE recent Fox five-reel picture, "The Heart of a Lion," is taken from Ralph Connor's novel, "The Doctor." William Farnum has the leading role and is supported by Mary Martin and a competent cast. The picture also shows the hallmark of artistic craftsmanship common to all recent Fox productions.

The story has peculiarities that make it hard to accept as probable. The character of the weak brother, played by William Courtleigh, who wanted to be and actually becomes a minister, may be close to records of life; but as it is somewhat out of the expected and unusual, and at the same time a neutral character, it lets that side of the picture sag to the detriment of the whole. Then again, the motivation of the girl who follows the weaker brother to the mining town to protect him, because she has loved and lost the stronger brother, is so suddenly presented that it is weakened dramatically. Taken as a whole it interests and is well made, but in effectiveness falls below the usual Fox offering, it being hardly convincing.

The brother whose heart is as a lion's might have been a great doctor but stays on the farm to send his younger brother to college that he may become a minister. The brother drinks, gambles and wastes money till the brother has to sell the farm. The daughter of the village doctor loves the older brother, but he falls in love with one of her girl friends. When the farm is sold, he goes to remonstrate with the younger man and finds him in the arms of the girl who had promised him. Then he disappears. When we next see him he is a doctor in the roughest kind of mining town. The other brother repents and really becomes a minister. He is sent to the same town and the girl goes with him as a hospital nurse. The dive-keeper shoots the minister almost as soon as he arrives and bets $1,000 that there won't be any sermon. The doctor preaches it with a revolver ready, and when the minister dies "gets" the ruffian.

"Stolen Hours"

Ethel Clayton in Five-Part World Photoplay by Olive Wadsley Has Congenial Role in Romantic Story of Modern London.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

GAMBLERS, members of the British Parliament, low life and high life, are to be found in "Stolen Hours," a five-part World photoplay written by Olive Wadsley and directed by Travers Vale, with Ethel Clayton as Diana Lester, the heroine. The story is a modern romance of fair quality and will serve to interest those who are not inclined to pry beneath the surface of things and are satisfied to take the work at the author's valuation. The situations range from a session of the House of Parliament to a gambling house raid and shows the honorable Hugh Carton escaping from the police by the aid of the heroine and, in return, taking the lady to his apartments and leaving her to don a pair of his pajamas and stow herself away in his bed, while he finishes the night at the club.

Diana is the daughter of a gambler always out of luck until he marries the owner of a fashionable gambling house; and the girl is left in charge of the place when the couple start on their honeymoon. This is when she helps Carton to escape the raid, and inspires the young man with love for her. There is a serious obstacle to their marriage, however. The young member of Parliament is already married and his wife refuses to let him get a divorce. He treats Diana most honorably, in spite of this, gets her a position as companion to his sister and, finally, after the usual amount of difficulties the pair find an open road to happiness.

Barring the House of Parliament scene, "Stolen Hours" is well produced, and the character of Diana is excellenly played by Ethel Clayton. Her support is equal to all demands. It consists of John Bowers, Joseph Herbert, Louise De Rigney, Jack Drumier, Victor Kennard, Frank Mayo, Richard Clarke, and Lila Chester. Photographed by Max Schneider.

"Her Second Husband"

Edna Goodrich Featured in Five-Part Mutual Production Does Commendable Work in Poorly Constructed Photoplay.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE five-part production, entitled "Her Second Husband," betrays no inclination to make good on its title until the last reel. The picture appears on the Mutual program and features Edna Goodrich arrayed in many beautiful gowns. Its story is interesting and human, but in its screen arrangement it has not been constructed effectively; many trifling details might have been added in the composition of the picture which would have helped the human interest and intensified dramatic situations. The star has on the whole done good work; but our impression is that a variety of color in the emotional element might have been appreciated.

As the story runs a coolness arises between a young married couple through failure of each to understand the other. The husband's failing seems to be a fondness for his club and the friends he meets there, while the young wife develops a tendency to nag. The result of an invitation extended by the husband to a club friend to come to dinner and bring with him a questionable sort of woman with whom he has made a date on that particular night is a suit for divorce entered by each. After the granting of a divorce and many regretful days spent by both there is a final effective move on the part of the man which brings things to a happy climax with the aid of a justice of the peace.

"His Own People"

Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature Presents Harry Morey in Romantic Role of Irish Blacksmith.

Received by Margaret I. MacDonald.

A THOROUGHLY human portrayal of simple Irish types will be found in the five-part Blue Ribbon Feature entitled "His Own People." The story on which the production is based is wholesome and unusual in style, and contains both pathos and humor. William P. S. Earle has succeeded well in converting the story of William Addison Lathrop into a pleasing screen romance.

A good cast, headed by Harry Morey, and including Gladys Leslie, Arthur Donaldson, William Dunn, Betty Blythe and Stanley Dunn, has added a large quota to the enjoyment of the picture. The detail of the production is especially fine, and it is a noticeable fact that the livestock dear to the Irish heart has not been forgotten. The atmosphere of the picture seems to be well-night perfect. There are dramatic situations in plenty, the action is consistent, the characterization is well portrayed and interesting and the emotional flow easy and natural. In short, the production is one that will be enjoyed.

The story of the picture is simple and human enough to hold our attention all the way. The good-natured Irish blacksmith in love with pretty Molly Conway rewards each naughty prank of the pretty Irish girl with a kiss for which he receives only an angry frown. One day a certain Lady Mary Thorne passes by and in passing looks with favor on the manly blacksmith, inviting the jealousy of Molly. Lady Mary's interest in the young man develops into love and an invitation to visit her at her cousin's home introduces a wealth of comedy as well as an intensely dramatic situation in which a refusal on the part of the blacksmith to return the love of the woman above him in station, and the seizure and imprisonment of Molly by Lady Mary's profligate cousin while she jealously peered through the window at her lover in company with another woman happen simultaneously.

The consequent estrangement of the humble pair is quickly righted by the clever interference of the village schoolmaster.

"The German Curse in Russia"

Pathe Releases Five-Reel War Subject Containing Scenes of the Utmost Historical Importance.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

IT WOULD be impossible to exaggerate the significance of such a compilation of views as has been here assembled by Captain Donald C. Thompson. The difficulty a reviewer experiences is in finding words that measure up to the subject matter, for it is a veritable case of "History While You Wait."

These five reels of film undoubtedly contain as much live history in the making as any that have been taken during the war. They constitute an invaluable record of affairs in Russia from the beginning of the war in August, 1914, showing scenes attending the establishment of the Russian republic, and then the sad demoralization which followed upon the heels of German treachery and propaganda. There are actual fighting scenes ,taken at great risk by the photographer. Men are shown in the trenches at close quarters with the enemy, many of them falling under fire. No effort has been made to soften the stark realism of war, and views of the dead and dying are frequently shown; also instances of special heroism, as where one private carries his wounded captain off the field on his back.

The eager student of current history will be particularly grateful to Captain Thompson for the actual information the reels contain. There are thrills and horrors without number, but these are of secondary importance compared to the grasp it gives the observer of tremendous events as they have been occurring. The sight of the vast throngs in the streets of Petrograd, first under one set of circumstances and then under another, until the people have lost all power for logical thought, is one not soon to be forgotten. It is easy to understand how Germany, possessing the only organized existent force in Petrograd, was able to undermine the heroic work of Kerensky and the faithful battalions of death.

It is impossible to enumerate, from a single showing, all of the important scenes in this collection of views. Among them are the destruction of a U-boat and other vessels under fire, the Duma and Council of Workmen and Soldiers in session, Scene from "The German Curse in Russia" (Pathe).

Lenine haranguing in the streets of Petrograd, the attack on the Duma, march of 15,000 anarchists, close-ups of Kerensky, Elihu Root and the American commission, David R. Francis and Mrs. Pankhurst. Particularly notable are the scenes showing the formation of the women's death battalions, the organization of the Bolsheviki, the fraternizing on the front which deceived Russian soldiers, and the later efforts to retake lost trenches. These latter fighting scenes are among the most realistic taken since the war began.

Triangle Five-Reelers

"The Man Above the Law," Novel Western Story Featuring Jack Richardson, and "Framing Framers," Political Satire, Charles Gunn at Head of Cast.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

"The Man Above the Law."

NOVEL story, picturesque scenes, and a well balanced cast are all found in "The Man Above the Law," a five-part Triangle photoplay written by Lanier Bartlett and directed by Raymond Wells. The author has built his story of strongly contrasted characters and gone to New Mexico for his locations. The situations are often dramatic, but they arise naturally and are consistent with the men and women who people the play. And it is worthy of note that the author has had the strength of mind to ignore the "happy ending." The one he uses is logical and right, and does not sacrifice truth to sentimentality. The heroine in "The Man Above the Law" is too honest with herself to come between a man and his wife even when the woman is a half-breed a creature of savage instincts, half Indian and half White.

Duke Chalmers, the character who gives the picture its title, is one of those selfish beings who refuses to adapt himself to circumstances. Well educated and well equipped, physically and mentally, for some fancied wrong done him by society he cuts himself off from civilization by marrying a Navaho woman and becoming the ruler of a small settlement in New Mexico. He supports himself by selling supplies and whiskey to the Indians. When his little daughter is about seven years of age, Esther Brown, a young girl from the East, opens a school in the village. Chalmers refuses to let his child attend, telling the little Tonah that she is better off without learning to read the white man's books.

Esther will not give up Tonah as a pupil, and the child learns to love her. This makes her Indian mother very jealous, and later she discovers that her husband and the school teacher have become greatly interested in each other. Chalmers has saved Esther from a pair of drunken Mexicans and protected her in other ways. The temptation to follow their desires almost overwhelms them, but Esther shows Chalmers the path of duty. He takes his Indian wife and their child and rides out of her life forever.

The four leading characters in "The Man Above the Law" call for players of deep sensibility; they are found at the head of the cast. Jack Richardson as Chalmers, Josie Sedgwick as Esther, and Claire McDowell as the Indian woman are three of the actors in question. They leave nothing to be added to their work. The fourth member of the quartet is May Giracia, who plays the child Tonah. Her portrayal of the little Indian girl is without a flaw.

The photography reflects much credit upon Pliny Horn.

"Framing Framers."

Charles Gunn is the star actor in "Framing Framers," a five-part Triangle political story written by Philip J. Hura. The part played by the man at the head of the cast is called Gordon Travis. He is supposed to be a newspaper reporter who is ambitious to become a famous novelist, but ends by marrying the daughter of a prominent politician and being put up for mayor of his town. Before this is brought about he lets his devotion to his news gathering instinct get him into serious trouble, and is beaten by two thugs hired by his future father-in-law when he insists upon finding out why a wedding ceremony that was to have taken place between the future Mrs. Travis and a young chap named Lonnie Gorman has not been performed. He has numerous other adventures after being picked up insensible from the beating by a rival politician who is running against Gordon's prospective father-in-law. The rival takes Gordon for a tramp, and thinks it will be a good joke on the other candidate's family if he fixes Travis up and passes him off as a man of wealth and helps him to marry Ruth Westfall, the other candidate's daughter. Gordon, who is already in love with Ruth, turns the tables by winning the girl fairly, and then making both candidates for mayor resign in favor of himself.

The story has the merit of lively action, and Charles Gunn plays the reporter-hero with breezy likeableness. He is excellently supported by Edwin Jobson, George Pierce, Laura Sears, Edward Martin, Lee Phelps, Mildred Delphine, Eugene Burr, Anna Dodge, Vernon Peterson and Leo Willis.

"The Grand Passion"

Jewel Production, in Seven Reels, Features Dorothy Phillips in Story of Strong Melodramatic Interest.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

"THE GRAND PASSION" is not a problem story, as the title would indicate, but a frankly melodramatic offering, with the scenes laid in a rough Western camp near which a powder plant is located. The town of Powderville is presided over by a boss named Dick Evans. This boss owns a newspaper known as The Trumpet, but he has never used it for reform purposes, being content to levy a certain toll upon the dance halls and saloons as a price for his silence.

The story opens with the advent of the girl, Viola, the niece of a Greek merchant, and the reporter, Jack Ripley. Jack comes to take the job as editor of The Trumpet, and is already in love with Viola, whom he had rendered a service while traveling. Dick Evans also falls in love with the girl, and throughout the story both employer and reporter are rivals for her affections, though their own friendly relations continue through the stress of many exciting situations.

It is doubtful if the atmosphere of a genuinely "bad town" was ever more faithfully rendered up in moving pictures. Certainly, after the glimpses of "Little Hell" and "Death Valley," both sections of the camp, the observer is well prepared for sanguinary occurrences. These latter occur in good measure; the reporter is drugged and robbed while on his first assignment, the boss is assaulted after deciding to reform the town, the girl is kidnapped and then rescued from a burning house in the red light district, and the final scenes picture a prolonged assault upon the office of the newspaper and the explosion of the powder plant.

The picture is fairly riotous with action, and might be depressing except for the fact that there is so much humor scattered through it. Some of this humor grows out of serious situations, but it is there none the less, and tones down the events in a desirable way. There are some incongruities in development, but the melodrama, as a whole, is fascinating and satisfying.

The story was written by Thomas Addison and produced by Scene from "The Grand Passion" (Jewel).

Ida May Park. Dorothy Phillips plays the part of Viola with her usual appeal; William Stowell plays Dick Evans, who finally wins the girl; Jack Mulhall, the reporter, and Lon Chaney, the uncle. Others in the cast are Evelyn Selbie, Bert Appling, and Alfred Allen.

Good Cast for Coming Martin Subject.

For Vivian Martin's next Paramount picture there has been assembled a cast that would do justice to any feature picture. Two of the principal parts are Captain Shad Gould and Zoeth Hamilton, and these are played by Theodore Roberts and James Neill, two of the most capable character men on the screen.

Harrison Ford is cast as the young leading man, Crawford Smith son of the absconding partner. Vivian Martin and Harrison Ford, as screen lovers, will be remembered from "Molly Entangled." Jane Wolfe appears in the cast as Mrs. Young, and Helen Gillmore as Mrs. Hobbs. Richard Cummings plays the role of Rastus Young, Bert Hadley appears as Edgar Farmer, while John Burton is cast as Judge Baxter.

"The Kingdom of Love"

Story of Recent Fox Picture Is a Sensation—Jewel Carmen Shows Limitations, but Handles Role with Compelling Power.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE new Fox player, Jewel Carmen, opens a bright screen career with the role of Violet Dale in "The Kingdom of Love," which she handles with compelling power, although in one group of scenes, in which Violet auctions herself off for money to save her mother's life, she gets for a minute into a field in which, had she filled it, she might at one leap have made herself the leading screen actress. She fails to fill it. Her high note in this picture is passion, not grovelling, but high-pitched and triumphant. She reaches a true distinction in many scenes of a story that will force absorbing attention from all in the audience. It certainly took powerfully at the Fox City theater on Fourteenth street, New York.

The story is an almost startling sensation. Things happen in it that are human and believable, though daring to a degree, and it may excite bitter animosity in some. It shoots an arrow of passion to the heart of the spectator and can hardly be recommended for immature minds. The girl, left alone in Alaska by the death of her father, earns her living as an attraction in a rough dance hall, though maintaining her personal virtue. A young man comes and falls in love with her. She discovers that he is her brother, but is ashamed to own up.

A young minister, honest, straight and forthright, is trying to down the dance hall. He is interested in both the lad and in Violet. The boy learns that his mother needs an operation to save her life and lacks the means. Violet runs to the dance hall and on a table offers herself to the highest bidder. The minister, who knows the reason, bids and wins. To pay he has to borrow from the keeper of the hall. If he cannot repay he must serve body and soul for ten years, and after dramatic incidents he does pay.

The plot is by Doty Hobart, and the director is Frank Lloyd. L. C. Shumway plays the minister, Murdock MacQuarrie the hall-keeper, G. Raymond Nye a rough character, and Fred Milton the girl's brother.

"Toto Comedy"

Rolin-Pathe Subject Introduces Former Hippodrome Clown in Laughable Knockabout Merrymaking.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

TOTO is to make his bow to the picture going public in a Rolin production of two reels, released by Pathe, entitled "The Movie Dummy." This is an admirable selection for his opening number. It is extremely funny and at the same time puts Toto through his best paces, demonstrating some new and individual variations of the type of humor often referred to as slapstick comedy.

Toto's forte is really expert clowning, in which role he first appeared in this country at the Hippodrome. His name is said to be Novello, and he is probably an Italian by birth, but he has had a thorough schooling in French pantomime. He is small in stature and a remarkable gymnast, a fact repeatedly made evident in his work as the "dummy." In this part he lies limp on the floor and permits himself to be thrown around or hung on a hook beside the real dummies, during which performance he is to all intents lifeless, except for an occasional wink or the movement of an arm or leg. His work in this part alone proves his wonderful physical dexterity and also his capacity for eccentric comedy.

The plot of "The Dummy" is one especially devised for exploiting Toto's unusual abilities. He first appears as a tailor's assistant at a moving picture studio. A male dummy is required in the dressing room of one of the feminine stars. Toto substitutes himself for the real dummy, is packed into an incredibly small box, and reaches the star's room safely. Here he is subjected to some rough and painful treatment. When his trick is discovered he leaves hastily. Further developments occur in a restaurant, where Toto appears dressed as a girl.

This number was directed by Hal Roach, and in the supporting cast are Kathlyn O'Connor, Bud Jamieson and Marie Mosquini.

The Toto comedy is certain to make a particular appeal to children, and its humor is clean and inoffensive.

"His Mother's Boy"

With Very Ingenuous Hero, Paramount Picture Works Up to Amply Satisfying Climax—First Two-Thirds Most Leisurely.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

AFTER spending rather too much time drawing its situation, the recent Ince Paramount picture, "His Mother's Boy," five reels, gets down to the business of making us vividly realize the potentialities of a boy's soul when unexpected emotions have shaken him to the roots. It was not very bad art to make him too ingenuous for belief at the start, since a sharp contrast is being aimed at, and the boy's state of mind is perhaps accurately symbolized by these almost childish awkward actions; but in life there is restraint and where the over accentuation is carried too far the result is a touch of unreality and a measure of weariness. A feature must be five reels long and the drama part of this picture is so valuable that the spectator will be glad he sat through the first three reels after he's seen it all.

"His Mother's Boy" is played by Charles Ray and the opening scenes are in a New England village in the characters of which there is too little reality. The boy is a softy, petted by his mother; but is stung by the accusation of the villagers that his dead father swindled them by inducing them to buy shares in an oil well that has cut dividends. He leaves his mother to find out why the well is no longer paying. He gets in a rough town and plays the simpleton. Banty (William Elmer), the foreman, is stealing the oil. He gives the boy a job. With all a ruffian's strength he has picked out a pretty girl of the community (Doris Lee), but she and the boy fall in love. The boy has discovered the secret of the well. The climax comes when Banty finds that the boy and girl understand each other. He orders the boy to leave town or be shot. The boy is a pacifist who would rather be killed than shed blood. That is the way he has been brought up. The girl pretends she despises him so he'll save himself. He at first decides to stay and be killed; but at the last minute is going when he hears what the ruffian intends to do to the girl. He makes a jump for him and there's a fight. Someone puts a pistol in his hand and he fires. The ruffian is not killed, but turns coward. This part of the picture is great. It was directed by V. L. Schertzinger and picturized from Rupert Hughes' story, "When Life Is Marked Down," by Ella Carson.

Issue Five of Argus Pictorial Released January 13.

The fifth issue of the Argus Pictorial, Pathe's new screen magazine in one reel, will be released January 13. This is an interesting number. The Argus Pictorial has been booked at the Strand theater, New York. "Gold Beating" is the title of the first article, and shows an industry which has not changed since the days of ancient Egypt. "Two tiny wonders of nature," the vorticella and the monstyla, are shown in another article, and the last part of the film is devoted to the bag worm, a curious little pest which fills its house as it grows.

"Bud's Recruit" and "The Last Leaf"

General Film Company Releases First of Judge Brown Stories and a New O. Henry Offering, Two Reels Each.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THE first of a series of stories by Judge Willis Brown to be released by the General Film Company, "Bud's Recruit," is a pleasing patriotic offering. There is considerable humor in the story and a pleasing juvenile note. Judge Brown is an authority in juvenile court affairs, and many of his stories are based upon actual observations and experiences with boys.

The plot of this story concerns a boy named Bud, who has organized a company of his young friends, and drills them regularly. Bud's elder brother, Reggie, is a slacker who attends pacifist meetings with his mother much to Bud's disgust. The latter, finally revolting against this, makes up with a mustache and glasses, goes down to the recruiting station, and fills out an application in Reggie's name. This results in awakening Reggie's manhood and also raises him in his sweetheart's estimation. The subject has a good human touch, and gets over nicely. Wallis Brennan appears as Bud. Robert Gordon as Reggie, and Ruth Hampton as the girl. King H. Vidor directed the production.

"The Last Leaf" is a sad little story, one of the most poignant O. Henry ever wrote, and is presented very effectively in this number. It is located in Greenwich Village, and was taken there and in Washington Square under direction of Ashley Miller.

The story concerns two girl artists and an old man named Behrman, also an artist. The latter has been trying for forty years to paint a masterpiece. As the story goes, one of the girls is taken down with pneumonia. She watches the falling leaves on the vine across from her window until all have fallen except one. When this one goes she expects to die. But in the morning, after a hard storm, the leaf is still there, and the girl immediately begins to recover. But Behrman, the old artist, is stricken, having gone out in the rain to paint the leaf on the wall—his masterpiece. Bernard Siegel appears as Behrman, Mildred Manning as Sue, and Patsy DeForest as Johanna.

"The City of the Purple Dreams"

Exhibitors' Operating Corporation Releases Seven-Reel Subject, Adapted from Novel of Same Name.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS seven-reel offering is based on a novel written by Edwin Baird, and was produced by Colin Campbell. Thomas Santschi is cast in the leading role, that of a derelict. Of the two feminine characters, Bessie Eyton appears as the wealthy girl and Fritzi Brunette as Esther, the girl anarchist. These three are the chief roles, the only two others of any great consequence to the story being the wealthy girl's father and an anarchist named Olaf.

The story opens with an encounter between the derelict, a young, strong-looking fellow, and the wealthy girl. Her auto just misses bumping into him, and out of sympathy Miss Otis gives him a dollar, adding a word of advice, "Clean up and keep clean." The derelict begins to act on this good advice, but later meets Esther, the anarchist. She falls in love with him, and advises him to "take what is yours."

The opening of the narrative presents an interesting situation, but unfortunately subsequent developments prove disappointing. The hero quickly loses sympathy when he proceeds to do so many unscrupulous things. He threatens to blow up the millionaire, Otis, unless he gives him ten thousand dollars. For this action he is committed to an asylum from which Esther helps him to escape. He knows of Esther's love for him, but proves untrue to her, and, in the course of the story, after he has won great wealth by crooked means, he marries Miss Otis.

It would have been the logical thing for him to marry Esther, instead of which he permits her to take her own life. As the story goes the derelict turns out to be a gentleman by birth, descended from an old Virginia family but the average observer will probably feel that this only made worse his frequent lapses from the straight and narrow path.

There are undoubtedly certain good points about this production, but these are greatly weighed down by weaknesses that affect the whole tone of the story in a damaging way.

"Red, White and Blue Blood"

Entertaining Five-Reel Metro Production Features Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in a Story of Society.

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell.

SOCIETY life on Long Island supplies the background for "Red, White and Blue Blood," the five-reel Metro released December 24. It is not a patriotic subject, the title being used to designate a typical American, the role portrayed by Francis X. Bushman. It is a light, breezy picture, except for a few tenement scenes, and one of the most entertaining in which Bushman and Beverly Bayne have appeared recently; although convenient coincidences bring the hero on the scene in time to be of assistance to the heroine on more than an ordinary number of occasions.

John Spaulding, in the West, rescues Helen Malloy-Smythe and her mother when their train is attacked by bandits. Later, on Long Island, John finds that Helen lives on the next estate, and again rescues her when her motorboat runs wild. He determines to put a heart into the social butterfly on learning she has jilted his best friend and five others that season. He succeeds by taking her to the slums and showing her poverty in its worst forms, but loses his own heart in the bargain. John's father discovers that Helen's mother is an acquaintance of former days in the mining camps when they were both poor, and he tells her of John's plan. Helen breaks the engagement and accepts a fortune hunting bogus count. During a fox hunt, Helen falls from her horse, and John again comes to her assistance. Later he traps the "count" while he is trying to steal the family jewels, and all ends happily.

As John Spaulding, Bushman has a congenial role, which he handles to the satisfaction of his admirers, and Beverly Bayne makes a pleasing Helen. These two featured players have been surrounded with a competent cast, including Duncan McRae, Cecil Fletcher, Jack Raymond, C. R. McKinney, and Arthur Houseman. Much of the comedy is supplied by Adella Barker as Mrs. Malloy-Smythe, who wishes to forget her lowly origin, and William H. Tooker as the elder Spaulding, who persists in reminding her of it at the wrong time.

The production is an adaptation by June Mathis of a story by Shannon Fife, and has been capably directed by Charles J. Brabin. The scenes of the fox hunt on Long Island, with a number of riders taking the jumps over fences and other obstacles, are particularly good; also the scene in which Spaulding is substituted for the "count" when the engagement is announced is cleverly handled.

Military Heads Approve Jewel Slogan.

Jewel Productions, Inc., believing optimism is necessary in all branches of the trade, is pushing its battle slogan, "Smiles Help Win the War." Among the latest to take notice of the movement are Secretary of the Navy Daniels and Secretary of War Baker.

"The Screen Fan"

First of James Montgomery Flagg Series, "Girls You All Know," Is Amusing Presentation of Well-Known Type.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

JUDGING from the first offense it was a happy thought that suggested screen presentation of James Montgomery Flagg ideas. The first of the series entitled "Girls You All Know," being produced by the Edison Company and released through the George Kleine system, was well received at the Strand theater during Christmas week. The individual name of this one-reel picture is "The Screen Fan," and in the sentimental young woman who not only adores the people of the silent drama but aspires to the realms of stardom herself is amusingly presented.

The opening of the picture shows the artist equipped with his pencil paraphernalia commencing his work of sketching in various moods a young woman seated in front of him to whom he relates the story of the character for which she is to pose. Then follows the film version of the story in which the screen fan in the shape of a pretty young woman sits in the front row at the theater, her countenance reflecting colorfully the tragedy of the screen.

In due time aspirations become reality. and we find our heroine in close proximity with the Cooper Hewitts. But while she awaits the call of the director she falls asleep and dreams a wonderful dream in which she becomes the leading woman of the play, living in ease and affluence, and treated with a heavenly respect such as none of her kind in wildest dreams has ever imagined. Finally the dream has a rude awakening in which the director summons her to enter a lion's cage to "make meat for the lion," assuring her that he "will be right outside and everything."

The production is well made and contains a well defined vein of humor.

Metro to Expand on Plays and Novels

President Rowland Believes Stories That Have Received Public Approval Are Strongest for the Screen.

SCREEN dramas adapted from popular novels and Broadway plays have contributed so largely to the success of the Metro Star Series the past year that Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation, has decided to expand the company's policies along these lines for the coming year. Mr. Rowland believes that stories which have already won the approval of the public in other forms have a drawing power not always found in original scenarios. This is particularly true, he says, of widely read novels and also of plays that have attained the indorsement of the most captious on Broadway.

"Daybreak" and "An American Widow," two recent Metro Star Series productions made from plays that have had long runs on Broadway, have been acclaimed by critics as among the best pictures Metro has ever made. The first is the starring vehicle of the versatile Emily Stevens, and was written by Jane Cowl and Jane Murfin. The second is a screen version of Kellett Chambers' Broadway success. It was selected by Ethel Barrymore as the first of her series of smart comedies she is to do for Metro the coming year.

Maxwell Karger, general manager of the Metro studio; B. A. Rolfe, Metro's Western representative, and Fred J. Balshofer, president of the Metro-Yorke company, all heartily support Mr. Rowland's policy, as past results have borne out the wisdom of such adaptions.

Oddly, Metro's first picture was adapted from a play. This was the popular, "The Three of Us," by Rachel Crothers, starring Mabel Taliaferro. And one of the firm's most recent announcements is that Edith Storey will be starred in a screen version of "The Claim," a play by Charles Kenyon, author of "Kindling," and Frank Dare, which has been seen on Broadway during the present season.

Mutual Releases for January.

Mutual releases for January include some of the most attractive offerings ever put out under these auspices. Perhaps one of the most striking of the new productions is that starring William Russell, famed as the athletic Adonis of the screen, entitled "In Bad."

This play is undoubtedly one of the best in the entire Russell repertoire. It reveals the sterling young actor in a role that suits him admirably and in which he displays his acknowledged ability in its highest level. The play is scheduled for release January 21.

"M'lle Tiptoe," starring the fascinating little Mary Miles Minter, is considered by critics to be one of Miss Minter's most appealing plays. The release date is January 28.

"Molly Go Get 'Em," featuring Margarita Fischer, is the story of a little society tomboy who resents being kept in leading strings when she is seventeen and makes things lively for her family. The release date is January 7.

"The Impostor," starring that brilliant actress, Ann Murdock, is a gripping drama that fits Miss Murdock's genius. It is set for release January 14.

Hodkinson's Partnership Plan

Exchangeman Tells How He Proposes to Give Exhibitors a Share of the Profits.

PARTNERSHIPS with important exhibitors and important groups of exhibitors in exchange and strategic centers is announced this week as the next step to be taken by W. W. Hodkinson. This is contained in an outline of what is described as the "New Hodkinson Circle" and gives the first complete story of the Hodkinson organization plan.

In his statement Mr. Hodkinson points out that the motion picture plus with all its great possibilities for production and also as a guarantee of quality is but one of the forces which he is bringing to bear in the solution of the problems of the hour. He speaks of three other forces which he has already announced, (1) a standard product of high quality represented by Paralta Plays, with J. Warren Kerrigan, Bessie Barriscale and Henry B. Walthall, (2) the arrangement for exchange service with the General Film Company, (3) business principles represented by a distributing organization without control by producers or exhibitors.

Regarding the exhibitor partnerships, Mr. Hodkinson points out two advantages to the exhibitors: first, a continued service of quality productions which is not dependent upon a franchise or contract and second, a large share of the distribution profits which he has announced previously.

The next two steps toward the completion of what he describes as the New Circle will be (1) a tie-up with producers which will free them from the limitations consequent to their assuming the distributing problem and (2) the support of the public secured by national advertising. This national advertising will be tied to the Motion Picture Plus with "its unmistakable trademark on the screen in shape and size."

In discussing the announcement of the partnership for the exhibitors Mr. Hodkinson said Friday:

"I shall elaborate this arrangement later. I can say now only that this is in line with my plans for the ultimate type of organization which I explained in my open letter to Mr. Mastbaum, which I have now had printed in booklet form for free distribution to all who are interested. My idea is that the important exhibitors must in the nature of this business be depended upon to support the producer through fair and unbiasted distribution organizations. As I have said many times, the exhibitor is naturally so much interested in his own problems that he cannot be entirely fair to the producer any more than the producer can be entirely fair to him. Only by working through a distributor who understands both sides can we hope to achieve the perfect balance between production and exhibition which we must look for.

"However, the exhibitor is really entitled to a large share of the profits of distribution, although he is unfitted to perform the functions of distribution. My plan is therefore to tie in the exhibitor with me so that he shall receive the largest share of distribution profits in return for his support. In addition he is entitled to have that assurance of the support of the producers and the talent which they employ, which many exhibitors are now seeking through the formation of their own distribution companies. All this I expect to guarantee through my partnership plan. The details of this plan I am explaining fully to the exhibitors who are interested. As I have evolved my plan of organization through years of study and intimate contact with exhibitors, I believe that it is fair in every detail. I may perhaps add that the important exhibitors who are already in partnership with me in their locations have unanimously approved the plan upon which this relationship has been formed.

"I want to add the repetition of the promise which I have already made, that is, that there is a contact with us for every fit element in the business."

"Empty Pockets" in Hands of Exhibitors.

"Empty Pockets," the mystery story by Rupert Hughes which Herbert Brenon has made into a photoplay, has passed into the hands of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. Numerous prints have been shipped from the Brenon laboratories on Hudson Heights to the various theaters of the First National exhibitors throughout the country, and already many principal theaters of the circuit have run the film with general enthusiam.

Mr. Brenon's second melodrama bids fair to outdo the first in popularity, and that is saying a great deal when it is remembered the unqualified success with which the "The Lone Wolf" was greeted in every state in the Union. It is still much in demand, many theaters requiring bookings two and three times over.

Vignola Renews Paramount Contract.

Robert G. Vignola, who for two and a half years has been one of Famous Players' most successful and artistic directors, has just renewed his contract for a year. Of late, Mr. Vignola has been personal director for Pauline Frederick in almost all of her Paramount pictures. He his displayed an ingenuity and artistic conception of picture drama and an ability to procure remarkably fine results in such a way that he now ranks as one of the foremost directors.

Comments on the Films

EXCLUSIVELY BY OUR OWN STAFF

General Film Company.

WEDDING BELLS AND LUNATICS (Selburn).—A one-reel comedy, featuring Neal Burns and Gertrude Selby. The action revolves around the prank of some of Neal's friends who kidnap him just before his wedding. One of the inmates of a lunatic asylum is substituted, Neal escapes and reaches the church just in time. The plot is slight, and not always easily followed, however, the situations are amusing.

THE LAST LEAF (Broadway Star Feature).—An O. Henry story in two reels, featuring Bernard Siegel, Mildred Manning and Patsy De Forest. This is a sad little tale of Greenwich Village. It tells of an aged artist who gives his life in painting a leaf on the wall opposite the window of a sick girl, the latter thinking she will surely die when the last leaf has fallen. This is a well-handled number of the pathetic type.

THROUGH CANADA FROM COAST TO COAST (Essanay).—No. 6 of "The Wonders of Nature and Science" series. This is an excellent scenic subject, beginning with scenes taken in Nova Scotia and all along the line to British Columbia. Toronto, Montreal, Sault Ste. Marie and other important cities are shown; also a great deal of interesting mountain scenery.

BUD'S RECRUIT (General Film).—A two-reel story, written by Judge Brown and directed by King H. Vidor. The story concerns a patriotic lad, who is disgusted because his elder brother does not enlist. He makes up, with mustache and spectacles, and goes to recruiting headquarters, where he fills out an application in his brother's name. There is the usual love story and a strong juvenile interest. The story is very human and appealing.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

THE GIRL BY THE ROADSIDE, Dec. 31.—Violet Mersereau is the star of this five-part screen version of the story by Varick Vanardy. The picture was directed by Theodore Marston and has a melodramatic finish. A longer review was printed in last week's issue.

Fox Film Corporation.

HEART OF A LION, Dec. 16.—A five-reel picture from a story by Ralph Connor, "The Doctor." William Farnum has the leading role and is supported by a competent cast of players. The craftsmanship is able and up to the Fox standard, but the story, while it interests, has one not really dramatic character which makes it somewhat unconvincing. A longer notice will be found on another page of this issue.

THE KINGDOM OF LOVE, Dec. 23.—A picture that holds with exceptional power. It tells a passionate love story and handles delicate situations without offense. Yet it is likely to cause bitter enmity in certain narrow minds. It is a picture worth seeing and will make a hit in city theaters. For a longer notice look on another page of this issue.

Greater Vitagraph, Inc.

HIS OWN PEOPLE (Vitagraph), Dec. 31.—A five-part romantic comedy-drama featuring Harry Morey, with Gladys Leslie playing opposite him. The picture is founded on a story of rural Irish life and will be enjoyed by all. A full review will be found elsewhere.

W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

MADAM WHO? (Paralta-Hodkinson).—Through a misunderstanding this photoplay was reviewed last week as a feature of the General Film Company. As has been announced, Paralta Plays are being distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, which is using the well-equipped exchange system of the General for the physical handling of its product, while the sales campaign and sales methods are entirely under the direction of the Hodkinson office in New York.

Jewel Productions, Inc.

THE GRAND PASSION (Jewel).—A seven-reel story of a pronounced melodramatic type, written by Thomas Addison and produced by Ida May Park. Dorothy Phillips, William Stowell and Jack Mulhall play the leads. The story is located in a "bad" Western camp, near which a powder plant is located. The atmosphere of the place is strongly painted. The events are stirring and exciting and at the same time relieved by considerable humor. The offering is an enjoyable one of its kind and holds the interest firmly, despite certain unconvincing situations and some over-acting. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

George Kleine System.

BROWN OF HARVARD (Selig-Perfection Pictures).—Six-part screen version of the well-known stage play written by Rida Johnson Young and Gilbert P. Coleman, this picture will find plenty of admirers. It is full of the spirit of youth and is capitally played by a company headed by Tom Moore and Hazel Daly. It was reviewed at length in last week's issue.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

RED, WHITE AND BLUE BLOOD, Dec. 24.—A five-reel production featuring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, reviewed at length on another page of this issue. It is a society story presenting Bushman in a typical role, and contains some excellent scenes of a fox hunt. The action is interesting, although the story is weakened by the number of instances when the heroine is in difficulty and the hero is on hand in time to be of assistance.

Mutual Film Corporation.

JERRY'S BEST FRIEND (Cub), Dec. 26.—The most attractive feature in this picture is the work of a fine white horse which proves to be the hero's best friend, aiding him to escape certain bandits, unfastening ropes with which he is bound, etc. Considerable chasing about takes place in the picture which is above the average of the George Ovey pictures.

HER SECOND HUSBAND (Goodrich), Dec. 31.—A five-part production in which Edna Goodrich does moderately good work. The story of the picture is interesting but has not been presented on the screen with as good effect as was possible. A full review will be found elsewhere.

HER AWFUL FIX (Strand), Jan. 2.—A rather amusing situation develops in this number of the Strand comedies, in which a case of prickly heat, mistaken for small pox, causes no end of trouble to a young couple about to be married. The bride, entering the home of a friend whose baby is being examined by the doctor on account of a rash which has appeared on the child, is quarantined with the family when the case is pronounced smallpox. Considerable chasing about finally finds the bride escaping. The quarantine lifted, the story has a happy ending in the marriage of the pair.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

HIS MOTHER'S BOY (Paramount-Ince), Dec. 24.—A five-reel picture that has, when it gets down to its real dramatic situation, a tremendously effective climax. The last two reels are so good that they carry the whole, though the early parts seemed to be a bit too slow. A longer notice will be found on another page of this issue.

THE SEVEN SWANS, Dec. 31.—A delightful holiday release from a story by Hans Anderson, characterized by sumptuous settings, beautiful exteriors and fine acting by Marguerite Clark.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

THE FIRE TRAP (Pathe), Jan. 6.—Episode No. 7 of "The Hidden Hand." This number opens with scenes showing Jack Ramsey in the act of rescuing Doris from the lime bed. Then follows the discovery of the locket by Detective Flatt, who also rifles the safe and is afterward killed by "The Hidden Hand" while inspecting the contents of the locket. Vera is then kidnapped in order to lure Jack and Doris into a deserted house. The plan succeeds and the two latter are made captive. The number closes with them facing death from tongues of flame in the cellar of the house. The number is full of characteristic action.

WAR BIBLES (Pathe-International), Jan. 6.—A half-reel number, showing the printing and binding of Bibles for our men in the army. The scenes follow through the entire process, picturing the cutting, folding, assemblying, trimming and application of gilt edges. An instructive number.

DER CAPTAIN'S BIRTHDAY (Pathe), Jan. 6.—On same reel with above, an animated drawing picturing an amusing exploit of the Katzenjammer Kids. They raise a rough house at the Captain's birthday dinner in a laughable way.

BEAUTIFUL RIVERS OF FRANCE (Pathe), Jan. 6.—An attractively tinted half-reel, taken on and along the River Tarn in France. Views of the ancient city of Millau, Notre Dame Church, the village of Payre and other features of interest are included. The river flows through picturesque gorges.

HERE AND THERE IN KESWICK (Pathe), Jan. 6.—On same reel with above. This makes a pleasing half-reel, in tints, picturing a stage drive through the County of Cumberland, England. The rolling hills, quaint inns, water falls and other features make a good scenic number.

THE TIP (Rolin-Pathe), Jan. 6.—A comedy number, featuring Harold Pollard and Bebe Daniels. Harold takes a ride on the water wagon in this and later lands unexpectedly in the rooms of Farina, a crystal gazer. He sees some marvelous visions in the crystal, but they fail to work out later. This is a laughable subject of the knockabout type, and very well handled.

THE GERMAN CURSE IN RUSSIA (Pathe).—A five-reel compilation of views in Russia, made by Capt. Donald C. Thompson. This begins with events taken in August, 1914, at the beginning of the war, shows the formation of the Russian republic, and the manner of its disintegration through German treachery and propaganda. This is an offering of first importance; it contains scenes of modern history that everyone should see. There is much actual fighting on the field of battle, where men are seen falling under fire, and where special acts of heroism are shown. One of the greatest war numbers yet shown. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

THE MOVIE DUMMY (Rolin-Pathe).—The first of the new "Toto" series of knockabout comedies, introducing the famous Hippodrome clown. He plays the part of a dummy in a moving picture studio, thus obtaining admission to the star's dressing room. He receives some very rough treatment while carrying out this deception. Later he appears dressed as a girl. This is a laughable number and the humor is without vulgarity. It will be a great hit with children and adults will also find it very funny. Reviewed at length elsewhere.

Triangle Film Corporation.

FRAMING FRAMERS, Dec. 30.—Charles Gunn is the star of this five-part pictures which contains a love story and a political satire. It was written by Philip J. Hura and moves along at a good pace. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

THE MAN ABOVE THE LAW, Jan. 6.—A novel and thoroughly well-produced five-part photoplay, this picture was written by Lanier Bartlett and the leading roles are taken by Jack Richardson and Josie Sedgwick. The scenes are placed in New Mexico. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

ANIMATED WEEKLY NO. 4 (Universal), Dec. 26.—This entertaining number opens with pictures of citizens about Boston cutting cord wood to supply fuel instead of coal. A unique stockholders' meeting in Akron, O.; revival of American merchant marine, American women in the war and various other subjects are treated. Hy Mayer cartoons close the number.

CURRENT EVENTS NO. 33 (Universal), Dec. 29.—This leads off with pictures showing how the war is affecting necessities in America. Views of German prisoners in this country, the dismantling of a big wireless plant, winter scenes in Central Park and pictures of American ambulance workers at the front are also leading features.

CAVE MAN STUFF (Nestor), Jan. 7.—A burlesque on the cave man period written by Tom Gibson. Gale Henry and William Franey, a romantic, love-lorn couple, attire themselves in skins in primitive fashion. Gale gets a club and forces Franey to marry her. This is very ridiculous and laughable and is a successful offering of the strictly knockabout type.

TORPEDO PIRATES, (L-KO), Jan. 9.—A two-reel comic, directed by Noel Smith. This features Hughie Mack as the rotund hero. He is employed as assistant to Mr. Nutt, who has invented a flying torpedo, and is in love with the daughter. The action is an amusing knockabout character, and has to do with the theft of the torpedo. This contains some funny moments and has a lively chase, on land and in the water, at the close.

ONE MINUTE TO LIVE, Jan. 12.—Number 7 of "The Mystery Ship." This instalment contains several exciting situations. Gaston and Jack escape from the gang, the latter making a sensational jump from a building into the sea. There is an auto and motorcycle chase and at the close Betty is cast into the sea in a sealed chest. This does not greatly advance the plot, but the action is very strong in holding power.

NEW ENEMIES (Universal Special), Jan. 12.—Episode No. 13 of "The Red Ace." Virginia and Winthrop are tricked by the spies upon leaving the vessel and lured by alleged government officials to some vacant buildings. In front of the latter they give hand-to-hand battle with their foes, but are bound and left inside. The fire scenes are full of suspense and exciting. The number as a whole makes an entertaining instalment.

WILD BIRDS AND ANIMALS AT HOME (Finley).—A reel of nature studies photographed by William L. Finley, presenting various kinds of birds and animals in their native haunts. This is especially interesting of its kind. A full review will be found in the Motion Picture Educator of our issue of Jan. 19.

TAMING WILD BIRDS (Finley).—An interesting reel of nature studies photographed by William L. Finley and demonstrating the ease with which wild birds can be made tame. The rearing of a young family of bluebirds by a pair of children is interesting. A full review will be found in the Motion Picture Educator of our issue of Jan. 19.

World Pictures Corporation.

STOLEN HOURS, Jan. 7.—The scenes of this five-part photoplay are laid in England and Ethel Clayton is the star. The story is a modern romance of fairly entertaining qualities and is excellently produced. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Mutual Schedule

Features Margarita Fischer in "Mollie, Go Get 'Em"—Comedy and News Reel for Week of January 7.

MARGARITA FISCHER, the happy-go-lucky and versatile comedienne, who specializes in tom-boy characterizations, has an unusual and exciting role in her latest production, "Molly Go Get 'Em," the Mutual-American star production scheduled for the week of January 7, made under the direction of Lloyd Ingraham.

In this comedy, which is built along original lines, Miss Fischer convinces a bogus count that she is the daughter of an Indian squaw, and the inheritor of a tendency to throw aboriginal fits on the least provocation.

The "Count" has his pecuniary eye on the money-bags and other valuable assets of her father, but his plans are frustrated by the irrepressible Margaret, who catches him red-handed with the family jewels in his possesion, and conducts him to her father at the point of a rather nervous pistol.

This is a role in which Miss Fischer is seen in her happiest moments, and the opportunities afforded her for perpetrating some eccentric and hilarious comedy are numerous. She displays a gorgeous array of the latest feminine apparel, from pajamas to party gowns. A realistic representation of the balcony scene from "Romeo and Juliet," and an accidental plunge into a pool of water, where she is compelled to keep submerged for an inhuman period in order to avoid detection, add zest to the action.

Supporting Miss Fischer is an admirable cast, including Margaret Allen, Emme Kluge, Jack Mower, Hal Clements, True Boardman, and David Howard.

Pathe Program for January 13 is Strong

Thompson's Russian Pictures and Toto Comedy Are Among The Week's Features.

WHAT is characterized as one of the greatest war pictures yet seen in this country and the first of the two-reel Toto comedies are the especially interesting features of Pathe's program for the week of January 13. The former is "The German Curse in Russia' as photographed by Donald C. Thompson, the war photographer and staff camera correspondent of Leslie's Weekly.

Doris Kenyon stars in "The Hidden Hand," eighth episode, entitled "The Slide for Life," with Sheldon Lewis, Arline Pretty, and Mahlon Hamilton. The big thrill of this episode comes when Doris and Ramsey escape from the Hidden Hand by swinging across a ravine handcuffed to a wire.

There is a very interesting issue of the Argus Pictorial, an animated magazine in one reel. This is the fifth issue.

"Our National Parks" is the title of a one-reel Pathe colored travel picture dealing with Yellowstone Park, its wonders and oddities.

Toto makes his screen debut in "The Movie Dummy," a two-reel comedy produced by Rolin. The comedy gives Toto an unusual opportunity to display his ability in a type of fun-making that is entirely new to the screen.

There is an International cartoon and educational split reel and Hearst-Pathe News Nos. 6 and 7 on this program.

EDITH STOREY IN "THE EYES OF MYSTERY."

Edith Storey, one of the best known actresses of the screen, who affixed her name to a Metro contract several months ago, makes her debut under the parrot trade mark in an unusual picture, "The Eyes of Mystery." Tod Browning directed the production from the scenario of June Mathis, which was based on the story, "The House in the Mist," by Octavus Roy Cohan and J. U. Giesy.

Miss Storey has a great following among picture theatergoers throughout the world. She has been appearing in motion pictures for years, being one of the first players to gain stellar prominence. With the exception of one year, when she was loaned to the Melies Company for a series of Western pictures, Miss Storey played for the Vitagraph Company. Among the most notable productions in which she has appeared are "The Christian," "The Chains of an Oath," "Captain Alvarez," "Aladdin from Broadway," and "The Captain of the Grey Horse Troop."

Edith Storey's hosts of admirers will view with intense interest "The Eyes of Mystery," in which the leading role, Carma Carmichael, gives full sway to her splendid abilities.

ANOTHER JUDGE BROWN STORY.

Some of the richest and most wholesome humor uncovered in many a day has been translated upon the screen in "The Chocolate of the Gang," the second of General Film Company's "Judge Brown Stories of Youth." Unlike "Bud's Recruit," the first release in this series of captivating stories of boy life, "The Chocolate of the Gang" is based upon real incidents taken from Judge Brown's vast fund of experiences in juvenile life. Critics who have seen this two-reel feature declare it to be the best bit of humor they have ever seen in pictures and predict that it will speedily become a great favorite with youthful fans ranging from six to sixty years of age.

"The Judge Brown Stories" are being produced by the Boy City Film Company, under the supervision of Judge Brown, for twenty-five years a leader in juvenile court work. "The Preachers Son" will be the third picture in the series. This feature presents an unusually interesting and novel viewpoint of the life of a very much misunderstood boy.

Frank A. Keeney

Latest of Film Producers a Man of Action Plus Accomplishment—Selects Catherine Calvert as First Star.

NOTHING succeeds like success" is the favorite motto of Frank A. Keeney, head of the new Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation. Mr. Keeney reaped the results of success in the form of a large inheritance from his father, the late Seth L. Keeney, one of Brooklyn's most enterprising business men. He might have been content with this bequest, yet he determined to make it productive of further success, realizing that money is doing its best work in the world when it is boosting and bolstering live enterprises.

As sole heir to the estate of his father, who died a little more than five years ago, Mr. Keeney became interested in numerous enterprises. He is one of the owners of the Brooklyn Daily Eagle, and a large stockholder in the Edison Electric Illuminating Company, Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company, Brooklyn Union Gas Company, Brooklyn Trust Company and Eagle Storage and Warehouse Company of Brooklyn.

Frank A. Keeney.

At the time he received the inheritance, he had already made a specialty of the theatrical business. Unlike the average successful theatrical promotor, who works his way up, Mr. Keeney went into the business from the top, making his debut as a manager. His ability was demonstrated by the almost instant success of the various theatrical enterprises he launched. He acquired a string of vaudeville houses in various cities of the East and made the name "Keeney's," flashed in electric illumination in front of a theater, a symbol of wholesome, popular entertainment within the financial reach of all.

Keeney's Brooklyn theater is an example of the way he does things. Mr. Keeney selected a plot of ground ideally located at the foot of Hanover place, with a remarkable opportunity for a "flash" for the eyes of the throngs, and erected thereon one of the largest and most modernly equipped theaters in Brooklyn. His house in Newark was acquired in characteristic fashion. It was erected as a stock house for Corse and Joseph Payton. A couple of days before the opening Mr. Keeney chanced to pay a visit to Newark. He took a look at the new theater, admired it and, within ten minutes after he saw it, had entered into a definite agreement whereby he acquired the full rights as lessee.

Mr. Keeney has now launched a new venture. The Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation, of which he is president and sole financial backer, will begin in a month or so the production of feature photoplays with Catherine Calvert and other screen favorites as stars. Plans are now being drawn by William E. Lehman, architect of Mr. Keeney's theaters in Brooklyn and Newark, for a thoroughly adequate studio. It is to be located within five minutes' walk of the offices the new corporation has fitted up in the Putnam Building 1493 Broadway. Mr. Lehman has completed plans for a new and up-to-date theater in Kingston, N. Y., the first of a string of houses Mr. Keeney is erecting, to exploit his products.

KING-BEE TRADE SHOWING THIS WEEK.

On Wednesday, Jan. 2, at the Miles Projection rooms, 220 W. Forty-second street, the King-Bee Films Corp. will show their latest two-reel comedies, entitled "The Candy Kid" and "The Slave." They will be shown to the reviewers on the various papers at eleven o'clock sharp.

Considerable interest is manifested in the two-reel comedy, "The Slave," the first of the comedies made at Hollywood, California, by the King-Bee company, which is to be released without using any sub-titles whatsoever. This is the first time that an innovation of this kind has been attempted

"MOTHER" SHOWN SIMULTANEOUSLY IN NEW YORK AND CHICAGO.

A novelty in trade screenings for a state rights feature was instituted by Arthur H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin of General Enterprises, Inc., this week, through the simultaneous exhibition on December 19 accorded the McClure picture, "Mother," in New York and Chicago. The affairs were so arranged that the screenings took place at almost exactly the same time, one being presided over by Herbert Lubin at the Ziegfeld theater in Chicago, while Arthur Sawyer was master at the other, held in New York at the Balboa projection room.

Immediately following the double exhibition, banquets were gives at both places, at which an attractive souvenir in the form of the poem, "Mother," by Kate Douglas Wiggins, was presented to each person. Among those present at the showing at the Ziegfeld theater in charge of Mr. Lubin, were many of the most prominent state rights buyers in the Middle West, including J. R. Grainger, of the Grainger Film Corporation; E. M. Allen, of the Allen Film Corporation of Chicago; J. E. Kemp, of the Westcott Film Corporation of Minneapolis, Minnesota, together with a large attendance of exhibitors of Chicago and the outlying towns. All of the "Windy City's" newspapers were represented by their leading reviewers, among whom were Kitty Kelley, Mae Tinne and Jack Lait.

The list of guests presided over by Arthur Sawyer in New York included the following members of the trade press: James Milligan, Arthur White and Edward Weitzel, of the Moving Picture World; Fred Beecroft and Peter Milne, of the Motion Picture News; P. Brennon, of Motography; James Beecroft, of the Exhibitors' Herald; William Beecroft, of the New York Star; Joseph Reddy and Francis Agnew, of the Morning Telegraph; Harold Rendall, of the New York Star; J. Goldie, of the Billboard; W. Barremore, of the Exhibitors' Trade Review; Arthur H. Sawyer and Harry Kosch, of General Enterprises, Inc.; Harry Ennis, of Raver Films, and Bert Ennis, director of publicity for McClure Pictures and Daniel M. Henderson, director of advertising for McClure Pictures.

V. H. HODUPP, INC., BRANCHING OUT.

Out Indianapolis way exhibitors have much to say concerning one V. H. Hodupp, who only last month opened his first exchange in the recently erected Wimmer building in the Hoosier metropolis. Already the firm of V. H. Hodupp, Inc., has six salesmen covering Indiana, and report sixty-seven consecutive days of booking on "Married in Name Only," as well as similar extensive booking on the other Ivan productions that were Mr. Hodupp's first buy, as reported in our "Sales of the Week" column of our December 29 issue.

And before V. H. Hodupp, Inc., reaches its proposed limit, the head of the firm promises twenty other exchanges throughout the country, to be opened at two-week intervals beginning January 15, when V. H. Hodupp, Inc., will make its debut into the center of the St. Louis film colony. Kansas City is due next on the first of February.

The new firm proposes a co-operative system of enterprise, somewhat along the line of several other co-operative exchange-exhibitor booking arrangements now in vogue but yet different from any of the others. The plan is a very simple one, according to our informant, and the advantages distinctly individual. Already President Leonard, of the Lenwood Amusement company, with a number of theaters throughout Indiana, and Manfred Feitler, owner of seven theaters in western Pennsylvania, have subscribed to 750 and 100 shares respectively in each of the twenty proposed distributing offices.

STANDARD EXCHANGE HEAD RETURNS HOME.

Henry Lisle, president of the Standard Film Corporation, of Kansas City, with branch exchanges in Minneapolis, Chicago, St. Louis and Omaha, and comprising within its booking grasp the states of Minnesota, Wisconsin, North and South Dakota, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Missouri and Nebraska, who arrived in New York on an observation tour December 18, departed for his headquarters in Kansas City last Sunday. While in Manhattan Mr. Lisle, in addition to visiting among the trade, devoted considerable time to the company of his son, who is in the army and slated for an early sailing to France.

Mr. Lisle has only recently invaded the film field and, at that, only gives it his passing attention ordinarily, his principal care being devoted to his grain mill in Leavenworth, Kan. Other of his investments include a copper mine and several banks. The general manager of his film interests is P. L. Ryan, who makes the Kansas City exchange at 1305 Walnut street his official residence.

While in New York Mr. Lisle was often seen in the company of C. Mell Simmons, general manager of the State Right Distributors, Inc.

Shipman Launches Commendable Idea

Districts Entire Country on a Percentaged Basis and Regulates State Right Prices Accordingly—Announces Valuation's Simultaneously.

ERNEST Shipman has put into vogue a new idea in the selling of the "Shorty Hamilton Series" of one five-part feature per month, which promises to be adopted by many other of the state right selling agencies in the country. The Shipman way, which will be followed on all product that he handles, throws wide open the regulation of prices to all independent buyers by laying the cards upon the table, playing the same game with all without partiality and prejudice and lastly but very importantly by eliminating that baneful condition of time-frittering through needless price bickering. According to this method the various territories will always be quoted a set percentage price of the total selling valuation. All these are tabled on a folder which every bona fide buyer receives.

Absolute fairness is also to be observed in the matter of offering the present and future Shipman productions to any one given territory. It is so arranged that each group of sectional independent buyers receives a letter conveying the selling proposition in the same mail. He is told just how this state right specialist, now located at 17 West Forty-fourth street, arrived at the percentage governing his territory, which incidentally is the outcome of much faithful observation and compilation on the part of Mr. Shipman himself. The figures accepted are, fairly enough, identical with those of the members of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Mr. Shipman has engaged Aosta Carell, the Swedish illustrator, to put the real art punch into the publicity campaign for the Shorty Hamilton series of feature productions. This is the first time he has ever lent his brush to the needs of publicity plus art.

BIG INDEPENDENT PRODUCING FIRM ORGANIZING.

A new producing factor, and one destined to play a big part in the state rights manufacturing domain, is in the process of organization at the present time. Other than the mention of the title of the new concern, the Hy-Art Photoplays, Inc., and that the firm is locating in the Aeolian building off Fifth avenue on Forty-second street, New York, no other information has been furnished for publication. Those in the know, however, draw their conclusions concerning the might of this new producing house because of the calibre and prominence of its sponsors, whose names are being temporarily withheld.

One other fact thus far ascertained conveys the intelligence that the first production is to cost in the neighborhood of $150,000 and star a celebrity and supporting cast of the highest repute. Further than this, comes the information that each production is to feature a different star. The trade is promised further details after the tenth of the month.

W. H. Productions Launch Into Exp rt

Have Installed Branch Quarters in London—Control Triangle and Subsidiary Product for World.

The predominating feature of the policy of the W. H. Productions Company from the time of its inception can be borne out in the following little phrase, "Live and let live."

This has been the key-note for its success in making the great amount of sales and bringing a concern two months old to the front of the industry. Now the W. H. Productions Company will expand its energies and efforts toward making it possible for foreign buyers and distributors to secure pictures and service on a basis that will assure profits to themselves first. This concern now controls a countless quantity of feet of film which have not yet been shown in foreign territories—comedies and dramas in any and every length, in any quantity, including a selection of over one thousand Keystone comedies. This film will be sold at reasonable prices, and credit will be extended to responsible parties

They also intend to go further than this, and will buy any independent productions outside of their own, and will supply them to buyers upon the same terms as their own product.

Shipments will be made either from New York or from their London connections, the Western Import Company.

"It will pay every responsible foreign buyer to make immediate connections with us, because we have solved the great problem of the industry, 'live and let live,'" is the way the head of the W. H. organization puts it.

"We represent the Triangle Film Corporation for the entire world, except the United States; the New York Motion Picture Company, the famous Keystone Film Company, the Reliance Film Manufacturing Company, Majestic Film Company, the K. B. Film Company, and Bronco Film Company for the entire world.

"A permanent connection with us will mean the worry off your mind and the burdens off your shoulders.

"Our financial connections in New York are the Harriman National Bank, The Bankers Central Trust Co., and the Columbia Bank; in London, the London, City & Midland Bank, and the County of Westminster Bank.

"The New York business will be transacted by W. H. Productions Company, of New York City, and the London business by the Western Import Company, of London.

"We believe we have started something."

The Flynn Secret Service Serial

Work Progressing Rapidly on the First Episodes—General Plan Revealed.

IN RUSHING forward the work of producing the new serial, "The Eagle's Eye," by Chief Flynn of the United States Secret Service, the Whartons have been compelled to extend their activities over a wide field. While work is progressing on many episodes at their big studio at Ithaca, N. Y., assistant directors and cameramen are photographing special scenes and locations for other episodes in New York, Washington and other cities where the Secret Service exposed ramifications of the Imperial German Government spy system. In this way the entire production will be greatly expedited.

Several hotel scenes in New York City were taken "after hours" during the past week. One of these will have an important place in one of the most sensational episodes in which Count Von Bernstorff, the German Ambassador, appears. This episode will show the devilish cleverness displayed by this diplomat in moulding even Americans as instruments to his hand. In this instance he induced a well-known society woman to aid the machinations of the Kaiser's spy army.

Each episode of this serial will tell the details of the discovery, investigation and exposure of one plot or conspiracy, and will be complete in itself. The connecting links of the twenty episodes will be a strong, dramatic love story, in which King Baggot and Marguerite Snow will play the principal roles. The cast in the fictional connective story will remain the same throughout the production, but in the different episodes there will be introduced many roles representative of Imperial German agents and their tools.

King Baggot will play the role of Harrison Grant, president of the Criminology Club. This organization is made up of men of large means who have taken up the scientific study of crime in all parts of the world and have interested the leading men of foreign nations in the work. Such an organization naturally has a wide knowledge of world politics and diplomacy. The ominous activities of the Imperial German spy system attracts its attention and Harrison Grant volunteers its services to assist the United States Secret Service in its work of combating plots. In this connection Grant becomes a volunteer operative of the Secret Service.

Marguerite Snow has a very conspicuous part in this serial in the role of Dixie Mason, a young Southern girl who comes to New York with histrionic ambitions. She succeeds on the stage but becomes interested in the Secret Service at the outbreak of the war in Europe, and at the time of the opening of the story is an operative on the staff of the Chief.

She and Harrison meet under conditions which lead him to believe that she is connected with the Imperial German spy system, and, notwithstanding a growing sentimental interest in her, he reports to the Chief that he regards her activities as a dangerous menace and that she ought to be checked. Dixie knows of Grant's suspicions, and, although she is beginning to take more than a passing interest in him, most carefully conceals her real identity from him. The suspense of this sentimental interest is well sustained till the final episode, when Grant is told the truth and he and Dixie declare their love for each other. The love theme between Grant and Dixie will prove a very interesting feature of this serial.

The German characters who are shown in the different episodes will include impersonations of Count von Bernstorff, Captain Franz von Papen, Captain Karl Boy-Ed, Dr. Heinrich Albert and Madame Augusta Stephan. These roles will be played respectively by Bertram Marburg, Paul Everton, John Wade, Frederick Jones and Florence Shaw.

These players were selected by the Whartons because of their personal resemblance to the characters they act, as well as for their ability as screen artists. Spectators who have seen Count von Bernstorff and his aids will appreciate how faithfully these players reflect on the screen the personalities of the people they represent.

Such rapid progress has been made in the production of this serial that the initial releases will be made in a very short time. With each episode a most interesting press story will be released, stating all the facts in relation to the spy plot on which it is founded. These articles will give the public startling information which has never been printed up to this time. Chief Flynn's story has also been written in most attractive serial fictional form. Chapters will be released simultaneously with the presentation of the episode which it covers.

SUNSHINE FILM—NEW MANUFACTURER.

Sunshine Film, Inc., with offices at 729 Seventh avenue, New York City, is a new company organized to make comedies for the state rights market. They have already completed several pictures, and some are in the making. The officers of the firm are Emil Harder, president; Edmund Field, vice president and treasurer; Fred A. Diem, secretary, and M. Gundersheim, general sales manager.

It is the intention ofthe company to produce fifty-two comedies a year, one each week, consisting of one and two reels. Gus Pixley, formerly featured comedian with the Biograph company, is the star player, and it is promised that in each production he will be surrounded by a capable cast, including Tom Ward, formerly of Pathe. All pictures are under the personal supervision of Emil Harder. Further announcements may be expected shortly from this firm.

Big Canadian Independent Merger

Regal Films, Ltd., and Globe Unite—Phil Kauffman Takes Charge—Arthur Cohen Drops Out—Name, Regal Films, to Be Retained.

OFFICIAL announcement was made at the Canadian headquarters of Regal Films, Ltd., 21 Adelaide street West, Toronto, on December 26, that the Regal had acquired all selling rights for pictures controlled in the Dominion by Globe Films, Ltd., Toronto, and other cities. Phil Kauffman, vice-president and general manager of Globe Films, Ltd., has become general sales manager of Regal Films, Ltd., and he left this city for an extensive tour of the Canadian West in the interests of the Regal immediately after the change. President Arthur Cohen, of the Globe, has dropped out of the active participation in the exchange business and is confining his attention to the two theaters, the Rialto and Globe, which he controls in Toronto.

By this move the Regal becomes without question the largest film distributing company in the Dominion, although it was organized only a year ago. The company has been handling Goldwyn, Triangle, World Brady-Made, Educational, Mutt and Jeff Cartoon, Rex Beach and other releases for the whole country. With the acquisition of the Globe business, the Regal has secured the Canadian rights for Paralta Plays, Billy West Comedies, Ivan productions and many state rights features, including "The Warrior," "Redemption," "Birth," "Her Condoned Sin," "Babbling Tongues," "The Lust of the Ages," "The Spoilers," "The Jockey of Death," and other subjects. In addition the Globe company also controlled a number of pictures for Western Canada, including Metro's "Romeo and Juliet," "The Call of Her People" and "The Slacker."

Globe Films, Ltd., had offices in six different Canadian cities, Toronto, Montreal, St. John, Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver. The four last-named branches were opened only recently. All these establishments are to be closed immediately and the effects are to be removed to the branches of the Regal which happen to be in the same cities.

Speaking in reference to the big deal, an official of the Regal declared that the company would shortly announce the securing of the Canadian rights for still another make of photoplays. Regal officers state that the concentration of effort and the bringing together of various interests has proved both economical and profitable to the company.

HALL PREPARED FOR ANY EMERGENCY.

Having acquired three special productions with which to launch his organization, namely, "The Zeppelin's Last Raid," "Those Who Pay," starring Bessie Barriscale, and "The Belgian," featuring Valentine Grant and Walker Whiteside, Frank Hall, president of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corp., is casting about for other attractions of equal merit. While he does not anticipate difficulty in finding suitable productions for a few months he feels that owing to war conditions it would be advisable to fortify his concern by engaging directors to make productions exclusively for the U. S.

Although no definite announcement as to the conditions of the contracts has been made it is reported the U. S. Corporation will assist the directors in question to finance their productions, and that the company also will reserve the right to approve scenarios and to name a supervising director whose duty will be to co-operate with the director in chief in making the productions. These stipulations, it is understood, will be put into the contracts for the purpose of safeguarding the booking concern against possible production errors.

"It is our intention to produce only productions founded upon a successful play or popular book," declared Mr. Hall, "and a star of genuine box-office value will be featured in every subject. We shall exercise the utmost care in the selection of both the star and the vehicle and will co-operate step by step with the directors in the making of the production.

"Furthermore, we shall select only such plays that lend themselves to intensive exploitation. We believe in giving the exhibitors something they can sell to the public; something which, to use an expression of the day, they can make a noise about.

"Despite the wails of the calamity howlers, I think the future holds much of promise for the picture industry. It is up to the picture-makers, however, to produce plays that are real attractions, plays that the exhibitors can advertise."

GRAINGER FILM CORPORATION ENTERS FIELD.

139 N. Clark street, Chicago, tenants new state rights exchange—The Grainger Film Corporation—with none other than James R. Grainger, also general manager of the Allen Film Corporation, at its head. The success of this gentleman has attracted the attention of the film fraternity throughout the country, for he has done business with exhibitors in all parts of the United States and is accounted one of the most popular men in the exchange end of the business today.

The Grainger company is affiliated with the Allen Corporation, though the board of directors is not entirely identical. The difference lies particularly in the matter of territory that the two exchanges control. The new exchange operates its bookings throughout the states of Illinois. Michigan, Iowa, Nebraska, Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Kansas and Missouri. The first purchases of the new enterprise are related in the "Sales of the Week" column of this department.

"Mickey"—That Comedy Plus

A Trade Showing of This Mack Sennett-Mabel Normand Super-Comedy Due During January—Expense Was No Item.

THE trade may expect a trade-showing of "Mickey," the five-part Mack Sennett comedy featuring Mabel Normand, during the last half of January. The Western Import Company, sponsors for the elaborate and much-awaited comedy are planning toward that end.

It is a certainty that no comedy ever received more advance attention of a nation-wide scale than this self-same "Mickey." Not only do exhibitors know that this production has been two years in the making and that they are soon to have their patience rewarded, but the public knows the fact as well. And from all advance information, "Mickey" will hit the bulls-eye and prove a magnet for old and young just as soon as the theaters begin to display their "Mabel Normand in Mickey Here This Week" banners.

Scene from "Mickey" (Western Import).

"A lot of time has been used in the production of 'Mickey,' and it has also cost a lot of money," the Western Import officials inform. "It could have been made in half the time and a fraction of the expense but Mack Sennett and Miss Normand were determined that when they said good-bye to 'Mickey' and sent her out into the world, the play should be as nearly perfect as human effort could make it.

"The making of this multiple-reel drama was a terrific strain upon all concerned, but the completed production, as it stands now, is the greatest endorsement of the director, the star and the support, that has ever been given to any one in picture filmdom."

The Western Import Company will release "Mickey" on the state rights market.

BILLY WEST'S WALTZES READY.

"The King-Bee Waltzes," composed by Billy West, star of the King-Bee Comedies, will be released Jan. 2, and published only in Sunday magazine sections of the leading newspapers throughout the country. They will be given to the newspapers with a guarantee that they are an exclusive set of waltzes that cannot be purchased anywhere, and are dedicated by the comedian to his admirers.

Any exhibitor desiring to play these waltzes in his theater can do so feeling assured that no music tax will be charged. A copy of these waltzes will be sent to any exhibitor upon request to Ed. Rosenbaum, Jr., publicity director, King-Bee Films Corp., Longacre Bldg., New York City.

NORTH GOING ALL DIRECTIONS.

Now that the new year hangs full upon the calendar. Tom North, head of the state rights department of the Pathe organization, has departed on a long swing, not only in the interests of "Today," the Florence Reed production, and "The Mad Lover,' the Robert Warwick feature, but also the Russian Art Dramas, the Pathe war pictures and "The Vicar of Wakefield." Last week he covered Philadelphia and Wilmington, but returned to New York for the New Year celebration. This time, however, Manhattanites will not see this hustler again for at least three weeks.

TRADE SHOWING OF "BIRTH OF DEMOCRACY" SOON.

Dr. Oscar I. Lamberger, who is handling the publicity on the "Birth of Democracy" for the Merit Film Corporation, which controls the New York and northern New Jersey rights to this production, is author of the statement that this feature is soon to be given an elaborate trade showing at Wurlitzer Hall. Though the date has not yet been fixed, our informant declares that it will be around the middle of the month.

Taylor Fashions Funny Films

His Proudest Achievement Is His Latest King-Bee Comedy, "The Slave," Which Will Make Its Debut Sans Subtitles.

REX TAYLOR, the clever scenario writer, who has written several of the King-Bee comedies, was born in Des Moines, Ia., just thirty years ago. He started roaming around our glorious states when very young, and finally settled down in Jacksonville, Fla., where he has resided for the past eight years.

When very young his mother told him that she was going to make a lawyer out of him. As he had his heart set upon becoming a clog-dancer there was only one thing left for him to do—run away, and he did at the age of seventeen. He arrived in Chicago, where he had a school chum who was studying to become a mining engineer. After several attempts to get a position in a theatrical company, he decided to follow in his chum's footsteps, and entered a prep school. Two years later he made a trip to the Far West as a mining engineer. Quite by accident he was given an opportunity to play a small part with the Selig company in Chicago about seven years ago. He soon developed into a juvenile actor and director.

Rex Taylor.

Three years ago he wrote his first scenario. He sold his first two stories to the Lubin company. Mr. Taylor then wrote twenty-three comedies for the Black Diamond Company that were released on the Paramount program. Recently he has gone in for feature stories, and has disposed of three of these features to the Vitagraph company. Last winter, before joining the King-Bee staff, he wrote the stories of the Klever Pictures in which Victor Moore was starred. Mr. Taylor joined the Billy West aggregation about three months ago; he is under contract to them for one year, and will write the stories of the King-Bee releases until January, 1919. He is now at Hollywood.

The proudest event of his life is the fact that he is the author of the Billy West comedy entitled "The Slave," the first comedy ever produced that does not need a subtitle. His wife, Irma Whepley Taylor, a native of California, is herself a clever writer, and collaborates with her husband on all his dramatic stories.

GUARDING THE WHARTON STUDIOS.

Great precautions are being taken at the Wharton studios at Ithaca, N. Y., to guard them from injury by anybody interested in preventing or delaying the production of "The Eagle's Eye," the new serial founded on the story by William J. Flynn, Chief of the United States Secret Service, exposing Imperial Germany's spy system in this country. Armed guards patrol the grounds day and night, and no one is permitted to enter the premises under any circumstances without a pass or without being identified by someone in authority. Manager Kent has turned the studios into very well regulated and picketed military camp, and is uncompromising in his rules.

A trade showing of several of the first episodes of "The Eagle's Eye," Secret Service Chief Flynn's screen exposure of the Imperial German Government's spy system in America, will be made shortly after January 1. Every exhibitor who will get in touch with the nearest Foursquare exchange will be informed of the exact date and sent an invitation.

SIMMONS SUMMONS S. R. D. BUYING COMMITTEE.

C. Mell Simmons, general manager of the State Right Distributors, Inc., has telegraphed to the various members of this organization's buying body, instructing them to meet in New York on Friday, January 4. This committee includes Sidney B. Lust, of Washington; J. J. Allen, of Toronto; Leon D. Netter, of Cleveland; D. M. Vandawalker, of Chicago; Harry Grelle, of Pittsburgh, and Nathan Hirsch, of New York. Mr. Simmons has devoted much time to the examining of productions now being offered by the independent manufacturers, and, having carefully culled out those that his body might be interested in securing, has arranged for a full day of private showings on January 4.

"DEVIL'S PLAYGROUND" READY.

Fraternity Films, Inc., announces it is now prepared to launch the exploitation of its five-part production, "The Devil's Playground," featuring Vera Michelena, with a supporting cast in keeping. A trade showing will be held in its projection rooom in the Candler building during the coming week.

GOLDMAN BOOK IN NEW YORK LIBRARY.

"The Public Defender," in book form, which was written by Mayer C. Goldman, New York City attorney, and which furnished the theme for Harry Raver's photodramatic production of the same name, has been added to the files of the New York Public Library.

Mr. Goldman's work, which has been indorsed by upward of one thousand newspapers and magazines, is said to have reached a circulation running well over the two hundred thousand mark. Among the important daily newspapers that have praised "The Public Defender" are the New York Globe, New York Tribune, New York Herald, and the Evening Mail.

Many prominent and influential magazines have likewise lauded "The Public Defender," both for its high literary quality and its power for good.

The screen version of "The Public Defender" was written by Mayer C. Goldman and Frank W. Harris, the latter being also a member of the New York bar. As a motion picture production, "The Public Defender," which presents Frank Keenan, Alma Hanlon, and Robert Edeson, has received high praise from many of New York's leading clergymen, educators, and jurists, and bids fair to become one of the most talked about photodramas of the coming year.

The Renowned Pictures Corporation controls the rights of "The Public Defender" for the United States and Canada.

EXPORT ACTIVITIES.

Sidney Garrett, president of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., and Ben Blumenthal, president of the Export and Import Film Co., Inc., since returning from Chicago last month have completed arrangements for marketing the Selig-Polyscope productions in all foreign countries, excluding Great Britain. This includes all the productions which the Selig Polyscope Company has made in the past and those which will be released in the future.

Having acquired the exclusive rights to the Selig pictures these two concerns now control a great part of the output of American productions. They control between them the foreign rights to Metro, Bernstein, King-Bee, Russian Art, Tweedledum comedies, cartoons, such productions as "The Barrier," "The Deemster," and have also negotiated for the purchase for different territories of "The Submarine Eye" and the First National Exhibitors' Charlie Chaplins.

ROBERT PRIEST SAYS:

Clune's cinema attractions, "The Eyes of the World" and "Ramona," which have been taken over by Shallenberger & Priest and are being sold on the state rights market, are creating great interest among shrewd buyers. The advertising and publicity campaign is about ready for launching, and when it is well under way there is no doubt but the interest manifested will be greatly increased.

Now that Peggy Hyland has departed from the Mayfair company for the Fox organization, Shallenberger & Priest are enthusiastic over the impetus thus given the production, "Persuasive Peggy," which they handle, and which features the English actress. Marcus Loew has booked "Persuasive Peggy" to open on his circuit January 28.

OLCOTT PRODUCTION SCORES.

The demand for the use of Sidney Olcott's spectacle, "The Belgian," at charity bazaars and patriotic entertainments is so insistent that the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, by which the production is being distributed throughout the world, has been compelled to devote one print exclusively to that purpose.

The most recent presentation of "The Belgian" was given at the Hotel Astor before the Theater Club on December 26. More than 500 women viewed the production. The production also was shown before the members of the Fine Arts Club recently, and dates have also been set for its presentation in Camp Upton, Mills, Dix, and Devens.

LAMBS SEE "STRUGGLE EVERLASTING.

Sunday, December 30, at their clubhouse, the Lambs were accorded a private showing of Harry Rapf's seven-part production, "The Struggle Everlasting," featuring Florence Reed in what is said to be one of her best picture endeavors. As many of this society were gamboling the night that Mr. Rapf presented his special showing at the Shubert theater they made special arrangements to view the film in a body on Sunday. Then, too, they were actuated by a desire to do honor to three of their members who played important parts in the making of the picture, Edwin Milton Royle, the author; James Kirkwood, the director, and Ben Musson, who adapted the scenario.

CLEOPATRA COMPANY OPENS OFFICES.

A new tenant moved into Room 722 of the Longacre building on Monday, December 30—the Cleopatra Film Company, which is offering the revised edition of the Helen Gardner version of "Cleopatra," which, though made several years ago, has been added to, revised, cut, embellished and enhanced in general until it is said to be a 1918 spectacle in every degree. The new lithographic material, heralds, and advertising helps in general have all been prepared and are on exhibition in the new quarters for the gaze of all interested exhibitors and territorial buyers.

Goldburg Appointed Agent of Ivan Sales

Contract Signed with I. E. Chadwick Assigns Ivan Sales to Goldberg Basis of Exploitation.

A CONTRACT was signed Dec. 27 between I. E. Chadwick, general manager of Ivan Film Productions, and Jesse J. Goldburg, who lately opened offices in the Times Building, New York, whereby Mr. Goldburg will act as special and exclusive sales representative on all Ivan productions.

This is claimed to be one of the largest contracts ever entered into between an independent producer and a state rights selling agency of the Goldburg type.

While the contract specifically provides that the exploitation of the Ivan productions shall not prevent the Goldburg office from handling the productions of other manufacturers, it does provide that Mr. Goldburg shall give his personal attention to Ivan affairs.

Mr. Chadwick gave out the following statement at the offices of The Ivan Film Corporation: "We were immediately impressed with the advertisements and announcements of Mr. Goldburg's in the motion picture trade papers, and, as a result, went into greater detail concerning his method of operation and his plan of disposing of state rights attractions. What impressed us as much as anything else was Mr. Goldburg's appraisement of valuation of our productions for the various territories. There was no inflated statement as to what he could procure, and I confess that in some territories on his advice I made material cuts in what I believed we should receive, and in two or three others we made slight advances in price. The financial terms of our contract guarantee Mr. Goldburg a minimum compensation, this, because we feel that when we engage the services of an expert we can procure the best results by liberal terms. The services of Mr. Goldburg do not merely entail the selling of our productions, but also embrace a serviceable campaign for a continuation of the exploitation of our productions even after their sale.

"It was Mr. Goldburgs' suggestion that he make a tour of the United States. While this will take him away from his office and prevent for the time being his taking on other attractions, or at least giving them his personal attention until his return, nevertheless, Mr. Goldburg feels that the trip will give him an opportunity to confer with state rights buyers in order that upon his return he may devise new plans of exploitation, sale and advertising, if necessary, for the year 1918."

Sales of the Week

Herebelow a Compendium of the Selling Activities Recorded in the State Rights Market the Past Seven Days.

FOLLOWING the return of Herbert Lubin, executive of General Enterprises, Inc., to New York last week this announcement was made by this organization concerning sales made on the McClure picture, "Mother": Within two days after the trade showing of the feature at the Ziegfeld theater in Chicago contracts were closed for the McClure production starring Elisabeth Risdon with the following prominent state rights purchasers: To the Grainger Film Corporation, of Chicago, the states of Illinois, Michigan, Iowa, Nebraska, Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Kansas, and Missouri; to E. M. Allen, of the Allen Film Corporation, of Chicago, the states of Ohio, Indiana, and Kentucky; to the Westcott Film Corporation, of Minneapolis, Minn., the states of Minnesota, Wisconsin, and North and South Dakota; to M. J. Wohlfarth, of Lakewood, N. J., the entire state of New Jersey, and to the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, of Pittsburgh, the territory of western Pennsylvania and West Virginia. The above transactions embrace the sale of nineteen states for "Mother" within two days.

The Ivan Film Corporation reports the following sales activities for the week past: To the E. & H. Film Distributing Company, Atlanta, Georgia, "Babbling Tongues," for the states of Florida, Georgia, North and South Carolina, Alabama, and Mississippi; to the Mammoth Film Corporation, 729 7th avenue, New York City, "Sins of Ambition," for northern New Jersey; to the M. & R. Feature Film Company, 725 Goldgate avenue, San Francisco, "Human Clay," for California, Nevada, and Arizona; to Joseph Monat, exporter, 729 7th avenue, New York, "Sins of Ambition," "One Law for Both," "Made In Name Only," the rights to the republic of France; to the Export and Import Film Co., 729 7th avenue, all foreign rights to "Human Clay."

Arthur H. Sawyer, of General Enterprises, Inc., announces the sale of the feature starring Maciste, "The Warrior," to Metro for New York City and state. The transaction was closed by Mr. Sawyer, Joseph W. Engel and Edward Saunders acting for Metro.

Distributing rights for New York State and northern New Jersey for "Peg o' the Sea," the Sterling release featuring Jean Sothern, has been sold to the Modern Feature Photoplays, 729 Seventh avenue, New York, Charles Streimer, manager. This exchange is now in possession of productions featuring Jean Sothern, Alma Hanlon, and Catherine Calvert for the New York territory. These were former Art-Dramas.

The Standard Film Service Co., Harry Charnas, president, has contracted for Ohio territory on the Jean Sothern series also.

W. H. Productions Co. announces the following sales during the past week:

To the Peerless Photoplays Co., Phil Goldstone, manager, Omaha, Neb., the rights to the series of twenty-eight two-reel Mack Sennett comedies for Nebraska, Iowa, Missouri and Kansas; to the Weiland Film Co., Pittsburgh, Pa., the rights to the series of twenty-eight two-reel Mack Sennett comedies for western Pennsylvania and West Virginia; to the Regal Films, Ltd., A. S. Aronson, Toronto, Canada, the rights to the series of twenty-eight two-reel Mack Sennett comedies for Canada; to Regal Film, Ltd., A. S. Aronson, Toronto, Canada, the rights to Wm. S. Hart in "The Bandit and the Preacher" for Canada, and the rights to "The Hell Hound of Alaska" for Canada; and to William Politzer, San Antonio, Texas, the rights to Wm. S. Hart in "The Bandit and the Preacher" and "The Hell Hound of Alaska" for Oklahoma, Texas, and Arkansas.

The Renowned Pictures Corporation announce the sale of the full Canadian rights to the "Public Defender," featuring Alma Hanlon, Robert Edeson, and Frank Keenan, to the Independent Film & Theater Supply Company, Phillips Square, Montreal, Canada. Manager Perkins, of the Canadian exchange, came to New York and closed the deal.

Export and Import Film Company announces that it has acquired the entire foreign rights to the Russian Art productions. Negotiations are under way for the presentation of these films in a number of countries. The success which these pictures have already obtained in America is sufficient reason why buyers for foreign countries will reap a bonanza by obtaining the rights to these masterpieces for their territory.

The Philadelphia-Ideal Film Exchange, Philadelphia, has acquired the Delaware, Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey, Maryland, and Washington rights to the Pan-American Company's weekly educational, "Things People Should Know."

NEW STATE RIGHTS EDUCATIONAL.

The Pan-American Film Company, 1337 Vine street, Philadelphia, is offering a weekly educational release to the state rights market entitled "Things People Should Know." The actual release date is set as January 10. The Philadelphia-Ideal Film Exchange is handling Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey, Maryland, Delaware, and the District of Columbia.

ANOTHER NEW ORLEANS EXCHANGE OPENS

New Orleans possesses another state rights exchange—and an important one from all accounts. It is the property of Karl A. Bugbee, until last week the general manager of the Louisiana Metro exchange in the delta metropolis. The new exchange is located on the third floor of the Tudor building and will soon control an extensive number of state rights productions for the territory that it is to control. Mr. Bugbee is expected in New York shortly on his first buying trip.

DAVID HORSLEY DUE IN NEW YORK.

D. W. Russell, Eastern manager of the interests of David Horsley, the veteran film manufacturer, expects his superior in New York shortly after the New Year. In fact, Mr. Horsley has already left his headquarters in Hollywood and is on his way East. It is understood that the manufacturer is making the trip partly because of an export situation that demands his attention, and also because of some state rights matters in connection with his Mary MacLaren photoplay, "Her Bargain," that require his presence in the East.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

Six Fox Releases for January

Four of These Will Be Special Features—Pearson, Mix and Markova Starred.

FIVE releases for January have thus far been announced by Fox Film Corporation, with the certainty of at least one more being added to the list. Three of these releases, and a fourth to come, are Fox Special Features. The first, Jan. 6, is "Stolen Honor," in which Miss Virginia Pearson is starred.

Tom Mix, whose activities heretofore have been confined to comedies, will make his debut January 13 as a star in Western dramas. "Cupid's Round Up," in which he will be seen, is reported to be a stirring story of ranch life, involving cattle rustling by a band of which a woman is the head and numerous battles between cowboys.

Madame Sanio Markova will make her second appearance as a star this month, her release, "A Heart's Revenge," being on the calendar of Special Features for January 20. Madame Markova takes the part of a Russian girl who is loved both by a Russian nobleman and an officer of the United States navy. Many of the scenes in this picture were taken on Buzzards Bay.

Announcement has not been made of the Fox Special Feature for Jan. 27, the understanding being that if the "Jack Spurlock, Prodigal" story, now being made in the east by George Walsh under the direction of Carl Harbaugh, can be finished in time it will be set down for that date. The probabilities, however, are said to be that this picture will not be ready before February.

No statement has been made of releases of Standard Pictures during January, although it is reported at the Fox offices that there may be announcements later.

The month's program includes two Fox-Lehrman Sunshine Comedies, "Shadows of Her Pest" and "Are Married Policemen Safe?" The first of these will be released Jan. 6 and the other Jan. 13.

ARTCRAFT'S NEXT RELEASE A WAR DRAMA

The next release of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation is an Elsie Ferguson photoplay, "Rose of the World," presenting a thrilling emotional war drama adapted from the popular book of the same name by Agnes and Edgerton Castle. This will be Artcraft's first offering for the new year and will be released Jan. 7.

As Rosamond, the wife of Captain Harry English, a young captain who is supposedly killed in battle, Miss Ferguson appears in one of the most highly emotional parts she has ever portrayed on either screen or stage. The plot of the story is of particular timeliness in that it deals with conditions brought about by war. In this play Miss Ferguson is also accorded her greatest opportunity of displaying beautiful gowns.

Supporting Miss Ferguson is perhaps one of the best casts yet given her in films. Wyndham Standing portrays the leading part opposite the star. Others in the cast are Percy Marmont, Ethel Martin, June Sloane, Clarence Handysides, Marie Bendetta, Gertrude Le Brant and Sloane De Masber.

WILD CANYON FOR ARBUCKLE COMEDY.

Fatty Arbuckle has returned to his Long Beach studio after a strenuous time on location in the desert. Roscoe is to test out his ability as a two-gun-man in his next comedy, "Out West," to be released in January. The desert scenes were necessary for the opening of the story, which tells of how Fatty was thrown off a railroad train in the heart of the desert.

In one of the toughest barrooms that ever graced a mining camp Fatty is working out his idea of how our Western ancestors acted in the well-known "drammer." Shortly the comedian will take his company to a location near Long Beach, Cal., that has been called the greatest find in motion pictures. This canyon is the wildest that has yet been used for photographic purposes and Arbuckle promises a surprise. The new comedy photography will rival the scenes in the best Western features.

CROWDING INCIDENT IN JAXON SERIAL.

The greatest attraction "A Daughter of Uncle Sam," the Jaxon serial to be released through General Film Company, beginning Jan. 19, will have for the exhibitor is that it has crowded into one-reel action usually found in a two-reel serial episode, eliminating a great deal of waste in time and film. Dull moments and draggy scenes have been eliminated, insuring the maximum of entertainment value. This serial has been designed to fit into any program at any part, which has prompted a great number of thankful inquiries from exhibitors over the country.

The amazing revelations regarding spy plots and German intrigues in the United States assure the picture fans of the country twelve episodes of the snappiest story. The timely nature of the spy plot exposures, with the other thrilling features of Uncle Sam's home preparations for the war, have given the Jaxon serial sufficient advertising value to make it worth while in every nook and corner of the country. Jane Vance, pretty, talented and youthful, portrays the heroine in the same part, while William Sorelle, a fine type of the hero, plays the leading male role.

ESSANAY SCENICS FOR RIVOLI OPENING.

The new series of Essanay scenics distributed by General Film Company has scored another triumph in that "The Great Natural Industries of Canada," the fourth of the series, found a place upon the program of the new Rivoli theater for the opening week. The scenic was booked through Manager P. H. Bloch of the New York exchange of General Film and was selected by Manager S. L. Rothapfel from an unusually large offering of scenics for the opening program of New York's newest motion picture palace.

The popularity and great merit of the Essanay scenics is evidenced by the fact that three of the first four subjects have been booked for showings at New York's leading picture playhouses. "Salmon Fishing in New Brunswick," the first of the series, was shown at the Strand, and "The Banff National Park" was given a prominent place upon the program of the Rialto during the week of Dec. 23.

Triangle Program

"Betty Takes a Hand," Comedy-Drama, and "Man Above the Law," Dramatic Story of Navajo Indian Country, on Release Schedule for Week of January 6.

A COMEDY-DRAMA featuring Olive Thomas, formerly of the "Ziegfeld Follies," New York, will open the Triangle program for the New Year on January 6, and Jack Richardson in "Man Above the Law," a dramatic story of the Navajo Indian country, is scheduled to follow.

For the first part of the week, Olive Thomas, with Charles Gunn, will appear in "Betty Takes a Hand," a pleasantly humorous, fast moving story written by Katherine Kavanaugh winner of the second prize in the recent Triangle Photoplay Magazine contest. The story deals with a girl who learns from her father that he had been swindled out of a mine by James Bartlett, now a wealthy politician of Los Angeles. Miss Thomas' work in this picture is said to afford her great opportunity to display her ability in many directions. This picture was directed by Jack Dillon.

For the second release of the week, Jack Richardson will appear in "Man Above the Law," with Claire McDowell and Josie Sedgwick supporting. This is a story of a man who leaves the civilized world in disgust because of an unlucky love affair and an even more unlucky brush with religion and law. Duke Chalmers (Jack Richardson) is the man who decides to be "just as bad as he can," and seeks out the painted desert of the Mexicans and Navajo Indians. Jack Richardson as the hardened character in this picture is said to display all the necessary touches and does some of the best work of his long career. Special Navajo huts were constructed for this picture, and "real" Mexicans and Indians were engaged to perfect the consistency of the local color.

In "His Punctured Romance," the Keystone Comedy also scheduled for release January 6, William Franey appears as a "bunko" wrestler who offers $250 to anyone who can throw him. By having a man underneath the stage armed with a hat pin and by the simple process of pounding the floor, Franey usually puts his opponent out. But when he lands in one town, Franey gets his signals mixed, and he is chased all over the village when the populace discovers his game.

"Matrimonial Breaker" and "His Day of Doom," one-reel Triangle Komedies, will complete the week's releases.

FOUR SPECIAL UNIVERSAL FEATURES.

The production forces at Universal City are busy on features to be distributed in March, following the regular schedule of release that Universal has announced for the first two months of the year. There are now under way, either at Universal City or on location where adaptable scenery is available, a production directed by Elsie Jane Wilson; another by Edgar Jones; a third attraction by Jack Ford, and a fourth release by Elmer Clifton.

The Jack Ford production will engage Harry Carey as star, with Molly Malone his featured leading lady, in "Lin McLean," from the widely read story of the same title by Owen Wister, author of "The Virginian." George Hively prepared the scenario. Important roles in support of Mr. Carey and Miss Malone will be played by Betty Schade, Edward Jones, Vesta Pegg and M. K. Wilson.

Ella Hall and Emory Johnson are playing the featured roles in "Donna Perfecta," the Spanish story written by B. Perez Galdos, now being picturized by Elsie Jane Wilson. Ruby La Fayette, who gained screen fame in "Mother O' Mine"; Gretchen Lederer, Harry Holden, Maxfield Stanley and Winter Hall are playing essential roles in the supporting company.

Director Edgar Jones has Louise Lovely as his star in "The Quest of Joan," and Herbert Rawlinson is to be the star of "More Power to Him," now being created by Elmer Clifton. Clair Du Brey will be Mr. Rawlinson's leading lady. Philo McCullough is a new leading man for Louise Lovely, appearing with her for the first time in James Oliver Curwood's story. Gertrude Aster and Charles Hill Miles will also be prominent in Miss Lovely's support.

NORMA TALMADGE BEGINS NEW PRODUCTION.

Norma Talmadge has commenced work on her new photoplay, "By Right of Purchase," in which she is presented by Joseph M. Schenck. This will be the fourth of her Select Pictures, and its production follows that of "Ghosts of Yesterday," which Miss Talmadge completed recently.

"By Right of Purchase" is a society drama with a New York setting, and among its interiors will be a gorgeous reproduction of Hero Land, the great bazaar conducted this year for war charities in New York. Miss Talmadge plays the part of a moth-like young wife who spends her time flitting from one bit of frivolity to another, and the role affords her opportunity for the wearing of an array of beautiful gowns. The picture will be directed by Charles Miller, and Eugene O'Brien has been chosen as leading man. Mr. O'Brien also plays opposite Miss Talmadge in her latest picture, "Ghosts of Yesterday," which is a screen adaptation of Rupert Hughes' famous play, "Two Women," and presents the star in a highly emotional characterization. It is a play of big moments, tense scenes, and thrilling situations, and is the last word in elaborate productions. It is distributed by Select Pictures.

MISS PEARSON STARS IN "STOLEN HONOR."

The theft of a painting in Italy and the attempt to fasten the crime on an American girl, an artist, who made a copy of it for the real thieves, is the basis of the story, "Stolen Honor," which will be the William Fox Special Feature for Jan. 6. The picture had originally been scheduled for release Dec. 30, but inability to complete it on account of the illness of Miss Virginia Pearson occasioned a delay of one week. The current release, "For Liberty," is a Gladys Brockwell production.

Scene from "Stolen Honor" (Fox).

Miss Pearson has the role of the artist in "Stolen Honor," and closely interwoven with the plot to rob her of her liberty, and, incidentally, of her sweetheart, is the story of a friend who is on bad terms with her husband. This fact, so the producer's announcement explains, makes it difficult for the accused woman to tell her whereabouts at certain important periods without thereby seeming to compromise the wife.

Supporting the star are Clay Clement, Ethel Hallor, Walter Law, Dorothy Rogers, A. Ardrizonia, George Marazonia and Edward Roseman. The story was written by George Scarborough and the picture was made under the direction of Richard Stanton, who recently was brought from the Pacific Coast studios to direct Miss Pearson. This is the first picture he has made since his arrival in the East.

EXCLUSIVE PICTURES IN GAUMONT WEEKLY.

Once more the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly comes forward with exclusive pictures which substantiate its claim that its cameramen are never asleep. One of these exclusive subjects, which is pictured in the issue released Dec. 31, shows the landing in the Presidio, San Francisco, of Miss Katherine Stinson, the daring girl aviator who has set a new American record in flying without stop the 610 miles between San Diego and San Francisco, California.

Another exclusive picture in this issue is the training of man-of-war's men at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station. In this subject is shown the famous composer and bandmaster, John Philip Sousa, and his new marine band of 300 pieces. A wonderful scene shows Commandant Moffett's living flag of bluejackets at salute, with 9,300 tars in the most remarkable military formation on record.

New England is again coming into its own. Many years ago the coast towns of New England contained thriving shipyards, but these fell into disuse and decay. Now, however, they have become rehabilitated, new ones have sprung up, the old mariners and shipbuilders have resumed work, thousands of young men are learning the trade, and in spite of, or, rather, because of the war, New England is happy. In this number of the Weekly there is shown the launching of the first vessel to be built in Fall River in more than 40 years. Also there are many other subjects.

GOOD REPORTS FOR PARALTA PICTURES.

At a meeting of the executive and department heads of Paralta Plays and the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, which took place this week at the office of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, telegrams were read from the various exchanges handling Paralta Plays throughout the country, all of which pointed to a most brilliant outlook for the placing of these productions in the foremost theaters of the country.

In every case the exchange managers were most enthusiastic in telling of the splendid reception the productions received when screened for the exhibitors in their territory, and stated that in most cases contracts have already been signed in the principal cities for the exhibition of Paralta Plays.

Julian Eltinge in New York

Impersonator Comes to Metropolis to Buy "Gowns"—Is to Remain in Picture Work.

JULIAN ELTINGE, who has been in New York for the past few weeks buying gowns and other things incidental to a continuance in the motion pictures, is planning his return to California to begin work on a new picture following his third Paramount picture, "The Widow's Might," to be released Jan. 28.

Before he left Los Angeles, Mr. Eltinge confided to certain newspaper sphinxes that he was going to allow himself just two more years in skirts and then become a concert singer. As a matter of fact Eltinge has a high baritone voice, excellently trained, and he could easily engage in concert work with profit and credit. But if the heavy demand for Eltinge pictures in which he plays his well-known dual role keeps up in the future as it has done for the first three of his Paramount pictures it is doubtful if Mr. Eltinge will be allowed by the public to give up his feminine impersonations.

"I might have become a Shakespearean actor or a grand opera singer with the time I have given to my work," said Mr. Eltinge. "It happened by accident first. I had to wear skirts in a small part and saw the public liked it. But I wouldn't wear them in a manlike way. No, indeed. I engaged the finest Delsarte teacher I could find to give me fluidity of movement. Voice trainers and dancing masters surrounded me. I kept myself broke for the early years of my stage career paying off my various tutors. You who see me swing a train, flirt with a fan or enter a ballroom know nothing of the long wearing routine I endured before my mirror. Three hours daily was my invariable rule. I studied the role of woman, and it became the most engrossing occupation of my life.

"I have decided to remain in the photoplay world for two reasons. I like the work, and I like California. I can go on with pictures and at the same time work hard at my vocal training, and as soon as my new home is completed here I will settle down to serious study of repertoire."

SELBURN COMEDIES ARE WHOLESOME.

Rollicking, swiftly moving comedy of a novel sort is to be found in "Wedding Bells and Lunatics," the forthcoming release in General Film's series of Selburn comedies, featuring Neal Burns and Gertrude Selby. All sorts of complications result when the heroine is given twenty-four hours in which to get married in order to claim an estate.

The wholesomeness of the humor in the Selburn comedies has made them prime favorites with exhibitors everywhere and they are among the most widely booked comedy features on General Film Company's program.

"MADAM SPY" (Universal).

Week starting January 21, the Universal will release "Madam Spy," a sensational melodrama, having Jack Mulhall as the star, with Donna Drew his leading lady. Douglas Gerard directed the production from the scenario of Harvey Gates based on Lee Morrison's story of the same title.

The most important female role will be played by Claire Du Brey, who will enact the part of the genuine spy whom Jack Mulhall impersonates when he dons woman's clothes to foil intrigue against the United States Government. Wadsworth Scene from "Madam Spy" (Universal).

Harris and Maud Emory also have essential roles in Mr. Mulhall's support.

"Madam Spy" may be added to the list of "spy" features that abound in these days of war with assurance of logical entertainment. Intrigue is used as a means to introducing sensational events and daring exploits that mark exciting melodrama, and give Jack Mulhall opportunity for the performance of numerous hazardous "stunts."

Petrova in Young Mother Role

Second Petrova Picture Presents Madame Petrova in a New Type of Role—Title to Be Announced Next Week.

The vehicle in which Madame Olga Petrova will make her second appearance as the star of her own picture organization, the title for which is to be announced next week, offers the Polish artist in a role distinctly different from any in which she has yet been seen. Brimful of human interest and poignant heart appeal, the story presents Madame Petrova in the role of a young mother, torn between the call of professional duty toward humanity in general and the urge of "mother-love" for her small son.

"THE BLUEBIRD" MAKES DEMAND ON FILMCRAFT.

When Maeterlinck's "The Bluebird" was presented to the world less than a decade ago it was acclaimed one of the gems of literature, and conceded a masterpiece of the Belgian author. Up to the present time no film producer had dared pay the enormous royalties required for the motion picture rights and expend the tremendous amount necessary properly to produce the play in films.

None but a large organization equipped to handle a subject of this magnitude could have done justice to it, and even Artcraft has found it a colossal undertaking. The intricate details in intelligently portraying allegory and symbolism, requiring multiple exposures in photography; the massive settings, the army of actors, which numbered approximately a thousand, requiring weeks of rehearsals have been successfully mastered by Maurice Tourneur, the director to whom was intrusted this production.

"The Bluebird" sharply draws attention to the advantages of the screen in the dramatization of big themes, and demonstrates the giant strides which have been made in the art of motion pictures.

The cast is too lengthy to enumerate, all the ordinary matters of life being personified, and beautiful girls in symbolical costumes interpret various parts. Eleanor Masters, the model for James Montgomery Flagg, is Milk; Mary Kennedy, Water; Lillian Cooke, Fairy Berylune; Gertrude McCoy, Light; Rose Rolanda, premier dancer in "Over the Top," leads the ballet in symbolical dances, and Lyn Donelson is Night. Tula Belle and Robin Macdougall are the children who search for the Bluebird. Both are well known in picture work. Tula is eight years old, and Robin ten.

STRONG CAST APPEARS IN BILLIE BURKE FILM.

An exceptionally strong cast is presented in "Eve's Daughter," Billie Burke's next Paramount picture, which is being directed by James Kirkwood. The story is vivacious, and extreme care was taken to select for the supporting roles actors able to carry the tempo set by Miss Burke. The principal parts are interpreted by Thomas Meighan, Lionel Atwill, William Riley Hatch, Florence Flynn, Harriet Ross, Lucille Carney, Mary Navaro and Harry Lee.

Lionel Atwill and Florence Flynn have the same roles they played in the stage production, as presented at the Playhouse, New York. Harry Lee is one of the most versatile members of the Famous Players-Lasky stock company, and in the past two years has appeared in fifty-one photoplays.

The chief cameraman assigned to film the scenes in "Eve's Daughter," the Paramount picture starring Billie Burke, is L. E. Williams, who has gained an enviable reputation as a photographer. Great responsibility rests on the cameraman in big productions with high-salaried actors, as retakes are exceedingly expensive. In winter, especially when static electricity develops in negative, considerable dependence is placed upon the photographer.

HOTALING CONTINUITY OF MENTAL KIND.

Arthur D. Hotaling, director of Essanay General Film one-reel comedies, is one of the most eccentric originators and producers of comedies in the industry. In the first place, Mr. Hotaling never works by a script, but produces from a mental continuity that develops as the scenes are taken.

Essanay's comedy General Film release for January 5 is "He Loved Her So," a lively, scampering affair, in which a suspicious husband gets into a thrilling and laughable mess over his jealousy. And there are pretty girls, too.

Previous General Film comedies are enjoying widespread booking. Essanay is gaining a name in new channels for its clever, swiftly moving comedies.

Essanay's scenic one-reelers, released through General Film, are filling a long-felt want, judging by the booking office reports. There are scenes out of the ordinary, emphasing the artistic grandeur of the spots photographed as well as revealing curious and ponderous things to interest the somewhat blase movie goer.

VIOLA DANA DANCES IN "WINDING TRAIL."

Viola Dana's artistry as a dancer is shown in Metro's screen drama, "The Winding Trail," the five-act photoplay of early Western mining days directed by John H. Collins from the story by Katharine Kavanaugh and June Mathis. The little star does an exquisite toe-dance in the fluffy tarletan skirts of a premiere danseuse and later in a beautiful Spanish costume a most clever and snappy Spanish dance.

New Bluebirds in Preparation

Schedule of Releases Complete to February 11 and Others in the Making.

THE arrangement of the Bluebird program having been completed until the week starting Feb. 11, production forces are active in preparing future attractions in which all of Bluebird's stars are participating. During the past week three fixtures not previously announced have been added to the program—Franklyn Farnum in "The Fighting Grin," Jan. 28; Violet Mersereau in "Morgan's Raiders," Feb. 4, and "The Wife He Bought," starring Carmel Myers, Feb. 11.

Mae Murray's production of "The Eternal Columbine," directed by Robert Leonard, from H. Sheridan Bickers' story and scenario, has been completed and Miss Murray is now employed in filming "The Eleventh Commandment," written for her by F. McGrew Willis.

Two features for Ruth Clifford have been finished by Director Rupert Julian and she is now preparing "The Heart of the Desert," from Honore Willsie's book, under direction of Wilfred Lucas. The Rupert Julian productions, being finally edited and prepared for release, are "His Wife in Arizona," which arrived at Bluebird headquarters in New York during the past week, and "The Highest Card," just finished at Seven Oaks, Cal. In all of Miss Clifford's Bluebirds Monroe Salisbury will be featured as her leading man.

Director Stuart Paton, who has lately taken the screen management of Carmel Myers, has completed "The Green Seal," from Charles Edmund Walk's book, and is now producing "Bona," written and prepared for the screen by Harvey Gates. In "The Green Seal" Ashton Dearholt will be Miss Myers' leading man, and in "Bona" Kenneth Harlan will lead the supporting company.

Dorothy Phillips, under direction of Ida May Park, is filming "Her Fling," from a magazine story by Katherine Leisher Robbins. "The Girl Who Dared," directed by Allen Holubar, was lately completed, with Miss Phillips the star. William Stowell, Claire Du Brey and Frankie Lee will be Miss Phillips' chief supporters in "Her Fling."

TRIANGLE HART AND FAIRBANKS REISSUES IN JANUARY.

Two Triangle features in which William S. Hart and Douglas Fairbanks appear will be released in January as re-issues. On January 6, "Between Men," Triangle re-issue of distinctive merit starring Hart, will be released. In this production, Hart is cast as Bob White, a Westerner who comes to New York to aid a friend on Wall street whose business has been ruined by a rejected suitor for his daughter's hand. Through his ability to fight and because he has plenty of money to back him up, White manages to put the Wall street financier back on his feet. Hart is given great opportunity to display his fighting qualities in this picture.

On January 20, "Reggie Mixes In," one of Fairbanks' best pictures produced while he worked under Triangle, will be released. This picture, more than any other, served to introduce Fairbanks to audiences as a Triangle favorite, and was responsible for the introduction of Doug's famous grin and dynamic energy. These two Triangle features will open the 1918 re-issue campaign, and one release a month of a Hart and Fairbanks picture will follow. Their popularity as re-issues will be unquestionably increased, as both actors did some of the best work of their careers while acting under the Triangle banner.

HART PICTURE COMING JANUARY 14.

The next William S. Hart-Thomas H. Ince production to be released by Artcraft Pictures will be "Wolves of the Rail," an original story by Denison Clift, presenting "Big Bill" in the role of a railroad detective. In this photoplay Hart is first seen as Buck Andrade, a daring highwayman, whose gang is feared and dreaded by the officials of a Western railroad. Buck's conversion is effected at the bedside of his dying mother and he gives to his task of reformation all the energy, all the vitality and all of the thoroughness that characterize his career as a "bad man," it is announced.

One of the big thrills in "Wolves of the Rail" is presented when Hart, mounted on an Indian pony, races with a "wild" locomotive. Catching up with the on-rushing engine he leaps from the saddle into the engine cab just in time to throw the lever into reverse, bringing the locomotive to a standstill and preventing a collision.

"Wolves of the Rail" will be released by Artcraft on Jan. 14. In the cast are Vola Vale, C. Norman Hammond, Melbourne MacDowell, Billy Elmer and Thomas Kurihara.

CREEL SELECTS HY MAYER'S CARTOONS.

George Creel, Director of Public Information, has selected one of Hy Mayer's cartoons, originally appearing in the Universal Current Events, as fitting propaganda to go abroad to the nations allied with the United States in the world war. "The Eagle's Brood" is the title of the cartoon and nine copies have been sent to the Allies for exhibition on the screen as an officially authorized action in support of the war.

"THE AVENGING TRAIL" PHOTOGRAPHED WITH DIFFICULTY.

A large number of the exterior scenes in Harold Lockwood's new production, "The Avenging Trail," based on Henry Oyen's novel of the North woods, "Gaston Olaf," to be released by Metro on December 31, were photographed with no little amount of difficulty. Those are the winter scenes, which were made while the snow was falling with early winter heaviness. In order to prevent the snow from flying into the lens and causing a blur in the negative the technical staff of the company bought a large waterproof covering, attached a pole to each of the four corners, and the canopy thus formed was held over the camera. With this covering to shield the camera the scenes were photographed.

One of the features of "The Avenging Trail" is the beauty of its natural background views. The setting of the story lends itself particularly well to pretty scenery The action is laid in a Northern lumber locality during the winter and early spring, and, as is the case in that country, snow covers the ground during that period. A happy choice of locations was made and some unusually beautiful snow "shots" were obtained.

Aside from its scenic beauty, "The Avenging Trail" has other points to recommend it. It is a vigorous drama, and, therefore, a new type of vehicle for the star—one that is expected to cause comment because Mr. Lockwood has never done anything like it before. The fight scenes are another unusual feature, and it is said that more stirring fights than those have seldom if ever been enacted before the camera.

WORK BEGINS ON "THE HOUSE OF GLASS."

The filming of "The House of Glass" was begun this week in the Clara Kimball Young studios in New Rochelle. This will be the next Select Picture produced by Miss Young and her own company, and follows her most recently completed offering, "The Marionettes." It is being directed by Emile Chautard.

Only a portion of the casting has been accomplished. Corliss Giles, who was Miss Young's leading man in "Shirley Kaye," his been chosen to support her in the present production, and her father, Edward Kimball, whose portrayal of the father in "Magda" attracted widespread approval, has been given a strong part. The role of Burke, the chauffeur-cook, which is one of the most important in the play, had been planned for Nigel Barrie, but his enlistment last week in the Royal Flying Corps necessitated other arrangements, and the place has not as yet been filled. His wife, Mrs. Nigel Barrie, has been cast as Nellie, the maid.

"The House of Glass" came to Miss Young after spirited bidding from rival film concerns, and is one of the most important purchases of the year. It is a melodrama of the highest order written by Max Marcin, and was a record breaker when shown on Broadway a few seasons ago. The screen adaptation has been made by Charles F. Whittaker. This will be the fourth of the Select Star pictures made by Clara Kimball Young and her own company, and when finished will be distributed through Select exchanges.

NEWMAN'S PICTURES FOR EDUCATIONAL.

E. M. Newman, whose illustrated traveltalks are a looked for annual event, has contracted with E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager of the Educational Films Corporation of America, for the release of thirty travel subjects during the next twelve months. The pictures are to be exhibited only in first class moving picture theaters in the United States, Canada, Mexico, South America, and all of the European countries. Mr. Newman has visited every habitable part of the globe, and his pictures are rare and unusual.

This departure will in no way interfere with Newman's regular annual series of traveltalks. The lecturer will continue to travel for five months each year as he has for the past ten years in search of new impressions and up-to-date scenes for his many "fellow-travelers."

Alice Brady in "The Knife"

Select Gets Real Atmosphere in New Brady Production—Staged on Southern Plantation.

ONE of the distinctive features of Alice Brady's new Select production, "The Knife," which is now being filmed in the Fifty-sixth street studio, will be the unusually beautiful Southern scenes with which the story opens. These were taken on the famous Emerson plantation, near Jacksonville, Florida, and embody in architecture and grounds the real atmosphere of the old South. For generations past the Emersons have played a large part in the affairs of their state and their home is typical of all that Southern wealth and culture imply. In their generous welcome of Miss Brady and her company they lived up to the Emerson traditions of hospitality and placed at the disposal of the star and her director, Robert G. Vignola, every possible aid.

The Emerson house is the familiar double-galleried white mansion set back in the midst of green lawns and spreading trees, with the darkies' quarters in the background. Its acres comprise some of the finest hunting preserves in the state and more than one picturesque hunting scene was staged during the company's stay.

"The Knife," which was written by Eugene Walter, and which was one of last season's Broadway successes, has been adapted for the screen by Charles Maigne. In it Miss Brady plays the role of a pretty Southern girl imbued with all the superstitions of her old negro nurse. In New York her desire to peer into the future leads her to a clairvoyant whose side line is white slaving, and from then on the action moves tensely and rapidly. Miss Brady's leading man, Frank Morgan, appears as the doctor who rescues her and avenges her injuries. Other members of the cast are Johnnie Walker, Anne Cornwall, Helen Lackaye and Myra Brook.

"The Knife" is the third Select Picture to be made by Alice Brady. Miss Brady's latest Select production is "Woman and Wife."

DOROTHY DALTON WORKING AT NIGHT.

Dorothy Dalton's company is again working nights. The scenario of "Flare-Up Sal," her third Paramount picture, calls for some beautiful lighting effects, which Thomas H. Ince believes are best obtained after dark.

Dorothy Dalton says that of all the photoplays in which she has appeared since deserting the speaking stage for the films none approaches "Flare-Up Sal." It is a singularly interesting story of the big Western country in the fifties, and Miss Dalton has a role that enables her to display her charm as a comedienne, as well as her splendid powers as an emotional actress. Many of the scenes of "Flare-Up Sal" were photographed in the famous Redwood forests of California, and, aside from the intrinsic worth of the story and the histrionic efforts of Miss Dalton and her supporting company the settings are so unusual and picturesque as to form a background that should make the subject one of the most beautiful photoplays of the year.

"HOME RUN AMBROSE" (L-Ko).

Mack Swain will be the star of L-Ko's release for January 16, "Home Run Ambrose" is the title, and it is the third of the "Ambrose" comedies released under the L-Ko brand. Baseball and other forms of excitement enter into the laughable episodes in which the newest L-Ko abounds. Mack Swain's individual style of comedy is carried forward to the best advantage in "Home Run Ambrose," and his supporting company was assembled by Director W. S. Frederick from the most proficient members of L-Ko's stock forces, giving a combination of star and company that promises the very best comedy that made him popular as star of another brand when he established "Ambrose" as a screen character. Thus exhibitors are able to make capital of both the star and the L-Ko trade mark.

FOUR METRO-DREW COMEDIES IN JANUARY.

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew have produced a quartette of sure-fire laugh provokers of one reel each for release by Metro during January, 1918. The premier comedy team have selected four of their best comedies of the domestic life of the "Henrys" to start the releases of the new year.

"Their Mutual Motor" is a story telling the experiences of the Henrys with a second-hand car, which they use as a general excursion vehicle for the entertainment of their friends and their friends' friends, will be released on January 7. This picture was written and produced by the Drews from a suggestion by Alma Woodward.

The second January release, on the 14th, will be "Why Henry Left Home," which explains the reason for hubby Henry's general dissatisfaction with home surroundings that should have been sublime. Wifey finds that Henry enjoys himself at the home of a friend where he can smoke to his heart's delight and soon she makes home so happy for hubby that he becomes a regular stay-at-home. Bertie Badger Moyers suggested the plot for this farce play which the Metro comedy team produced.

"His First Love," another January release of the Metro-Drew comedies is a story based on a suggestion of Bertie Badger Moyers. This comedy, which is scheduled to be shown on the 21st, deals with that question which has been asked so often by wives of their hubbies, "Am I the only woman you ever loved and asked to marry you?" Of course Henry answers "Yes, my darling," but he has his own doubts of the truthfulness of the statement. In the end wifey convinces him that she believes him and then he decides to believe himself.

"Under the Influence," the last January comedy release, is scheduled for the 28th. Shannon Fife, who has written the stories of "Red, White and Blue Blood" and "God's Half Acre" for Metro as vehicles for Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne and Mabel Taliaferro respectively, suggested the plot of this Drew comedy. How various influences have their effect on the domestic bliss of the Henrys and how they at last settled down to sensible influences make this picture a delightful farce.

TWO SUBJECTS SELECTED FOR TAYLOR HOLMES.

George K. Spoor announces "A Pair of Sixes" and "The Rainbow Chaser" as future vehicles for Taylor Holmes, the famous comedian. "A Pair of Sixes" was written by Edward Peple, author of "The Littlest Rebel," "The Prince Chap," "The Love Route," and other stage successes. Mr. Holmes will play the role of T. Boggs Johns, the vivacious patent pill manufacturer, affording him plenty of opportunity to register his inimitable mirth-making genius. "The Rainbow Chaser" is an adaptation of the magazine story, "Mr. Williams Takes a Chance," by Freeman Tilden.

George K. Spoor imported a real merry-go-round into his studios for scenes in Taylor Holmes' "Ruggles of Red Gap." It was brought in in pieces and put together in record-breaking time in order that the company, on their return from Phoenix, Arizona, should not be delayed in filming the scenes.

Preparations for the release of this George K. Spoor special are now being completed. The advertising end of the production has been given unlimited consideration, the chief feature of which is to be a billboard campaign, Mr. Spoor's policy to help exhibitors on all of his ultra features.

"Uneasy Money," featuring Taylor Holmes, an adaptation of the story by the same name, is to be the first of Mr. Spoor's special releases. "Uneasy Money" shows the famous comedian in the role of an amusing English lord in America.

"Men Who Have Made Love to Me," featuring Mary MacLane, the authoress, is already receiving quizzes from exhibitors representing all parts of the country. The scenario artistic directors have decided to color-tint the entire production, thus adding to the already high type of effect of the picture.

DOLL PICTURES GOING STRONG.

Jessie McCutcheon Raleigh, creator of the famous "Good Fairy" statuette, has arranged a visit to the Essanay studios to watch Howard S. Moss at work upon forthcoming animated doll pictures. "The idea of using dolls in motion pictures is most unique," wrote the sister of John T. McCutcheon, the cartoonist. "I am most interested in your creation and hope at some early time to meet you and hear the explanation of your achievement and ambitions along that line."

Mr. Moss visited the artist in her loop studio and spent some time in chatting over his ambitions with her. She had seen his first big doll feature. "The Dream Doll," and expressed wonder over its uncanny presentation of dolls living and acting as though they were really human.

"The Dream Doll," an Essanay Perfection Picture, is playing for full houses all over, according to reports. Not only is it creating delight in the hearts of little children, but its novelty is appealing to grownups of all ages.

"Sadie Goes to Heaven," little Mary McAlister's latest Essanay contribution to the exhibitor, released the day before Christmas, is finding a great field of admirers. Director W. S. Van Dyke has received he compliments of the trade on his artistic production, rich in heart throbs and smile-evokers.

Brady Preparing Third Historic Subject

"The Beautiful Mrs. Reynolds," Released in January, Will Treat of Hamilton-Burr Feud.

"The Beautiful Mrs. Reynolds" will be retained as the title of the historical romance of Alexander Hamilton and Aaron Burr to be published in January by World Pictures Brady-Made. There was some discussion among World executives regarding the advisability of this choice lest it conceal the full identity of the story and characters.

In the final conclusion, however, it was decided to bring out the Hamilton-Burr value by supplying a suitable subtitle in the printing and newspaper advertising, while still holding the attractive main association which attaches to a renowned woman of beauty such as Mrs. Reynolds, whose fascinations played havoc with the lives of great statesmen of colonial times.

The story provided by Samuel M. Weller in his scenario follows not only the heart affairs of Hamilton and Burr, but the political struggle between them by which their already bitter rivalry was intensified to the point of extremest hatred. This side of the picture quite naturally necessitated the most careful preparations in pursuit of accuracy to the end that before the staging of "The Beautiful Mrs. Reynolds" was begun, Mr. Brady had assembled one of the most complete libraries of that period in existence.

Inasmuch as the major portion of the play was laid in old New York it was essential to conduct a minute search of the ancient book stores and print shops to secure really authoritative data.

The cast is headed by Carlyle Blackwell as Hamilton, June Elvidge as Mrs. Reynolds, Evelyn Greeley as Margaret Moncrief, and Arthur Ashley as Burr.

This is the third in a series of romantic historical dramas fostered by World Pictures Brady-Made. The two others, which were remarkably successful, were "The Heart of a Hero" (Nathan Hale) and "Betsy Ross."

"MAIMED IN A HOSPITAL" (Nestor).

The Nestor comedy to be distributed through Universal exchanges week starting January 14 will be "Maimed in a Hospital," showing how great fun may be provoked amid surroundings ordinarily representing anything save a topic for laughter. Dave Morris will be the chief merry-maker, with Gladys Tennyson his leading lady and Max Asher heading a large and lively supporting company. "Maimed in a Hospital" is declared to represent the sprightliest ideas of Nestor comedy, and there is advance assurance that the best traditions of the trade mark will be cleverly sustained in the newest offering.

FANNIE WARD FINISHES FIRST PATHE FEATURE.

Fannie Ward's first appearance in Pathe's "big-star-big-story" features will be in "Innocent," after the play of the same name. She will be supported by John Miltern, playing the same role that he created in the stage production, and Armand Kalitz, the musical comedy star. This subject is one of the most colorful plays ever produced for screen presentation.

It is reported more than twice as much money has been spent as is usually put into high grade five-reel features in order to give Director George Fitzmaurice every opportunity to instill the utmost truth in the color and atmosphere of the Orient, which he knows so well. It is said a remarkably high grade of photography has been secured, and that the lighting effects have been so skillfully blended that pictorially this feature may be classed as a camera study.

The story of "Innocent" begins and ends in China. Miss Ward in the title role is seen as a young girl brought up within the confines of a high-walled Chinese garden. The death of her father leaves her dependent upon the protection of her father's friend, played by John Miltern.

VICTOR MOORE IN "OH! U BOAT."

Klever Pictures, Inc., will release on December 31 a timely comedy called "Oh! U-Boat," featuring Victor Moore. It was written by Thos. J. Gray and directed by Chester M. DeVonde.

The comedy tells a story about Vic, who hates water so much that he has to be blindfolded before he will take a bath. His wife is a regular mermaid, and at the beach she dives and and swims like a fish.

Scene from "Oh! U Boat" (Klever).

This comedy will go very big, and is full of lots of laughs and excitement. It is so timely it will fit in anywhere. Moore is supported by a large cast, including a bevy of beach beauties who are bathing when interrupted by the U-Boat.

"THE WIFE HE BOUGHT" (Bluebird).

Carmel Myers, one of Bluebirds newest stars, will make her third appearance on that program February 11 in Harry Solter's production of "The Wife He Bought," a sensational drama based on a story by Larry Evans, originally appearing in a popular magazine under the title of "One Clear Call." Kenneth Harlan, who has appeared with Miss Myers in her two preceding Bluebirds, will again be her leading man.

Harry Solter was especially engaged to direct Miss Myers in this presentation. He selected as the company to support her Howard Crampton, Fred Schilling, Allen Sears, and Sidney Dean. "The Wife He Bought" has the nature of its plot disclosed in the title, money and mercenary actions being the moving impulse of the principal characters.

The nature of the plot places "The Wife He Bought" in a class with "The Lash of Power," the first Bluebird in which Miss Myers appeared. There is fine opportunity for both the star and her leading man, and sensational episodes are featured in the progress of the story. It is declared that the shipwreck scene, which serves to bring events to a climax, has been produced with extreme realism.

GAUMONT-MUTUAL WEEKLY FOR 1918.

Theatergoers have always considered the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly one of the foremost releases picturing news topics, but plans which have been carefully worked out during the past few months enable the Gaumont company to promise its patrons an ever better news reel during 1918.

Gaumont is able to make this promise because of its unsurpassed facilities for news gathering. It has co-operative branches in all of the principal countries, and expert news cameramen throughout the entire world. This year will be the biggest year of all.

For three years the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly has continued an unbroken series of numbers, the year 1917 terminating with No. 156. For convenience, however, it has been decided to start a new series of numbers, and the issue for the first week of the new year will be No. 1.

HODKINSON HAS SERVICE DEPARTMENT.

A genuine exhibitors service department, devoted exclusively to the problems of the exhibitor, has been established by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. At its head is L. F. Guimond, who was with Mr. Hodkinson at the Triangle Distributing Corporation. While there he was in several departments, including publicity and advertising and executive management, as well as sales promotion.

Mr. Guimond has had five years of exhibitor experience, and is still an exhibitor, owning a small town theater. His previous work has been as a free lance advertising man, and throughout his experience in the business has specialized in analytical studies looking toward service from the producer to the screen.

Jewel Has Flexible Booking System

Its Production Not Tied Up in Long-Term Contracts—May Be Used at Any Time.

THROUGH the medium of page advertisements in the trade press Jewel Productions, Inc., has thrown down the gauntlet to the "long time contract" producers and announced to the exhibitor that it is willing to meet him even more than half way.

"The new Jewel plan of marketing its products undoubtedly has a number of features which the exhibitor will appreciate," said Harry M. Berman, Jewel sales manager, in a recent interview.

"Our method of selling pictures is the only fair way to dispose of goods. The exhibitor can book our productions whenever he likes, and without the burden of a long term contract.

"We do not force the exhibitor to make a large deposit to secure a Jewel. Neither do we insist that he tie himself up with a contract to take all our pictures. He can take as many or as few of our successes as he sees fit, and the man who books one feature will receive just as much consideration as the large exhibitor who wants them all.

"There are many concerns who, if they had pictures of like quality, would jump at the chance to tie up purchasing exhibitors with all manner of restrictions. We make no unfair demands on exhibitors.

"He can play our features and fill his program out with any other picture he sees fit to book. We are not afraid of our goods. Other producers, because of the exhorbitant salaries they pay their stars and the tremendous overhead under which they are laboring, have to demand extremely heavy rentals for pictures that have no greater drawing power than ours.

"We do not make pictures; we buy them, and before we make a purchase we apply the acid test. We have the advantage over our competitors in this point alone, and because we are not tied up with high salaried artists or the cost of expensive production, can furnish the exhibitor with high class goods at moderate rentals.

"The eight pictures we now own are pictures which bring results to the exhibitor. They show this in the box office reports from many parts of the country. We can point to numerous instances where our features have played day and date against pictures of supposed greater merit and broken box office records at the same time.

"We look at a great many pictures to secure one and when we decide to buy are mighty sure that we have something which will 'go over.'

"Another thing which has a great bearing on the success of Jewels is the fact that having no regular release schedule, we can devote the time necessary to making every picture a success. We can keep pounding on our advertising of one feature until we have gotten the amount of publicity necessary to make that feature a box office success. Other producers who must adhere to an announced schedule have so many pictures that they cannot devote the same amount of thought to any single release.

"We give quality instead of quantity and have yet to receive a serious complaint from an exhibitor. We have, however, had many requests for rebookings and can prove that Jewels have been successfully used to fight some of the biggest attractions on the market.

"We base our success on a fair deal to exhibitors and pictures which drive home their own value, by box office results."

"WITHIN THE CUP"—A STUDY OF BOHEMIA.

An opportunity is afforded photoplay patrons to study and compare the artistic and Bohemian life of Paris and that of New York in the next Paralta play, whose star is Bessie Barriscale, "Within the Cup." This stellar vehicle begins in the famous Quartier Latin of Paris and ends in Greenwich Village which is our Manhattan equivalent for the Parisian locale of writers, artists and models. The sets for the Parisian beginning of the photoplay were made from drawings and photographs made under the direction of the author, Monte Katterjohn, in Paris and supplemented by instructions personally given at the Paralta Studios by Mr. Katterjohn.

For the purpose of having the Greenwich Village sets as atmospheric as possible, Mr. Katterjohn made a special trip from the Paralta studios to New York. In Greenwich Village photographs and drawings were made under his direction. The author had lived both in Paris and Greenwich Village and so the photoplay has been photographed in sets as atmospheric as they could possible be created by scene painters and carpenters under well informed direction.

"UNCLE SAM AT WORK" WILL BE RE-ISSUE.

Two years ago the Universal released a twelve-reel subject entitled "Uncle Sam at Work," basing the production on "The American Government," a book by Frederick J. Haskin, that explained, in minute detail, the inner workings of every branch of Federal activities. There was much interest shown by the public in the details then disclosed, but as this country was not then at war the appeal was not so general as it would have been in militant times.

Universal believes that exhibitors will be interested in a reissue of "Uncle Sam at Work" and has prepared twelve separate reels, to be released singly, under new titles, as applying to the United States at war. These reels will be complete in themselves and may be used as adjuncts to a program or may be combined into a complete entertainment. It is believed that there will be a patriotic interest in seeing "the wheels turn" in Uncle Sam's marvellous machine of government, and every detail is shown as applying to all departments.

What they do in Washington and how they do it in the War, Navy and Treasury Departments in particular, make extremely interesting subjects for pictures at this time. The ordnance and commissary branches of the sea and land operations; the manufacture of guns and munitions, the details of every activity in forwarding the work of war are all vitally important in public interest, and "Uncle Sam at Work" pictures an endless variety of these inspiring and intensely interesting details.

BRENON MAKING "LONE WOLF" SEQUEL.

Now that "The Passing of the Third Floor Back," with Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson, is completed, announcement is made of the next production to which Mr. Brenon is to devote his energies. Shortly he will start work on a continuation of the novel by Louis Joseph Vance, whose "Lone Wolf" provided him with so successful a vehicle last year. The further adventures of the Lone Wolf are to be recorded on the screen in "False Faces" or "The Sequel to the Lone Wolf."

Bert Lytell will again be seen in the role which won for him so high a place in the estimation of those versed in film lore.

Announcement is not as yet made of the remainder of the cast, though it is more than probable that many of those who took part in the former production will be seen again in their old roles.

"THE SONG OF SONGS" (Artcraft).

The appearance of Elsie Ferguson in "The Song of Songs," her latest picture for Artcraft, which has just been completed, demonstrates that the star does not intend to rest upon the laurels she has won upon the stage. In this photoplay she interprets a tremendously emotional part as Lily Kardos, whose tempestuous career leads to highly dramatic situations.

Miss Ferguson's greatest success on the speaking stage was in "The Outcast," where she had a role similar to the one in "The Song of Songs," which is a sociological drama based on the play by Edward Sheldon. The production has been staged in the usual sumptuous manner by Artcraft, and presents a notable cast.

Lack of Coal May Close New England Shows

Famine Has Already Caused Curtailments—Lynn May Have to Eliminate Sunday Picture Shows, Though Relief Is Said to Be in Sight.

By Richard Davis Howe, 80 Summer St., Boston, Mass.

BOSTON, MASS.—Moving picture theaters in Boston and other sections of New England are commencing to feel the sting of the extreme coal famine which has struck the New England states. Unless relief comes soon from the fuel administration many motion picture houses will face the grave probability of shutting down their houses until the coal shortage is relieved to a considerable extent.

Several theaters in various sections of New England have already curtailed their performances because of inability to heat their buildings. The recent announcement that Governor Samuel W. McCall and James J. Storrow, New England Fuel Administrator, that relief was in sight for New England, was received enthusiastically by theater managers.

There is a grave possibility of the closing of moving picture houses and churches in Lynn as the result of the coal famine. Ministers of the city have pleaded with the Lynn committee, of which C. Fred Smith is chairman, to aid them in getting coal so that they may continue to hold Sunday services in their churches, and suggest as a slight relief that motion picture theaters of the city eliminate Sunday shows.

Lynn, with its 100,000 residents, has 2,000 tons of coal for domestic purposes, and but little hope of receiving an additional supply from the dealers.

Manager Carpenter of the Town Hall in Richford, Vt., a moving picture theater with a seating capacity of about 500, has curtailed his shows from six a week to one a week. At the beginning of the shortage he closed his house once a week, and when the shortage became acute he curtailed his performances to twice a week and now is showing but once a week. He believes it may become necessary to close altogether unless he is able to secure some fuel. Many other theaters in Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont report the same trouble.

services be held by the churches, in the cause of coal conservation, has been made to State Fuel Administrator James C. Hamlen, by Walter B. Moore, secretary, and George Feeney, transportation manager of the Chamber of Commerce. Mr. Hamlen at once wired National Fuel Administrator Garfield for authority to take such action if it becomes necessary.

The request of the Chamber of Commerce was due primarily to the failure of hundreds of householders to obtain fuel and the fact that the trans-Atlantic steamships are finding it difficult to procure sufficient bunker coal. A survey of the situation will be made at once by a special investigator of the national fuel administration.

Caruso Building a Theater in Waterbury

Famous Tenor Is to Build One of the Finest Theaters Money Can Make—Will Seat 4,000—City of Watches Is Lucky Town.

WATERBURY, CONN.—Waterbury soon is to have one of the most magnificent moving picture theaters in the United States with the enormous seating capacity of four thousand. The new structure, which when completed will form one of the beauty spots of this city, is being built for Enrico Caruso, the world famous tenor, and will bear the Italian singer's name. Caruso intends to spend his money lavishly in order to present Waterbury with one of the finest houses that money can build.

A local theater manager who will take charge of the new theater when it is finished has drawn up the plans for the Caruso theater and has submitted them to the tenor, who placed his stamp of approval on them. Work on the structure will commence immediately and it is expected that it will be ready for occupancy early next summer or late in the spring.

It is stated that Caruso, who is more than anxious to give to Waterbury a motion picture theater which will be a credit to the city, is laying out a considerable sum of money on the proposition. The probable cost of the house will be in the neighborhood of $500,000, the land on which the building will be constructed having cost over $95,000.

The theater is designed beautifully both inside and outside, and will be furnished luxuriously when opened. The house will have an extraordinarily large lobby, which will be original in plan. The lobby is to be built in the center of the theater, with a gentlemen's smoking room and ladies' resting room on either side. These resting rooms will be turned over to the public for use as waiting rooms and meeting places. The motto of the Caruso will be "Meet Me at the Caruso." This will undoubtedly prove a unique advertising scheme.

A striking feature of the lobby decoration will be a large running fountain, brilliantly illuminated with blending colors at night time and several smaller fountains built along either side of the lobby.

Theater Company's Xmas Charities.

LEWISTON, ME.—The Union Theater Co. of Lewiston, W. P. Gray, general manager, and W. F. Carrigan, treasurer, is appreciating the true Christmas spirit by sending to various philanthropies in Lewiston and Auburn checks for sums of money which indicate their interest in the welfare of these institutions.

The following are the different institutions and the amounts:

Healy Asylum, $75; Children of Ste. Marie Hospital, $50; St. Vincent de Paul, $50; Opportunity Farm, $25; Y. W. C. A., $25; Auburn Home for Aged Women, $25; Lewiston Home for Aged Women, $25; Salvation Army, $25; Children's Home, Lewiston, $25.

Metro Players in the Back Woods.

Augusta, Me.—Odell Bubar has left town for the Dead River region, where he will be employed for about a month in driving a team for the Metro Film Co., which is getting material for a photoplay. The company, which will have its headquarters at the Ledge House, is said to be the same that was engaged in a similar project at Dead River two years ago, when "The Man Who Came Back" was produced.

A. A. Allen Gets Halifax Films.

Bangor, Me.—The Dirigo Moving Picture Co. of Bangor, Arthur A. Allen, manager, secured some of the first moving pictures taken of the Halifax disaster. Mr. Allen made a trip to the stricken city directly after the catastrophe and arranged with a Canadian moving picture agency to distribute in Maine and other New England states the films of the explosion.

Gets Twilight Sleep Films.

WILMINGTON, N. C.—The Wilmington Film and Supply Company, a new organization with head office in Wilmington, has obtained the rights on the "Twilight Sleep" films produced by the Modern Motherhood League, for the states of North and South Carolina, Georgia and Alabama, and will play the picture on percentage basis throughout that territory, beginning January 1. It has already been presented at the Grand theater here, some two or three weeks ago, and broke all attendance and receipts records at that theater, with the accompanying lecture on the new science.

Visitors in Wilmington, N. C.

Wilmington, N. C.—E. W. Balderston, representing the Sidney Lust interests, was a caller here last week. "Jimmie" Kelly, of the Atlanta office of United States Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, visited this city during the week.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compete with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

Moore Absorbs Disaffected Crandall Men

T. K. Sands, F. S. Swindell and A. Muehleisen Leave Crandall and Add to Strengh of Moore Interests—New Crandall Theater in March.

By Clarence L. Linz, 622 Riggs Building, Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—A split among the officers of one large company, the lining up of the receding stockholders with a rival organization and the announcement of the completion of booking arrangements by the latter involving houses in all parts of the city, with an additional statement from the former concerning the status of one of its theaters, represents the principal news of this week on Ninth street.

The moving picture trade of the Capital City was startled a few days ago when it heard of the withdrawal from the Crandall interests of Tucker K. Sands, Fred S. Swindell and A. Muehleisen, and a consolidation of their interests with those of Tom Moore, proprietor of the Garden, Strand and Plaza theaters. The first-named three had been associated with Harry M. Crandall and Barry Bulkley in the operation of the recently-opened Knickerbocker theater, and in the erection of the new Metropolitan theater now under construction on F street. This latter proposition was carried on under the name of the Metropolitan Theater Company, a $1,000,000 corporation organized under the laws of Delaware.

The announcement has it that this corporation has been absorbed by the Moore's Theaters Corporation, a $2,000,000 corporation, of which Tom Moore, with the ownership of $1,200,000 worth of its stock, becomes president and general director. The press announcement was somewhat misleading, giving one the impression that this company carried with it the Knickerbocker and Metropolitan theaters, it being stated "This consolidation of interests assures the Moore's Theaters Corporation five first-run houses of the first class in the downtown section of the city, and an aggregate seating capacity far in excess of anything heretofore known in Washington, which takes on immediate importance from the standpoint of the public, because it makes possible operation on a purely wholesale basis, a consequent curtailment of operating expense, improvement in quality of film product, and, more important, no increase in costs to patrons, but, if anything, a reduction."

In a statement to the World correspondent, Mr. Crandall announces that the Metropolitan theater will, in all probability, be ready for opening some time in March. It was originally intended to open on New Year's Day, but the congestion on the railroads, shortage of labor, and similar unfavorable conditions have advanced the date of completion. There followed also the early arrival of cold weather which caused additional delay. All of the steel construction work has been completed; radiators and similar equipment, machines, etc., are in the building; the balcony is in place and the structure has been roofed. The arrival of the chairs is now daily expected—despite statements that the Metropolitan would not be opened soon, everything is in readiness

Moore Circuit of Theaters.

The next surprise was the announcement by Mr. Moore of the organization of the Moore Circuit of theaters, with Mr. Moore as director-general, comprising a chain of theaters with locations in all parts of this city. The organization of this circuit with the Strand, Garden and Plaza is in furtherance of the policy of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., in which he holds the 25-year franchise for Maryland, Delaware and the District of Columbia, which contemplates the establishment of a circuit unit in each territory.

The booking of the films to be run in the houses controlled by the members of this circuit is to be done exclusively through Mr. Moore. He says that while sixteen houses are already members of the circuit, there will be twenty or more in the Capital, and it is planned to extend the circuit into Maryland and Delaware. Additional to the three Moore houses already named, the theaters involved in this arrangement include the Penn Gardens, Lyric, Florida, Liberty, Empire, Home, Navy, Plaza, Regent, Dumbarton, Staunton and Elite.

Carl F. Senning Attacked by Burglar.

Washington, D. C.—Carl F. Senning, manager of the Washington office of the Fox Film, can readily qualify as a wrestler and fighter, according to the records

On Sunday evening, December 16, Mr. Senning had occasion to visit the office. It was about six o'clock and quite dark when he went to the floor above, occupied by the poster department. He turned on the electric switch and, as he did so, a young negro jumped on him and a battle royal was soon in progress. A blow from the blackjack knocked Mr. Senning "cold," and it was only his derby that saved him from a fractured skull.

G. F. Lenehan Heads Goldwyn Exchange.

Washington, D. C.—An interesting change in the local field is the resigning of George F. Lenehan as manager of the Greater Vitagraph office to assume a similar position in the local Goldwyn office. He came to this city on November 7, 1916, having been with the Vitagraph Company but five weeks, covering the Brooklyn section from the New York office. During his stay here he has made a lot of friends throughout the territory.

His first connection in the motion picture business was with the William L. Sherry Feature Company, of New York City, handling Paramount productions. He started with this company as assistant manager and later became publicity manager. After a service of one year he joined the sales force of Pathe, in New York, and later he was sent to the Cincinnati office, from which he covered Kentucky.

It was from this office that he returned to New York to join the Greater Vitagraph, from whose employ he is now leaving. He expects to assume charge of the Goldwyn exchange the latter part of the year. At the time of this writing his successor in the Vitagraph office had not been made known.

New Film Building Ready This Spring

Mather Building Will Not Be Taken by Government—Fire Marshal Will Suspend New Code Until New Exchange Center Is Ready.

Washington, D. C.—There have been many misstatements regarding the conditions in connection with the new film exchange building in Washington, D. C., according to A. H. Sawyer, of New York, that he has prepared for publication an official statement regarding the new Mather building. This follows the printing in the Washington column of the Moving Picture World of a story based on the difficulties experienced by local exchange managers in finding suitable quarters to which to remove their exchanges in face of the proposed new fire regulations.

"Mr. Mather," declares Mr. Sawyer, "has never had any other idea regarding his building than to build it for the film exchanges. He was held up some in getting same started, owing to delay in the removal of two of his tenants. The old building has been torn down, and another two weeks will see the cement structure well under way."

A striking paragraph of this letter contains the information that "Mr. Nicholson, the fire marshal, assured me that any film exchange managers who showed a disposition to protect themselves either by moving into fireproof quarters that complied with the new regulations or by signing a lease for space in the new Mather building would not be molested by his department."

The statement made to the World correspondent in Washington by Mr. Sawyer is as follows:

Statement of A. H. Sawyer.

The uncertainties regarding the housing of the film exchanges in Washington were removed this week, and the Washington exchanges are now assured of an up-to-date film exchange building.

There have been numerous rumors and newspaper articles stating that the Government intended taking over the new Mather building on G street, near 9th, Washington, D. C., for war offices. This rumor was definitely settled this week at a meeting between some of the prominent exchange managers and A. C. Mather, of Chicago, Ill., builder of the new exchange building, and A. H. Sawyer, representing General Enterprises, Inc., New York, who promoted the building for the exchanges.

The terms of the new building regulations in Washington state that practically every film exchange in the city will have to move out of its present quarters on or before January 1, 1918,—although this order was informally suspended two weeks ago to read "April 1, 1918."

At a conference between the city authorities and Messrs. Mather and Sawyer, arrangements were made whereby the exchanges could remain in their present quarters until the new Mather building was completed, it being proven conclusively to the Fire Marshal that the Mather building would be a model of safety and convenience for the exchanges.

The new Mather building is being built on the site of the old Washington Rifles at 916-918 G street, N. W. The building will be 10 stories high with a terra cotta and tile front and will be a handsome addition to Washington's already large list of beautiful buildings.

There are two separate entrances on G street—one can be used exclusively for the film exchange with elevator service, telegraph offices in the lobby and other conveniences. The other entrance on the west side of the building will be used exclusively for the first two floors, which will be utilized as bowling alleys and billiard rooms. There is a 12-foot passageway on the east side of the building; a 30-foot areaway in the back, and on the west side the church buildings are only 3 stories high, leaving the upper 7 stories of the Mather building with all outside rooms.

The vaults will be placed against the outside walls of the building, in series, each vault holding about 500 reels. Direct outside ventilation will be installed, having an inlet of outside air at the lower part of the vault and large screened openings at the top to allow the egress of air. A large flue is being installed, running from the basement to the roof, which will be used for the moving picture booths for separate projection rooms.

In the basement a large projection theater, capable of seating 300 people, will be installed at one end. At the back of the basement communicating with the freight elevators will be quarters for the express companies.

Additional film vaults will also be provided in the basement, which will be rented to the exchanges at a nominal rental per month. These vaults can be used for storage of films that are but seldom used.

The Mather building is near a traffic and junction point, and is in the very center of the moving picture district. It will cost upwards of $400,000. Several of the exchanges have already signed leases and it is expected that nearly every exchange in the city will take space.

Stanley Employees' Christmas.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.—The employes of the Stanley theater, who have been in the service of the Stanley Company a year or more, were given a Merry Christmas surprise by Stanley V. Mastbaum, managing director of the company, who presented them each with substantial sums of money in appreciation of their services during the past twelve months. Mr. Mastbaum, feeling that the success attained by the Stanley theater among lovers of photoplay art in this city, has been due to the energy of faithful employes, inaugurated a bonus system of gifts in 1916, whereby some of the attaches received ten per cent. additional salary, some five per cent., in accordance with the business done at the theater and the merit of the work accomplished by each.

Mr. Mastbaum has gone still further in generosity and established a sinking fund whereby all employes are paid full salary during a term of illness and still another fund whereby payment is provided for all medicines, doctors' fees and all incidentals connected with illness and still a third fund to give the employe a vacation necessary for recuperation after an illness.

The distribution of the bonus to the employes was made Saturday, Dec. 22nd, in order that the recipients might have a chance to do some belated Christmas shopping.

S. E. Bleyer Reports Success at Palace Theater.

Ardmore, Pa.—Samuel E. Bleyer, of the Palace theater, visited Philadelphia last week and booked up many shows for his handsome theater.

Mr. Bleyer is operating his house with a considerable degree of success. Only big productions from the Goldwyn, World, Select and other exchanges are presented. The admission charge is 15 cents, which applies to children also. Located on the main line of the suburban towns, he naturally possesses a large clientele of the well-to-do who visit his place in automobiles.

Mr. Bleyer was formerly representative for the Metro, general manager of the Anderson Zeigler Circuit, N. Y., and treasurer for the Shubert Anderson Hippodrome in New York. Mr. Bleyer's ambition leans toward the motion picture amusement field where his future plans will be expected to mature. The Moving Picture World has been his constant companion, and his check for the New Year's subscription has already been forwarded.

O. A. Morgan An Able Executive.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Nothing succeeds like success is the slogan of the one who has earned for himself a position of distinction.

Among those who have had the rare judgment to take advantage of opportunity is no less a personage than our own Oscar A. Morgan. Starting out early in life, Mr. Morgan gained a knowledge of amusements in associating with his father at the Ocean Grove Auditorium, Ocean Grove, N. J. It was here Mr. Morgan acted as advertising and publicity manager. His father went to Newark, N. J., where he took over the management of the Paramount theater, with Oscar A. Morgan acting in the same capacity as previously. Here young Mr. Morgan had an opportunity to display his ability and he took immediate advantage of the same.

Little by little young Mr. Morgan brought about changes, including an increase in admission prices to 15, 25 and 50 cents, using pictures a full week, and many other innovations in conjunction with running Paramount pictures. Young Mr. Morgan by reason of his originality and close application to his duties was soon promoted to the office of manager, succeeding his father, who was placed in charge of the Broadway theater, in New York City. Mr. Morgan worked steadfastly and zealously, taxing his natural resources to the limit.

W. E. Smith, known among film men as the shrewdest and brainiest man in the exhibition of pictures, was highly impressed with Mr. Morgan's ability. After a year at the Paramount theater Mr. Morgan was induced to accept a position as publicity director of the Famous Players exchange, in Philadelphia, of which Mr. Smith was president. In that capacity Mr. Morgan served Paramount creditably, and when Paramount and Artcraft amalgamated in April Mr. Morgan was rewarded by being made sales manager, a position he is fulfilling with the same intelligence.

Buffalo Film Men Expect Better Times

Business Has Been Discouraging During the Holidays, but Grows Better—Rumor Sees a New Picture and Vaudeville House—Local Notes.

By Joseph McGuire, 157 N. Elmwood St., Buffalo, N. Y.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—Gift-buying received the attention of those who throughout the year find enjoyment at the moving picture theaters and considerably reduced box office receipts here up to a few days ago. Much of the people's show money was spent lately for "smokes for soldiers" and many other presents for the boys in the service, as well as for remembrances for those at home.

Despite the slump at the theaters the exhibitors and exchange men are not sliding into the "crepe-hanging class." They know the craving for good pictures exists as strong as ever. Handicaps there are, but these must be overcome, say the film men. That they are resourceful when success must be attained has often been proven in these critical times. Screen devotees of this city have never complained of not having received full value for their money. However, if even better shows and improved service are needed to help conditions, patrons can depend upon it that these changes will be made.

E. J. Mace Appointed Shipper at General Film.

Buffalo, N. Y.—"We have secured several important prospects on the Paralta releases," said E. J. Hayes, manager of the Buffalo branch of the General Film.

"There is a big demand for the new serial, 'A Daughter of Uncle Sam.' Our regular service is more than holding its own."

E. J. Mace has been appointed head of the General's shiping department in this city. He was formerly with the company for five years.

Clergymen Argue Against a Church's Sunday Shows.

Salamanca, N. Y.—In the Strand theater, Salamanca, N. Y., a minister (Episcopal) conducts a moving picture show with uplifting talks and music every Sunday evening. Clergymen of some of the other churches of the town do not approve of these Sunday exhibitions. They say that the evening services in their churches are largely for young people and that with the counter attraction of the Sunday picture shows their ends are being defeated. The opponents have laid this matter before the Common Council of the town, and with their own protests go a petition signed by 270 of the members of their congregations. The present Council has not acted in the case and will probaby pass the buck to the new council of 1918.

Harry Rose Gets Xmas Present.

Tonawanda, N. Y.—Harry Rose, maanger of the Flash theater, Tonawanda, is passthe cigars. Christmas is one reason. The birth of a bright baby boy at the Rose home is another.

J. F. Strasser Talks of Business.

Buffalo, N. Y.—"The war tax has hurt our business," said J. F. Strasser, who with his father, G. Strasser, and brother, Henry Strasser, conduct the Emblem moving picture theater at Jefferson and Ferry streets. "How long this condition will continue remains to be seen. We have, for instance, one woman patron who before the tax went into effect used to come with her mother and children to the Emblem five to seven times a week. She was good for sixty cents every time she visited the box office. Now that the war tax has been added she has to pay a total of sixty-eight cents. On account of this additional expense she and her party come only on Sunday and once or twice during the week. Our war tax in November amounted to $182.89. We have a neighborhood house and hold about the same patronage throughout the year. During the first week of the war tax our business held up, but during the next week it fell down and, of course, took a further slump during Christmas time. Our fall business was great."

"We have done our bit in conserving coal," continued Mr. Strasser. "From last spring up to Dec. 1 we burned wood in the furnace of our theater. We received a great quantity of cratings from a furniture store next door and this wood, when handled properly in the furnace, made a satisfactory heat. We are burning coal now and have enough to last until Feb. 15."

Buffalo World Film Notes.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Interest in the World Film's contest for operators who return the company's films in the best condition is increasing steadily. The last prize-winner in the contest in this territory was L. Pierce, of the Star theater, Rome, N. Y.

John Childs and G. T. Landis, World salesmen in Buffalo, have joined the colors.

W. W. Swigert, assistant auditor of the company, has installed a new bookkeeping system in the Buffalo office.

J. E. Kimberley, manager, is visiting the exhibitors along the main line of the New York Central.

Meeting Exhibitors with Accurate Datings

Dayton Exhibitors Say That Late Arrival of Shows from Cincinnati Exchanges Is Cause of Their Worrying—Think Improvement Possible.

By P. J. G., Dayton Correspondent of Moving Picture World.

DAYTON, O.—Many Dayton managers complain that booking clerks in some of the exchanges at Cincinnati do not watch the dates as close as they should, and in this way do not get shipments here in time. This may seem to be a small item, but it is just the reverse, for the writer has seen a picture advertised for a week and when the film did not arrive there was quite a disappointment.

One Dayton manager stated that if more attention was paid in the exchanges to dates for bookings of film quite a burden would be lifted from his shoulders. We will say for example a film is rented in a small town in Kentucky for one day and the next day it is booked for Dayton. Nine times out of ten the dates are too close and the clerks who handle this take a chance on whether or not the picture will leave Kentucky in time for exhibition at Dayton. The film must return to Cincinnati for inspection and so many shows arrive late. One of the Dayton managers remarked that if in place of advertising SERVICE the various film companies would spend this money on their exchanges to IMPROVE service the money would be better spent. Of this fault not all of the exchanges are guilty, and for this reason we will not condemn the entire trade, but the writer thinks that service could be improved in quite a few of the Cincinnati exchanges.

Films Are Better Than Most Plays.

Dayton, O.—Dayton witnessed two legitimate productions last week which the writer knows would be or have been appreciated more in pictures. The first reason was the two dollar scale and the other that the legitimate stage, no matter what is spent, can not equal the movies for scenic effects. The first production heralded far and wide was "The Garden of Allah." The play pleased, but the film by the same name made more of an impression. In the picture there was more chance for scenic effect, and the sandstorm as carried out in the film was more effective by far. "The Garden of Allah" here in pictures played to more people than did the legitimate production, and was appreciated more by the public.

For the second and grander legitimate production was General Wallace's great play "Ben Hur," which after a revival last season is on the road, and which Dayton was privileged to see for three days last week. The chariot race was done up with two horses, the announcement being made that the stage would hold no more. Daytonians expected to see a real race and did not become enthused over this feature. In short, although a thousand instances might be mentioned, we will say that pictures will always lead the legitimate melodrama production.

Harry Shaw Still with Mutual.

Dayton, O.—A mistake was printed in several of the trade papers last week in the form of an announcement that Harry Shaw, who has been with Mutual working from Cincinnati, was to leave that company and go with the Standard Film Company. One of the Ohio trade journals carried a long article with this information. The writer received a wire to the same effect, but ten minutes later met Harry Shaw at the Orpheum, in Dayton, where he denied the fact that he was to leave the Mutual. In discussing the subject Mr. Shaw said: "Yes, I read the news in almost all of the papers that I was to leave the Mutual, but it is not true. I have been with the Mutual longer than any other film salesman that I know of has stayed with any one concern, and I do not believe in changing. If an exhibitor sees that you are reliable and mean business he will stick with you through thick and thin." These few remarks were straight to the point, and if all salesmen were of this caliber the writer would not hear so many ill words for the different film exchanges.

One Dayton House Stays Closed.

Dayton, O.—Although the coal situation is not any better, Dayton is through the worst of the cold spell, as was in evidence for the last two weeks, and local managers are glad of the fact. Many of the houses were very cold in the worst of the weather, which hurt business. Theaters are having a hard time to get coal, as the shortage is still in effect, but with warmer weather things are again taking on a normal appearance. One of the neighborhood houses is closed and it looks as though a few more are doomed. The closing on Monday night as suggested by several of the suburban managers has not taken effect, with everyone having a slim Monday.

Gossipy Bits from Dayton.

All outside lights are turned off in Dayton two days of the week in line with the suggestion of the Government to save fuel. This action does not work a hardship on any of the houses and they are glad to help in any way possible.

Harry Burrowes presided a few days last week at the Ideal, in Dayton, in place of John Seifert, who was called away by the death of relatives.

Word reaches the writer's ears that our old friend George Wilson has been appointed manager of the Standard Film exchange at Cincinnati. We hope the new position will not keep George from visiting Dayton in the near future, for he is a jolly good fellow and very popular here.

The decorations at the Dayton Strand for the holidays were correct in every detail, and all the work of Clay Brehm, assisted by Jack Campbell. Jack is an old hand at the game and the writer knows him to be perfect in his line. He is now electrician at the Strand.

"Jack and the Beanstalk" proved a good holiday attraction at the Apollo, in Dayton, and good business was in evidence. The special Fox productions are making quite a hit with Daytonians and T. Chifos is doing well to bank on them.

The Strand had for the Christmas week Douglas Fairbanks in "Reaching for the Moon." Business was not as good the first part of the week as the week before, for everyone was too busy getting ready for Christmas. Business was fine the last part of the week.

Jack Needham informs me that Pathe is doing a good business in Dayton at the present. Glad to hear it Jack, for when one company does good generally all the others do. Jack was seen at the Orpheum telling about a time he was announced as Essanay's crack camera man on a visit to Chillicothe, O., the scene of a large Government cantonment camp.

Will Aid with Thrift Stamps.

Dayton, O.—According to advices received this week Dayton theater managers will respond to the call of the Government in the sale of Thrift Stamps. When consulted on the subject A. L. Kinsler stated no definite action had been taken on the matter, but he hoped to settle it within the next few days. Clay Brehm, at the Strand, stated that he would help in every way possible, as did Theodore Chifos, at the Apollo.

George Wilson Gets Merited Promotion.

Dayton, O.—George Wilson, spoken of before in these columns as assistant manager of the Standard, has been made manager of this exchange at Cincinnati. We are surely glad to hear it and if the writer remembers, the last all-night session held with George Wilson was also attended by Harry Shaw of the Mutual. On that evening Bert Fiala, John Lyons, the writer, as well as these two salesmen made up the party.

At this time George was boosting for the Standard exchange and nothing too good could be said about it. On the other hand Harry Shaw was explaining the advantages of the Mutual program to us. Every time Shaw would tell of a new contract George Wilson would have two new ones and the competition was exciting. Now we are informed that Harry Shaw has quit Mutual and is with the Standard exchange under Wilson. I think this combination should literally clean up this territory.

Will Start Film Association.

ST. JOHN, N. B.—A meeting of the exchange managers was held during Christmas week with a view to forming an association among the local film men to better service. Another meeting will be held this week, at which further plans will be made. Nearly all these exchanges in St. John were represented at the first gathering.

Halifax Relief from Imperial Is $1,700.

St. John, N. B.—The result of the most generous gift of A. Paul Keith and E. F. Albee, there was received at the Imperial theater in St. John the sum of $2,272.47. The expenses were slightly in excess of the receipts. It was hoped that the attendance would be larger, but the drastic weather conditions, three days of zero with a blizzard and a rainstorm, as well as the pre-holiday sewing and work for the Halifax sufferers interfered.

The Famous Players, Greater Vitagraph and Regal Film companies donated the pictures used and most of the newspapers gave the advertising for that week, so the Imperial's contribution came to nearly $1,700. This splendid sum may be sent direct to Halifax or may be added to the St. John contribution.

New House in Bridgewater Ready.

Bridgewater, N. S.—One of the finest theaters in Nova Scotia, and certainly the best and most modern on the South Shore is the new Empire being built by Messrs. Cragg & Fraser. It is large, airy, handsomely decorated and its lighting and heating apparatus is about perfect. Care has been taken to get ample ventilation and every comfort for patrons. The theater is equipped with a fireproof projecting booth with automatic sprinkler It also has an ample stage for dramatic performances, together with dressing rooms and scenery and will be able to take care of any road show. The seating arrangement is perfect and the chairs models of comfort and ease. The heating is by a Hecla furnace, and the atmosphere will be disturbed in summer by six electric fans. The theater was to be opened about the middle of December, and Bridgewater, N. S., will enjoy a modern playhouse, and the proprietors, Gregg & Fraser, will receive due credit for it.

H. A. Reddy Heads Independent Exchange.

St. John, N. B.—S. Starfield, of the Independent Theatre and Film Supply Co., Ltd., left this week for the Winnipeg office of that company, having been appointed manager in that city. Winnipeg is Mr. Starfield's home, so he is naturally pleased at the move while sorry to leave St. John, where he has made many friends. He will spend a few days in Montreal before proceeding West. At the local exchange H. A. Reddy has been appointed sales manager with Miss Selig as office manager.

Gossipy Jottings in St. John.

St. John, N. B.—Ihe Imperial theater last week entertained as guests a party of Newfoundland soldiers who were in the city. Manager Golding addressed them from the stage and asked the Mayor of the city who was present to welcome them. After the Mayor had spoken, the officer in command thanked the management of the theater and the citizens present for their kindly reception. Patriotic airs by the Imperial orchestra added to the occasion.

This week an extra fine program was given at the Imperial. The bill included the first showing of the Pathe pictures of the Halifax disaster, which were taken under military escort. Madam Petrova in "Exile," a Drew comedy and a Pathe weekly, with two musical acts for vaudeville—a singer and a violin and piano act.

The Lyric theater is continuing its special productions for this week.

Amherst, N. S.—Though the people of Amherst on Dec. 17 took the greatest possible interest in the Dominion election, yet the production of "Redemption" at the Empress theater on that day drew capacity houses. G. F. Spencer has booked it for his entire circuit.

Glace Bay, C. B.—John Connors, of the Casino theater, Glace Bay, was the first exhibitor in this territory to book the Paralta plays from J. Kauffman of the Globe Film.

Mrs. I. Sourkes and little son are in St. John spending the holiday season with I. Sourkes of the Regal Film Company.

M. R. Lubin, of the Toronto head office of the Globe Films, has been sent here to the St. John exchange for some months.

"God's Man" was the attraction with "Beware of Strangers" for the last three days.

Passing the Unique theater I saw a large crowd waiting outside, and by the billboards realized that the Chaplin picture, "The Pest," was the cause.

MID-CANADIAN NOTES.

Canadian Theater Notes and Changes.

Ottawa, Ont.—Announcement has been made here that the Family theater, Ottawa, has changed hands and will shortly become part of a chain of moving picture theaters of importance extending from Toronto to Montreal. It is understood that these theaters include the Regent of Toronto and the St. Denis of Montreal.

Montreal, Que.—George Duclos has been appointed liquidator of the Holman theater, limited, which recently passed into the hands of receivers. The Holman theater, Montreal, has been continued in operation with a policy of first-run pictures only at 10c and 15c prices and changes in program on Sundays and Wednesdays.

Montreal, Que.—The Liberty theater, 1240 Ontario Street East, Montreal, has been re-opened as the Allies theater under the management of Mr. Bastine.

Montreal, Que.—The Globe theater, Montreal, has been registered under the Provincial laws of Quebec.

Toronto, Ont.—Follow this closely: The various leading attractions in Toronto for Christmas week included "Oh Boy!", "Joan the Woman," "Nearly Married," "Twin Beds" and "The Birth of a Nation."

Toronto, Ont.—For the first run of the first episode of "Vengeance and the Woman," at the Globe theater, Toronto, on December 20 to 22, Manager Harry Pomeroy issued advertising cards of post card size which were good for five cents when presented at the box office of the theater for any matinee during the three days.

Homage Paid to Montreal's New Princess

Theater with Seats for 2,500 Opens on December 22—Will Feature Pictures and Vaudeville—Eugene La Pierre Is Manager—Decorations.

By W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard St., East, Toronto, Can.

MONTREAL, QUE.—Several Toronto officers of the Canadian United Theaters, Limited, came down to Montreal on Saturday, December 22, for the opening of the new Princess theater there on that date. This is another fine, big theater for Montreal. It has a seating capacity for 2,500 and embodies many new ideas in construction. One of the outstanding features of the equipment is an escalator which carries patrons from the main entrance to the upper balcony. There are also two sets of box office windows in the outer lobby, one intended for the sale of admission tickets and the second for the sale of war tax tickets.

The theater also has a public telephone exchange with branch lines to practically all parts of the house. The policy of the Princess is to present vaudeville and pictures at prices ranging up to $1 for evening performances and 25c top price for matinees.

The Princess is a new theater from the stage to the front entrance, the auditorium being constructed of concrete and other fire-proof materials. The greater portion of the interior decorations is in panel effect in subdued tones of brown and bronze with brown carpets. Above the proscenium arch is a fine art panel by Mr. Challener.

The Toronto directors of the company are A. E. Dyment and John Pringle. The Montreal director is D. W. Ogilvie, while the general manager of the company, which controls four theaters in Montreal including the Princess, Orpheum, Francais and Gayety, is Clark Brown.

The manager of the new theater is Eugene La Pierre, formerly associated with the Orpheum, and the treasurer is "Bud" Brady, formerly with the Francais. Albert Bray has been appointed director of the orchestra which consists of fifteen musicians. Many distinguished persons were present with parties at the opening performance while the special performance on Sunday, December 23, was held under the direct patronage of Their Royal Highnesses, the Duke and Duchess of Devonshire, Vice-Regents of Canada.

The feature at the special Sunday performance was an eight-reel photoplay, "For Liberty," which had been taken in England under the direction of the British Government. It is called a "dramatic romance of our own times." This was its first presentation in the Dominion.

Roy O'Connor Joins Specialty Sales Staff.

Toronto, Ont.—Roy O'Connor, formerly manager of the Iola theater, Toronto, has become a member of the sales staff of the Toronto office of the Specialty Film Import, Limited, Pathe distributors.

Amusement Tax in Ontario $600,000 Last Year.

Toronto, Ont.—Hon. T. W. McGarry, provincial treasurer for Ontario, has announced that the revenue derived by the Province from the Amusement Tax during the twelve months of 1917 has amounted to $600,000, or an average of $50,000 per month. Approximately one half of the revenue from the Amusement Tax is derived from Toronto theater patrons who support some seventy-five different theaters. In only three of the local houses are pictures not shown regularly, but in one of these three special features are presented as road shows at frequent intervals.

It has been intimated that several important changes will be made in the Amusement Tax Act when the Provincial Legislature gets down to its 1918 session next February. It has been mentioned that the Government may abolish the use of war tax tickets as this method has proved rather costly and cumbersome. Millions of these tickets have to be printed and, in addition, it has been found inconvenient by the exhibitors to keep themselves supplied with the rolls of Government coupons. It is considered unlikely, however, that the Government will change the schedule of tolls which now stands as follows: One cent tax for 10c or 15c admission tickets; two cents tax for 25c to 50c admission tickets; three cents tax for 75c seats and five cents for dollar seats.

Manager Wootton Finds Demand for Specialty.

Toronto, Ont.—A. W. Wootton, a widely known Canadian theatrical man who was appointed special representative of the Vitagraph for the Canadian Middle West a short time ago, has written to the Toronto correspondent of Moving Picture World to tell of conditions in that territory. Mr. Wootton had just completed his third lengthy trip out of the Winnipeg office of the company and the business which he secured surprised even himself. One feature of the situation is the demand from exhibitors of the territory for all the big specials that they can secure and for which they are willing to pay good money. Wootton wonders whether this fact is not more or less unhealthy for the business in general. The West, as far as the Rocky Mountains, is in prosperous shape. Farmers were able to do a great deal of fall ploughing on account of a late winter and this is taken to mean that crops will probably be large again next year. Come again, Wootton.

Orpheum Shows Feature Film.

Montreal, Que.—"20,000 Leagues Under the Sea," controlled in Canada by Superfeatures, Limited, Toronto, opened in Canada at the Orpheum theater, Montreal, on Saturday, December 22nd, for a run of eight days. Previous to this date the Orpheum had been conducted solely as a vaudeville theater. Superfeatures will present this feature in Massey Hall for its first run in Toronto during the week of January 26.

Frederick Thompson Visits Native City.

Montreal, Que.—The Christmas holidays brought back a native son to Montreal in the person of Frederick Thompson, who has been a director in the moving picture producing field for a number of years. Mr. Thompson is now associated with Pathe in directing productions in which Bessie Love is being starred. He has also "handled" a number of other distinguished film stars.

Talbotoscope Theater Opens in Hull.

Hull, Quebec, has now a theater—"The Talbotoscope," formerly Odeon. For the last ten years this house was not popular. Today Geo. C. Talbot is winning out with high class entertainments. His theater is one of the finest in the city, all modern improvements, fire proof and the largest seating capacity. Famous, Paramount, Artcraft, and Metro programs are run.

Mr. Talbot tells us that he is running these pictures the same week as Ottawa and that he is getting the people of Hull out of the habit of crossing to Ottawa.

Two New Producing Companies.

Toronto, Ont.—Commercial Films, Limited, has been organized in Toronto, with headquarters at 702 King Street West, for the purpose of producing scenic, educational and local moving pictures. The company has also been dealing with news subjects for weeklies and is making novelty advertising trailers to order.

In Montreal, Quebec, the "B. and S. Studio" has been organized and registered according to the laws of the Province for the purpose of producing moving picture cartoon releases.

Nashville Theaters Run Sunday Shows

Four Leading Motion Picture Houses Open in Spite of Protests of Church People and Collect Over $420 for Empty Stocking Fund.

By J. L. Ray, Nashville Banner, Nashville, Tenn.

NASHVILLE, TENN.—Moving picture shows ran in Nashville on the Sunday preceding Christmas for the first time in many months. Four of the leading uptown houses, the Fifth Avenue, Knickerbocker, Strand and Crystal theaters, opened their doors at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, and gave two performances between that hour and the time for church services. The performances were given for the benefit of the empty stocking fund in Nashville, and all the proceeds were donated for that purpose. No tickets were sold, all money being collected as a result of voluntary donation.

In spite of the expected and customary howl from the professional agitators and ultra-conservatists, the theaters ran to overflowing houses. Their pleas for closing the houses fell upon deaf ears, in the face of the splendid spirit which prompted the movement. A total of $420.91 was realized from the voluntary contributions: an even $200 from the Fifth Avenue, $104.81 from the Strand and $116.10 from the Knickerbocker and Crystal combined. Not a cent was deducted by the theater men, all lights, film rental and other expenses being donated by the management. All employees of the various houses gave their services free.

Notwithstanding the fact that it was strictly a charitable procedure, the agitators and alarmists came out in full force, and appealed to the chief of police to stop the shows. The chief was forced to order the managers not to sell tickets and placed uniformed men in front of the box offices to see that the order was obeyed. These men were not called upon to exercise any of the powers with which they were vested, by reason of the fact that no tickets were sold.

Shows People Want Them.

Nashville theater-goers, and in fact the citizenship of Nashville as a whole, seemed to enjoy the Sunday pictures, aside from the fact that they were helping a good cause. While the theater managers had it expressly understood that they did not open their houses as a follow-up plan toward regular Sunday opening, at the same time it was plainly evident that everyone was pleased with the pictures presented. In a town as conservative as Nashville, Tenn., Sunday pictures, run so as not to interfere with church hours, will not hurt anybody or anything.

Harry Sudekum Now a Captain.

Nashville, Tenn.—Harry Sudekum, prominent Nashville moving picture and vaudeville magnate, has joined the national guard, of Tennessee, and has been commissioned in the quartermaster's corps, with the rank of captain. The Fourth Tennessee, a new military regiment organized with a view of providing the state with a guard organization, has just been completed, and Mr. Sudekum's friends are congratulating him upon his splendid appointment.

Dresden House Changes Hands.

Dresden, Tenn.—The Kozy, moving picture house, has been sold by its owner, W. A. McCuan, to Clerk W. J. Jeter and Deputy Sheriff Bonnie Bullock. The new managers took charge at once and are now operating the theater. L. W. McCuan has been managing the house for the past two years, but joined the aviation service three weeks ago. The elder McCuan is engaged in other business in this town and felt his inability to operate the theater with his present connections.

News Briefs of Interest.

Nashville, Tenn.—The Strand suffered considerable inconvenience during the recent cold snap through damage to the ceiling and plastering. Water pipes in the upper floors froze during the cold weather, and the faucets were left open. When the water again began to run the faucets were on, and as a result the water flooded the auditorium of the theater below.

Cleveland News Letter

By M. A. Malaney, 218 Columbia Bldg., Cleveland.

"Tax Paid" Stamped on Used Tickets.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.—Exhibitors of Clevand are now using a rubber stamp with the words "Tax Paid" on all tickets for admission, complying with the latest ruling of the revenue department. This ruling also stipulates that every theater shall keep in its box-office a properly filled out blank showing the daily record of the number and kind of tickets sold and the amount of tax collected.

War Savings Committee Organizes Film Division.

Columbus, Ohio.—The Ohio War Savings Committee, in charge of the distribution of war savings stamps in this state, has organized and appointed a moving picture division.

J. A. Maddox, manager of the Majestic theater, Columbus, is the chairman, while the secretary is W. J. Dusenbury, owner of the Grand and other houses.

They have started their work by sending to many theaters a certificate appointing the owners of the theaters as members of the committee. A letter also has been sent asking the theater managers to do the following:

Use all films pertaining to the subject issued in the news weeklies and all films sent to the theaters independently of the weeklies from exchanges or the Government. Use all slides sent to the theaters referring to the stamps. Allow the "four-minute men" to speak in the theaters. Explain to anyone inquiring the full details of the stamps so that Uncle Sam shall not lose a single sale.

C. A. Thompson Heads Cleveland World Film.

Cleveland, O.—C. A. Thompson of New York has arrived in Cleveland to be branch manager of the World Film exchange. He succeeds E. A. Eschmann, who is transferred to another important position. This also means that Mr. Eschmann will find himself compelled to resign as president of the Associated Film Exchange Managers of the Chamber of Commerce, and a successor will be named within a few weeks.

Watch Out for Frozen Films! They Break.

Columbus, Ohio.—One of the most novel and yet important warnings yet sent out by a film man, is that by R. D. Hanish of the Rex Film Renovator company of Columbus. Mr. Hanish warns all exchanges and exhibitors that film in transit in cold weather is in great danger of freezing, and that it would be wise for them to let the reels lie in a warm room after coming from the express companies before running them or inspecting them, as frozen films are brittle and crack easily.

Lightless Nights Hamper Cincinnati Shows

Many Shows Change on Sunday and Thursday Nights and Signs Are Needed—Exhibitors Try to Get Modification of the Order but Fail.

By Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First National Bank, Cincinnati.

CINCINNATI, O.—"Lightless Nights" were added to the other "less" things caused by the war, as far as theaters and others using electric signs and illumination, when the fuel administration and its local brances issued orders that all unnecessary lighting must cease on Thursday and Sunday nights. This order followed the tentative and experimental order of a few weeks ago, in which certain limits were placed to the use of electric signs. Noncompliance with the original order was complained of in some instances, although practically all of the theaters scrupulously observed it; and, moreover, the actual coal famine which has since developed made the utmost economy in the use of fuel and its products necessary. It was accordingly decided to order all signs and other unnecessary lights shut off in the city on the nights named, and the business district presented the unique appearance of being unlighted except for the street lamps, for the first time in many years, in the early part of the evening.

The theaters endeavored, without success, to secure some modification of the order so as to permit them to use electric signs indicating their attractions on Sunday evening, at least, but the fuel authorities stated that they could make no exceptions, and the exhibitors and managers accordingly complied, with what cheerfulness they could muster. It was pointed out that the houses which run two moving-picture programs a week change on Thursdays and Sundays, making it peculiarly inconvenient to eliminate signs on those evenings, aside from the effect of little or no advertising illumination on the best night of the week, Sunday. In fact, on the first Sunday the order was in effect several of the smaller houses started out by virtually ignoring it, but they were soon brought into line, and the two lightless nights, now universal throughout the country, will doubtless be strictly observed by Cincinnati houses as long as the order remains in effect. Comparatively little effect on attendance has resulted, according to leading exhibitors.

All Ohio Theaters Will Aid Four-Minute Men.

Cincinnati, O.—Practically all of the hundred moving-picture and other theaters in Cincinnati and its vicinity, and the 1,200 houses throughout Ohio, will participate in the aid extended by the "four-minute" men working to educate the public on the use of the war saving certificates and stamps now being offered to the people by the Government. The direct access to so large a part of the public as can be found in the theaters proved to be highly useful in former campaigns, notably on behalf of the Red Cross and other movements in aid of the war, and the theaters have again enlisted in the aid of Uncle Sam in his newest form of investment certificates. Films are also to be provided by the Government hammering home the moral, it is understood, making a strong appeal to the people to be thrifty for their own sakes as well as to help win the war.

Stanley W. Hand Elected Chairman.

Cincinnati, O.—At the last meeting of the Associated Film Exchanges of the Cincinnati Chamber of Commerce, Stanley W. Hand, manager of the local office of the World Film, was elected chairman of the Board of Control.

Mr. Hand has been associated with the World Film for the last three years in New York and Boston, and was only recently transferred to the managership of the Cincinnati office. He has, however, been very active in striving for closer co-operation among the film exchange managers of Cincinnati, resulting with his being unanimously elected chairman of that body.

What the Film Men Are Doing.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Lee A. Horn spent Christmas with a certain young lady friend and her family at Ida Grove, Iowa.

Johnnie Bachman of the Jewel exchange spent Christmas with relatives in Philadelphia.

"Emmy" Maxwell of the Universal exchange spent Christmas at Weeghman's lunch in Chicago.

Chawlie Branham, manager of the Strand, spent Christmas with relatives at Litchfield, Minn.

Steve O'Brien of the General ate Christmas turkey at Beach, N. D.

Daddy Hoyt of the Select exchange spent Christmas with relatives at Gladstone, Mich.

Petrova's First National Exhibitors' Circuit feature, "Daughter of Destiny," was given a private showing at the New Garden theater Christmas morning.

Manager Conhaim of the Supreme exchange has announced that "Civilization" is now ready for booking on a flat rental basis.

Manager Mick of the New Palace theater, St. Paul, will begin showing "The Hidden Hand" and "The Mystery Ship" serials the first of the year.

Manager Rees of the St. Paul Hippodrome theater states that he will display "Vengeance and the Woman" following the completion of "The Fighting Trail" serial at his theater.

Manager Theodore L. Hays, of the New Garrick, St. Paul, has booked "A Daughter of the Gods" for New Year week and "The Whip" for the following week's showing. Mr. Hays has just completed a three-week run of "France in Arms" running two reels of the famous Pathe film a week.

Manager Branham, of the Strand, Minneapolis, has booked Eva Tanguay's Select offering, "The Wild Girl," for showing the first half of New Year's week. "Thais" and "I Believe" will follow at the Strand

Harry Rathner, manager of the Select exchange, returned to his office after a week's traveling through South Dakota visiting exhibitors and lining up new accounts.

Manager Conhaim of the Supreme exchange has returned from a short business visit to Milwaukee where his "The Italian Battlefront" is playing at the White House theater.

Hitchcock & Upham have bought the rights to show "The Italian Battlefront" in St. Paul and Minneapolis.

Manager Judell of the First National exchange has announced that Herbert Brenon's "Empty Pockets" will be ready for showing to exhibitors shortly.

Look for Better Business in Indiana

Holiday Slump and Extra Cold Wave Have Done Much Damage but Better Conditions Are Expected with the Opening of the New Year.

From Indiana Trade News Service, 861 State Life Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.—Business at the majority of the downtown motion picture theaters in Indianapolis has shown a decided slump during the last three or four weeks, but the indications are, the exhibitors say, that the drop is only temporary and that conditions will be normal again after the first of the year.

To begin with, the extreme cold wave which hit Indiana about December 15 and remained in Indianapolis for four or five days caused a big falling off in attendance. The records at the local weather bureau show that the 8-below weather which prevailed at that time was the coldest it had been in Indianapolis for the last forty years. The cold was accompanied by a heavy snow which made walking very disagreeable and consequently most everyone put off going to the theaters until the mercury started on its upward climb.

The early shopping movement is also reported to have caused a big decrease in attendance records at the downtown shows. The women, according to one exhibitor, have been spending their time visiting the department stores in the afternoon instead of taking in the motion picture shows and when night comes are too tired to go back down town to attend them. This they say is only a natural condition at this time of the year.

Several of the downtown theaters are arranging for special programs for holiday week and are expecting business to pick up again with amazing rapidity. It is the first real slump any of the downtown exhibitors in this city have suffered for some time, and, naturally, caused considerable pessimism at first, but the majority of them have become reconciled to the fact that the bad weather and early shopping has been responsible for it.

Hilkene Measure Quashed.

Indianapolis, Ind.—Members of the Indianapolis city council, at their last regular meeting, voted to have the ordinance governing the storage, handling and manufacture of motion picture films, which has been in the hands of the city welfare committee since last May, stricken from the files.

The measure, which was prepared by Jacob H. Hilkene, commissioner of public buildings, was introduced in the council shortly after the Colfax fire here on April 19.

Councilman Miller, who moved that the ordinance be stricken from the files, said that efforts to get the exhibitors and film exchange men and the welfare committee together had failed and he thought it best to clear the record so that the new council could make a fresh start when it takes office the first week in January.

Several parts of the old ordinance were too stringent, the motion picture men say, and they were unable to agree with the council committee in regard to the proposed changes. The motion picture men told the members of the council committee that they would be only too glad to conform with any reasonable regulations if they thought it would do anything to eliminate such tragedies as the Colfax fire but that there were certain parts of the ordinance that they would not stand for.

Theater Changes Across Indiana.

Indianapolis, Ind.—Quite a few changes in ownership and management among the motion picture theaters throughout the state have occurred recently, and the indications are that several other changes will occur about the first of the year.

Portland, Ind.—R. Hines of Portland, Ind., has been apponted manager of the Princess theater there to succeed A. E. Wilson, who resigned recently to accept another position.

Syracuse, Ind.—J. E. Morris, a newspaper man at Syracuse, has bought the moving picture theater there from Eugene Holloway, who is preparing to move to another town. Mr. Morris will assume active control of the theater about the first of the year.

Dunkirk, Ind.—William A. Pfisterer, of Dunkirk, has been appointed manager of the Majestic theater there, which was recently purchased by the Community Educational Amusement Corporation from William J. Lloyd. Mr. Pfisterer is one of the directors in the corporation.

South Whitley, Ind.—O. O. Wilson, proprietor of the Star theater at South Whitley, has accepted a position with a film concern in Chicago. Mrs. Wilson is now managing the Star.

Lynn, Ind.—Dick Fowler, proprietor of a theater at Lynn, Ind., closed his theater a few weeks ago and announced that he would not re-open it until after the first of the year. Cold weather, fuel and gas shortage and the high cost of operating expenses were given as the reasons for closing.

Morocco, Ind.—Allen Robertson, of Morrocco, Ind., who owns the Princess theater at Rensselaer and another house at Lowell, Ind., has closed the former theater for an indefinite period.

Linton, Ind.—J. W. Barrett, proprietor of the Linton Opera House, which he converted into a motion picture theater some time ago, has announced that the theater will be closed until some time after the first of the year. The state fire marshal ordered Mr. Robertson to build new fire doors and fire escapes and the expense of these, it is said, would be too great at this time.

Elwood, Ind.—John G. Lewis, proprietor of the Princess theater at Elwood, who was elected mayor of Elwood at the last election, is endeavoring to dispose of the Princess before he goes into office, January 8. In case he does not he will have some one manage the theater for him for the next four years.

North Manchester, Ind.—W. H. Shirk, proprietor of a moving picture theater at North Manchester, died recently, and the theater is now being run by members of the family.

Fire in Booth of Alhambra, Elwood.

Elwood, Ind.—A fire which almost resulted in a panic, occurred at the Alhambra theater, on West Main street, Tuesday, Dec. 18, when a reel of film caught fire and Otto Clair, the operator, succeeded in escaping from the booth, but he was almost overcome by the fumes.

Minneapolis Film Notes Christmas Week

Gifts and Good Christmas Audiences Bring a Little Cheer to Exhibitors—Fire Marshals Hand Out Fines to Three Exchanges.

By John L. Johnston, 719 Hennepin Avenue, Minneapolis, Minn.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—Following two days of typical spring weather with thaws, bright sun and rain, Christmas eve brought with it 15 below zero weather and chilly northerly winds, and incidentally cut down the Yuletide business at local theaters to a good degree. People on downtown streets Christmas day and after nine o'clock on Christmas eve were as scarce as hen's teeth, and it looked for a time as if the show shops were just keeping open for form's sake. However, Christmas night brought good crowds of people to the theaters and the exhibitors felt somewhat better.

Christmas was marked by the exchange of many presents between exhibitors and exchangemen, and as one exhibitor put it, "For once I got something from the exchange—for nothing." Local exchangemen were lavish in giving their employes presents, and exhibitors were presented with boxes of cigars, candy and greetings with rare generosity. Several exhibitors gave printed greetings to all their patrons, while others wished the formal "Merry Christmas and Happy New Year" on their screens.

Clean Up or Pay Up Order on Christmas Eve.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Local fire marshals gave three exchanges here Christmas presents they did not particularly cherish but will long remember last week, when the Pathe, Mutual and Triangle exchanges were fined $100 each for non-compliance with fire prevention ordinances. The Vitagraph exchange was "called" for not complying with ordinances, but by "making good" over night escaped a fine. Several other exchanges were given 24 hours to "clean up" or "pay up."

Many Theaters Near New Orleans Closing

Business Generally Is Most Prosperous, but War Conditions Have Hit Exhibitors and They Are Closing to Save Money—Footage Tax in New Orleans.

By N. E. Thatcher, 3501 Canal Street, New Orleans, La.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.—There is no denying the fact that the war taxes and the draft that enlistments have been making on the South has had a very disastrous effect upon the motion picture theaters all over the South. Besides the young men taken in the army, the building of the cantonments and their demands for labor call for hundreds of other men from the farms and villages. The most of these men have been the most dependable and liberal patrons of the motion picture theaters, and to have this source of revenue suddenly and permanently cut off has caused many exhibitors to give up the struggle and close their houses. Then came the demand for the payment of 15 cents a day per reel for war excise tax, and that helped to decide other exhibitors who were debating the question of going out of business.

Within the past three months about 50 per cent. of the suburban shows in New Orleans have closed, and in the same time the percentage of closed houses in the New Orleans film territory has been abnormally large. These theaters have not been closed because of a lack of money in the South, for the country is exceptionally prosperous, but the exhibitors have abandoned the enterprises because of a decrease in the numbers of potential patrons and with the fear that additional taxation will be the portion of the exhibitors, the number of those closed houses bids fair to be greatly increased. It is not because of any desire to dodge the obligations that every enterprise owes to the Government at this time, but it is the acceptance of a deplorable condition that appears to have no other solution.

An Interesting War Tax Situation.

New Orleans exhibitors are still worrying about the payment of the 15-cent-a-reel "war excise tax," and it appears that they can reach no definite conclusion in regard to the matter. Meetings of exhibitors have been of almost daily occurrence and some of these meetings have taken on an exceedingly interesting aspect. The suburban exhibitors have to a man refused to pay the tax and cancellations are now becomimg effective.

A strange situation presents itself here. The Josiah Pearce and Sons syndicate are absorbing the admission tax of 10 per cent. at their Canal street houses, and these theaters are in direct competition with some of the enterprises of the Saenger Amusement Company. There is no record that the Pearce interests have refused to pay the "war excise tax" either. The Saenger Amusement Company, through some of its representatives, are indirectly interested in several suburban theaters. Therefore, they are confronted with the alternative of allowing an advantage to the Pearce interests if they refuse to pay the "war tax" in the Canal street theaters and they are not disposed to desert their fellow exhibitors in the suburban field. By a special arrangement, permission has been given by the exhibitors as a body to allow an adjustment of the affair. Meanwhile, the exchange managers report that managers of the country theaters in the New Orleans film territory are paying the 15 cents a day assessment under various degrees of objection.

James C. Briant, New Orleans Metro Manager.

New Orleans, La.—James C. Briant, formerly connected with the local Metro film exchange and later with the New Orleans Item as motion picture editor and the First National Exhibitors' Circuit as booking clerk, has been appointed manager of the New Orleans Metro exchange, and he has already assumed his duties. "Jimmie," as he is popularly addressed by his host of friends, is an industrious chap and he knows the film game in this territory as well as the best of them. His rapid rise in the local field has been the subject of remark but his advancement has in no wise "swelled his head." He is gracious, a tireless worker and has the faculty of presenting the merits of the Metro in the best of fashion.

Good Fellowship Dinner for Second Anniversary.

New Orleans, La.—On Tuesday, Dec. 18, S. T. Stephens celebrated the second anniversary of his connection with the Mutual Film, first as the New Orleans exchange manager, and later as the Southern district manager with jurisdiction over all points south of a line drawn east and west through Atlanta. As a fitting recognition of the event, the Mutual office force and several of the exchange managers assembled at LaNassa's, a celebrated French restaurant, and enjoyed a sumptuous repast. The evening was spent in the exchange of felicitations and the dangerous straining of the Hooverized standards, although this was due to the exuberance of good spirits rather than because of any desire to be in the least loyal. Manager Stephens is now spending a good part of his time on the road.

Karl A. Bugbee Opens State Right Exchange.

New Orleans, La.—Karl A. Bugbee, who for more than two years has been at the head of the Metro in New Orleans, and who, during that time built up the business from an inconsequential volume to one of the strongest film institutions in this territory, has resigned the management of the Metro and has opened private offices in the third floor of the Tudor theater building where he will devote his energies to the exploitation of independent films and state rights features. Manager Bugbee has a very large circle of friends in the New Orleans territory and he already has assurances of a very liberal patronage.

Hattiesburg Theaters in Peculiar Predicament.

Hattiesburg, Miss.—Motion picture managers in this city have been made the innocent victims of what amounts to a boycott of all of the local business houses, and their receipts have been materially affected. The claim is set forth that various business men of Hattiesburg could not withstand the temptation of charging exorbitant prices to the soldiers who are located at Camp Shelby, a short distance from the city, and the resentment has crystallized into a more or less effective withdrawal of patronage from all of the city enterprises. On the other hand, it is stated that the influx of 30,000 to 40,000 soldiers and the attendant number of persons who naturally would follow them into this rather quiet and circumscribed inland city, has made such a drain upon its resources that the application of the old law of supply and demand has forced the present conditions, and no one is to blame. It is a fact that the problem of feeding the transient visitors has become a serious one. Most of the newcomers are exceptionally good spenders, and when they want any particular thing they are willing to pay the price. Of course, the large number with more modest means are not so liberal, nevertheless, they are the victims of the conditions.

A. W. Plues Gets Testimonial of Regard.

New Orleans, La.—A. W. Plues, former manager of the local Vitagraph exchange, is now a corporal in the service of Uncle Sam. He is stationed at Camp Beauregard, at Alexandria, La., and last week was granted a short furlough. Naturally, he spent his spare time along Exchange Row and was cordially greeted by all of his former associates and friends. Not only that but a company of them quietly went out and purchased for him a fine radium wrist watch, which was presented with due ceremony, accompanied by a written testimonial of regards signed as follows:

From the Boys He Left Behind—Harry T. Peebles, Harold Wilks, J. Wylie Pope, Jr., H. M. Wheelahan, Louis S. Collier, Jack Stewart, Allen Moritz, S. T. Stephens, Al Durning, T. O. Tuttle, A. M. Eisner, E. C. Stewart, Jimmy Briant, Burt King, Raoul Janet.

Thirty Good Friends—Nat Sobel, D. L. Cornelius, Maurice Baer, Al Shear, H. H. Gee, J. Gaston Dureau, Julian Saenger, E. V. Richards, Will Guerninger, Manny Jacobs, Frank Davis, John Brennon, J. L. Dalton, M. K. Wilson and Clarence Greenblatt.

Atlanta News Letter

By A. M. Beatty, 43 Copenhill Avenue, Atlanta, Ga.

Xmas Fund Gets Quite a Present.

ATLANTA, GA.—One hundred and twenty-five dollars were handed to the Empty Stocking Fund Thursday by Sig Samuels, managing director of the Criterion theater. The sum represented the Empty Stocking Fund's share of the receipts at the Criterion Wednesday, December 12, with several voluntary gifts by persons who handed money to the ushers as they left the house.

"We'd have a bigger check than that for the Christmas fund if there'd been anything like decent weather," said Willard Patterson, manager of the Criterion. "But comparatively few theatergoers ventured away from home over that snow."

Will Rebuild Burned Stringer Theater.

Gainesville, Ga.—Fire gutted the Stringer theater here on December 15 about 3 o'clock in the morning, practically destroying the theater. The flames had gained headway before found, and as the building is located in the center of the business district, the flames were confined to the one building. The damage is estimated at $10,000, partially covered by insurance. The theater will be rebuilt. The fire is supposed to have originated near the stove in the rear of the building.

Rialto Back with Films.

Atlanta, Ga.—After four weeks as a musical comedy home, based on the continuous performance policy, the Rialto theater has returned to high class photoplays, and will this week give the public two pleasing attractions.

Worth a Passing Glance.

The West End Home Guards have engaged the Shamrock theater, on Gordon street near Lee street for a benefit performance Friday afternoon and night, Dec. 27. The proceeds will be used to buy uniforms for the guards.

Mae Marsh is dear to Atlantans on account of her part taken in the "Birth of a Nation," and this was clearly demonstrated by the crowds that attended the Strand last week to see this little lady in a well-staged and well-produced photoplay, "The Cinderella Man."

The co-star with Harold Lockwood in the feature film, "The Square Deceiver," Miss Kathryn Hutchinson, was in Atlanta, the guest of her brother, Joseph T. Hutchinson, this week.

Atlantans are delighted to know that in the filming of "Triumph of Venus" the producer chose an Atlanta girl, Miss Betty Lee, to take the leading part. Miss Lee has never been in motion pictures, but singing in society entertainments in Northern cities and planning a career as prima donna.

Kansas City Business Notes.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Kansas City Fox office held a sales meeting at the local office for the following salesmen: J. P. Moore, B. E. Edwards and S. B. Stall. The meeting was conducted by Manager Young of the local office.

C. E. Reed, branch manager for George Kleine at Detroit, Mich., was a visitor in the Kansas City office recently. Mr. Reed was formerly a Vitagraph salesman here, and handled the picture, "The Seven Deadly Sins" in this territory.

"My Little Boy Blue," Christmas picture, enjoyed a run of 15 consecutive days in Kansas City. The picture was shown at six houses, all of which did a very good business on it.

The Kansas City office of the Hoffman Foursquare interests is now being enlarged and, when completed, will cover the entire fifth floor of the People's Trust building. The third floor of this building is occupied by Goldwyn.

J. A. Kirk to Travel Missouri for Metro.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Metro office in Kansas City has been making several changes recently, J. A. Kirk, formerly booker at the Kansas City Pathe office, is now a salesman for Metro and will work Missouri. He succeeds G. R. Ainsworth, who has gone to Pittsburgh, Pa., to manage a film office.

Kansas City's Heroine Is Marguerite Clark

Again Chosen as Big Drawing Card and Her "Seven Swans" Will Be Seen in Great Free Show in Auditorium Hall—Choice Last Year Was "Snow White."

By Kansas City News Service, 205 Corn Belt Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

KANSAS CITY, MO.—Never has a picture been so advertised in Kansas City as Marguerite Clark's "Seven Swans." The Kansas City Star and Times is again having a gigantic picture show of its own. Their part this year is very similar to one given last year. The most pleasant feature of this show is that it is free to all. Moreover, it will be a long show, running morning, afternoon and evening of Saturday, December 29, and the afternoon and evening of Sunday, December 30. There will be four screens, upon which will be turned eight projection machines, to be run by eight operators. There will be seats for 100,000 people, as the picture is to be screened in Kansas City's largest auditorium, Convention Hall.

The above facts give a brief summary of the grand party this newspaper is providing for the picture-loving public. Frank Newman, owner of the Royal and Regent theaters here, and several other houses outside the city, is in charge. It was this man who made the picture party of last year the great success that it was. He is being assisted by Samuel Forbstein, house manager at the Regent; A. D. Flintom, district manager for Paramount and Artcraft; C. L. Matson, publicity and advertising manager for the Kansas City Feature Film Company, and by the advertising and editorial departments of the Kansas City Star and Times.

The music for the showing will be furnished by a forty-piece orchestra, directed by Leo Forbstein, the leader of the orchestra at the Royal theater. The orchestra has been rehearsing for the picture for several weeks, during which time music adapted to it has been studied and practiced.

In regard to the publicity, Marguerite Clark, the picture, and Frank Newman, have all been covered, for each issue of the paper brings out an announcement of the party. These announcements have varied from a single line front page notice to a full page Sunday supplement synopsis of the story. There have also been write-ups of Marguerite Clark, in regard to her past and present successes. Frank Newman has come in for the praise which is rightfully due him. Incidentally Paramount pictures have received advertising that would otherwise have been very costly, for many are the quarter and half and full-page "ads" appearing in the Star.

The stage is now set for the biggest show of its kind that has ever been attempted in the city, which, considering the wonderful success of last year, will be a truly mammoth production. All is ready for the young folk, as well as those older, for one of the most enjoyable showings of motion pictures that it has ever been their good fortune to see.

L. I. Chandler Becomes Foursquare Salesman.

Kansas City, Mo.—L. I. Chandler, formerly with the Yale Photoplay Company here, has been added to the sales-force of the local Foursquare office. He will travel in Oklahoma and Kansas.

Soloists May Come Back in Picture Shows.

Kansas City, Mo.—Kansas City is coming back to several of the old practices that characterized the beginning of the moving picture industry in the city, one of which is the singing number between reels or entire pictures. Several of the cheaper-priced houses have never given up their amateur nights, but all of the higher-priced theaters have been showing pictures without any additional entertainment. Frank Newman, owner of the Royal and Regent here, and other theaters outside of Kansas City, used a tenor, Harold W. Stanton by name, for five days, and was so pleased with the result of his trial that he is seriously considering making this entertainment a permanent feature of his program. Incidentally, this singer is employed by a local hotel and is a high-priced man.

Changes in Short Subject Dept. of K. C. Feature.

Kansas City, Mo.—The Kansas City Feature Film Company announces that the short-subject department, which was formerly handled by G. E. Akers, now manager of the Omaha, Nebraska, office of the company, is being temporarily managed by A. W. Fiemel, formerly of the General Film, and who has been with the company for several months. It was also announced that Mr. Akers will be assisted by Fred Thiele, formerly sales-manager for Triangle at Omaha. J. R. Kirk has been made manager of the short-subject department at Omaha. Other Kansas City men of the company will soon be transferred to the Omaha office.

Kansas City Exchanges Find Business Good.

Kansas City, Mo.—Kansas City was flooded with out-of-town exhibitors during the week preceding Christmas. It is generally recognized throughout the country that this week is a very poor one for the average exhibitor. It is possible that the exhibitors came to Kansas City for Christmas shopping, but is more probable that the purpose of their visits was something else other than personal affairs. This is based on the fact that Kansas City exchanges are not feeling the result of the usual Christmas depression, as business with many of the exchanges has been unusually good. One exchange boasted of the best business in several weeks. Consequently, visits of exhibitors to this city mean more business for the exchanges.

Henneberry Gets Back at Robertson.

Kansas City, Mo.—Richard Robertson, manager of the Kansas City Goldwyn office, is a manager who puts great faith in the use of letter writing to land business, and, consequently, much wit and many pleasantries get into the correspondence. A letter of this style was answered by the following remarks along with a contract recently: "Give my regards to Marie Dressler and tell her that I "Fired the Scrub Lady" because she went at "The Spreading Dawn" with "Baby Mine" to see "Polly of the Circus" "Fighting Odds" in "Sunshine Alley," as she was "Nearly Married" to "The Cinderella Man" on "The Auction Block," "For the Freedom of the World" by "The Manxman." The writer was T. M. Henneberry, owner of the Empress theater at Paolo, Kansas, and the Empress theater at Ossawatomie, Kansas.

I. F. Mantzke Starts Things Moving.

Kansas City, Mo.—I. F. Mantzke, the new manager for the Kansas City Mutual, is "cleaning house" at the local office. The new manager is first going to install a projection room for showing to exhibitors in the territory each Tuesday afternoon. He is putting in a new poster department, the old paper being thrown away and new paper replaced on each release. Although Mr. Mantzke is new in this territory and has only seen several weeks of service in Kansas City, has lined up a number of good accounts and bookings on the seven-reel special, "The Planter," featuring Tyrone Power, have been exceptionally good.

Texas Film Men Find Business Encouraging

Contracts Are Plentiful and Checks Are for Large Amounts—Both City and Country Men Are Optimistic—Good Crops Offset Taxes.

By Douglas Hawley, The Times-Herald, Dallas, Tex.

DALLAS, TEX.—When managers for branch houses of the big producing companies exhibit fat checks, attached to voluminous contracts, and aver, in connection with the certification which appears on the checks, that business is good, then business must be good. They wouldn't be getting the fat checks and the voluminous contracts if the dear public were not going to the movies as of yore, and sending their dimes and quarters and dollars through the aperture in front of the girl at the ticket window.

All of which is another way of declaring that conditions seem pretty satisfactory in Texas. Producing house managers say so and the fellow from out of town echoes their statements. War taxes are with us good and strong and advanced prices are the most painful result, but the public, apparently, rapidly becoming educated in the campaign of thrift, is evenly distributing its saving campaign in various directions, so that the burden isn't being felt so keenly in the moving picture division.

I talked to the star traveling man for a well known producing house the other day after his return from a trip which covered pretty much the whole of the state. He was enthusiastic. He was as pleased as Punch. He has been getting plenty of business and he is continuing to get it. "Everything's all right," he declared. "Drouth conditions have been keenly felt in certain sections of Texas, but where the drouth hasn't prevailed, money is as plentiful as it can be, and the people are turning it loose freely. Exhibitors are buying the best pictures they can get—and that means the highest-priced pictures—because their patrons are demanding them. They tell me, too, that advanced prices made necessary by war taxes and the like are not cutting down attendance to any great degree. Ten and fifteen cents admission in the so-called country theater is the rule now, and many of them are charging twenty-five cents and still doing a big business. The situation is extremely satisfactory and the outlook wholly promising."

Manager Wachter of Fox Exchange Adds to Staff.

Dallas, Tex.—E. H. Wachter, from the New York Fox office, is now in charge of affairs for the Fox Feature Film Company in Texas, having come to the Dallas branch during the first week in December. "Fox features were never so popular in Texas," he said, as he exhibited a goodly stack of signed contracts. Manager Ray Stinnett, of Jefferson theater, Dallas, who controls houses at Joplin and Springfield, Mo., and Waco, Tex., has booked all the Fox standard features for the Dallas house. Mr. Wachter also reports an excellent business from South Texas. Several new men have been placed on the road for the Fox features recently, including Wm. Warner, from the Kansas City office; O. V. Randle, from Pathe, Dallas; W. T. Withers and S. T. Bryant, from Paramount, Dallas, and W. B. Wesley, formerly manager Mutual branch at Houston.

Lightless Nights Are Enforced.

Dallas, Tex.—Sunday night, Dec. 23, saw the first real observance of "lightless nights" in Texas, as applied to amusement houses. On the previous Thursday, despite the order out of Washington, there was slight observance in Texas cities, although several patriotic theater managers showed under "dark" fronts. Others didn't, however, and a justified complaint went up. As a result Fuel Administrator Blair issued peremptory orders and Sunday night saw the lid on tight. There was little or no falling off in attendance, particularly at the big houses.

Record of Features in Dallas.

Dallas, Tex.—"The Honor System," Fox feature long awaited, opened in Dallas at the Jefferson theater for the week of Dec. 23, to excellent business.

Madge Kennedy in the Goldwyn "Nearly Married," with Chas. Ray in "His Mother's Son," and the Sennett-Paramount comedy, "That Night," were crowd-getters at the Old Mill theater. For the latter part of the week Geraldine Farrar, in "The Devil Stone," and the Sennett "Pullman Bride" were shown.

The Washington offered Desmond in "The Sudden Gentleman," and the Crystal "My Little Boy" and Olive Tell in "Her Sister."

All Dallas Film Managers in Red Cross.

Dallas, Tex.—Dallas film exchanges, trade offices and theaters are 100 per cent. Red Cross. Ned E. Depinet, manager Consolidated Film and Supply Company, captained the exchange team which put over a campaign that was a winner. John DeStefano, manager Queen theater, captained the theater teams and made equally as good a record.

Exhibitors and Theaters of Southwest.

Houston, Tex.—O. W. Blankenbeckler of Dallas has purchased the Key theater, Houston, from Miss E. Johnson, and will operate it in future. A number of improvements are already under way. H. B. Hall, formerly with Mutual, Dallas, will be in charge.

Austin, Tex.—A. S. Walker, internal revenue collector at Austin, has made a ruling that all admission prices must be stated as such—that a theater cannot advertise "Admission 10c—We pay the tax" or whatever the admission may be.

Waco, Tex.—Messrs. Moss and Levy, Washington theater, Waco, are new members of the Texas Amusement Managers' Association.

Farmersville, Tex.—Raymond Cornes, formerly in the picture business at Farmersville, Tex., has become a radio operator and is stationed at Detroit.

Electra, Tex.—E. W. Collins' new Liberty theater at Electra, Tex., is about ready for its opening, soon scheduled.

Guadalupe, Tex.—There's a Roy E. Kinz, Jr., who'll soon be paying visits to the Palace theater, Guadalupe, Tex.

Greenville, Tex.—F. R. Newman, Greenville, Tex., is a new member of the Texas Amusement Men's Association and one who bids fair to show interest in the organization.

Cuero, Tex.—E. B. Wylie, formerly of Wichita Falls, has opened the Billie Rhue theater at Cuero, Tex. His first bill was a Paramount, with admissions of 6 and 11 cents.

Lampasas, Tex.—Roy L. Walker, of Lampasas, with his brother, has taken over the Witcher opera house, Lampasas, and will operate it as a picture house.

Kaufman, Tex.—J. T. Hatch, owner of the Wonderland, Kaufman, Tex., has purchased the Mutual theater there from J. A. Boggs & Son. It makes Kaufman a closed town.

Filmdom Notes of Interest from Des Moines

M. J. Frisch of Pathe Exchange Wins Promotion—Bruce Burgess Heads K. C. Feature Office—Short Accounts of Important Happenings.

By Dorothy Day, Register Tribune, Des Moines, Ia.

DES MOINES, IA.—M. J. Frisch, branch booker of the Des Moines Pathe exchange, received word last Saturday morning of his appointment to the managership of the Pathe office in Oklahoma City. Mr. Frisch has been employed at the local Pathe exchange for the past couple of years and previous to that time managed the Isis theater on the East Side. He has made a great number of friends all through this territory since his connection with the Pathe and the local exchange will not seem the same place without him and his good nature.

This is the second manager that L. A. Sheridan has turned out at the Des Moines office, carrying out the Pathe policy of promotion. J. S. Applegate, who left Des Moines to manage the Denver Pathe office was the first. Carl Hoye will take up Mr. Frisch's work.

All the best wishes in the world goes with Mr. Frisch to his new position from his many friends in this territory.

Bruce Burgess Heads K. C. Feature Exchange.

Des Moines, Ia.—Last week was notable for the many changes in the sales and office forces of the different exchanges. Harry Heirsteiner is no longer with the local K. C. Feature Film company and his place as manager of the short service department has been filled by Bruce Burgess, formerly of the Universal in this city. Mr. Burgess will handle the Arbuckle and Sennett comedies, the Paramount serial and other short Paramount subjects. Mr. Heirsteiner is planning upon taking up state rights work again.

Jinx at the Mutual Office.

Des Moines, Ia.—Manager Ballantyne of the local Mutual exchange had a difficult time keeping help in his office last week, when Miss Georgie Belding started the jinx, by getting her finger caught in the rewind, and having to be laid off for several days. Zula Edwards of the front office finished the job, when she was struck by a motor car and one limb severely fractured. She will be off duty for a couple of weeks or so.

William Shea Traveling for Bluebird.

Des Moines, Ia.—William Shea, formerly auditor of the Bluebird exchange, is now representing the Bluebirds in the Eastern part of Iowa. His place was taken by Miss Ruby Elder, who has been with the firm ever since it started.

Brains Helped Save Big Sign Letters.

Des Moines, Ia.—After the firm of Elbert and Getschell had gone to the expense of putting up a gigantic $700 electric sign over the Liberty theater at the cantonment, the government sent them word that since they were using that name for the government-owned theaters at the cantonments Elbert and Getschell would have to change the name of this house. So the name was changed to Trilby theater and it was only necessary to buy one new letter for the sign. Since the letters are only fifteen feet high this was no small escape. The Trilby will open the 30th of December if present plans do not miscarry in spite of the reported bad business of the other house.

Sunday Closing Law Up Again.

Grinnell, Ia.—The Sunday closing discussion in Grinnell is up again and the theater men have secured an injunction against the city officials prohibiting them from enforcing the closing law until the case is decided in January.

PACIFIC COAST NEWS.

Company Returns from Hawaiian Islands.

San Francisco, Cal.—Sessue Hayakawa and Margaret Loomis were visitors recently at the local office of the Paramount, having returned with a company from Honolulu on the liner Maui on December 4. The Japanese screen star stated that the trip had been a very enjoyable one, and his tanned appearance suggested out-of-door activities.

House Organ Makes Big Hit.

San Francisco, Cal.—The California Film exchange has just issued the first edition of an interesting weekly house organ known as "Reel Gossip," and from the manner that exhibitors have taken to it future issues will be greatly in demand. Manager M. L. Markowitz has managed to crowd into its four pages a lot of live information about new releases, together with timely data on war tax problems and personal pokes and jabs that are of interest to both exhibitors and exchange men. S. F. Zelinsky, traveling representative of this concern, is off on a selling trip through the southern Coast territory with the "Mystery Ship" serial, and M. E. Cory is covering the San Joaquin Valley with Jewel productions. Both will spread the glad tidings concerning "Reel Gossip" while away.

San Francisco Briefs.

G. B. Hellings, formerly with the Photo-miniature Company, is now city salesman for the Progressive.

George Naegle, of Pleasanton, Cal., was a recent visitor here and states that he had made extensive changes in his theater, having closed it for a couple of weeks, and that he had changed the name from the Gem to that of the Lincoln theater.

W. O. Edmonds, of the Majestic theater, and Glenn Hurst, of the Grand theater, Reno, Nev., were recent visitors here.

Walter Preddey has disposed of an Edison moving picture machine and outfit to Father Florian, Watsonville, Cal.

A. A. Berard, of Modesto, Cal., was here a short time ago and arranged for a First National Exhibitors' franchise.

Charles I. Luntz, of the Fox organization, has returned from a fine trip through Nevada and is now filling the position of booker, until some one else can be found to take this position.

Harry Lustig, the Western Metro representative, was a visitor here late in December.

Northern California Jottings.

Thomas O'Day has taken a lease on a large theater erected at Menlo Park, Cal., where Camp Fremont is located. E. Fried is to be manager.

The Star theater at San Rafael, Cal., has been closed and most of the equipment has been disposed of.

George Bailey of Turlock, Cal., expects to be in the army shortly, and the Turlock theater is to be sold on this account.

T. C. Reavis, of the Cline theater, Santa Rosa, Cal., has purchased the Rose theater, conducted for years by C. N. Carrington, Jr.

A. Bascom is to open a theater at Sisson, Cal., having taken over the house formerly conducted by Clay H. Powers, who has gone to Klamath Falls, Ore.

TO EXHIBITORS.

If you are doing something new and interesting at your theatre let our correspondent know about it. It may help others and help you as well.

Helpfully yours,

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD.

Chimes Theater Opens Near the Campanile

San Francisco's Newest Picture House Is on College Avenue, Near University of California—Gets Name from Nearby Bell Tower.

From T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

OAKLAND, CAL.—The Chimes theater, the third house to be opened in the eastbay suburbs of San Francinco by the Beach-Krahn Amusement Co., was thrown open to the public on December 15th. On the evening of the preceding day a private showing was made to invited guests, the San Francisco film trade being well represented.

This splendid fire-proof theater is located on College avenue, in the center of a wealthy residential district, and is about midway between the business districts of Berkeley and Oakland. It is named the Chimes theater on account of the interest taken in the $25,000 chimes recently installed in the Campanile, a landmark on the grounds of the University of California at Berkeley. It has a seating capacity of 1,000, with 600 seats on the ground floor and the rest in the balcony. The latter is reached by broad stairs on either side of the foyer and here is located a beautifully furnished lounge room and a rest room for women.

Interesting Decorative Scheme.

The decorative scheme is out of the ordinary, the side walls being relieved by a series of exquisitely modeled figures in whose hands are the direct lighting fixtures. Music is furnished by a Type 45 Fotoplayer and the projection equipment includes two Simplex machines finished to order in cream enamel.

The opening entertainment consisted of a Pathe scenic, showing views in Glacier National Park and Japan in blossom time, a Metro comedy, a late Fatty Arbuckle release and one reel showing the manufacture and assembling of fotoplayers at the plant of the American Photo Player Company at Berkeley. The latter was very interesting and the screen showing was interpreted by music in a manner that won frequent applause.

H. L. Beach and Will F. Krahn, who head the Beach-Krahn Amusement Co., are among the leading exhibitors in the east-bay section and in addition to the Chimes conduct also the Strand and Lorin theaters. Mr. Beach was formerly president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of California and is now the presiding officer of the Alameda County organization, while Mr. Krahn fills the position of secretary.

Goldwyn Representative Visits Coast.

San Francisco, Cal.—H. K. Somborn, the personal representative of Samuel Goldfish, of the Goldwyn Distributing Corp., arrived in town a few days before Christmas to inspect the local office and to investigate conditions at first hand. He came by way of Los Angeles and will visit the Northwest, returning for another stay in this city. One of the first things he did after arriving here was to make a careful inspection of the new California theater, of which he had heard so much, and of this he said: "This house is certainly the last word in moving picture theater construction. I have seen all of the finest houses in this country and in Europe and there is nothing to compare with it. Anyone planning to build a moving picture theater should by all means come to San Francisco and see the new California. If it could be set down in New York City just as it stands it would create a furore."

General Exchange a Busy Place.

San Francisco, Cal.—The General Film Co. has been coming to the front again very rapidly of late and since the announcement was made that the Paralta films and other releases of the W. W. Hodkinson corporation would be handled the local exchange has been filled with exhibitors looking for service. The first Paralta release, "A Man's Man," is on hand and is being reviewed by the trade and many inquiries are coming in from the country districts. Much interest is also being taken in the Judge Willis Brown's series of stories, these having been booked for presentation at the Casino, commencing January 13.

Progressive News Notes.

San Francisco, Cal.—Herman Wobber, manager of the Progressive Motion Picture Co., which handles Paramount and Artcraft productions on the Pacific Coast, left recently for the Northwest to visit the branch exchanges maintained at Seattle and Portland, and from there will go to New York.

D. K. Shanks, auditor for the Progressive Co., has enlisted with the Canadian forces in the fight for democracy and leaves this firm the first of the year.

D. K. Reed has enlisted in the aviation corps and his place in the booking department has been taken by Louis G. Stang, who recently resigned from the Mutual organization with the intention of engaging in another line of business.

Joseph Partridge Still in California.

San Francisco, Cal.—Joseph Partridge, of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, is still in California, but is living up to his name and is doing some lively flitting from place to place. Since arriving here early in December he has made a trip to Los Angeles, returned, made a trip to Seattle and back, and just before Christmas went to Los Angeles again in company with Sol Lesser.

Turner & Dahnken News.

San Francisco, Cal.—An innovation was offered at the Tivoli theater on Christmas Eve, when a sacred concert was given between nine and half past nine o'clock.

The Turner & Dahnken circuit has purchased the world's rights to Atwell's "Trip Through the Orient."

The exchange department is making active preparations for releasing the Madame Petrova production "Daughter of Destiny," and "Empty Pockets," with Bert Lytell.

The theater conducted by this concern at Hanford, Cal. has been taken over by Claude Langley, formerly connected with it in the capacity of treasurer. He will conduct this in conjunction with the theater to be opened shortly at Taft.

Theaters Nicked for Coin.

San Francisco, Cal.—The bunco artist turned his attention to moving picture theaters on upper Market street recently and within the space of a few minutes had collected $40. While the Saturday night rush was on telephone messages were received at the Strand, Imperial, Jewel and Rialto theaters to the effect that the Pantages theater was in need of quarters and would like to exchange ten dollars in dimes for the denomination mentioned. A few minutes later a well-dressed man appeared at the various houses, handed in two rolls marked "$5 in dimes," received the quarters and went his way. When the accounts of the cashiers were checked it was found that each of the rolls contained a piece of heavy pipe.

Factory Expert Visits Trade.

San Francisco, Cal.—George A. Blair, of the cine film department of the Eastman Kodak Company, was a recent visitor here and visited most of the finishing plants offering suggestions in regard to the proper handling of film and illustrating some of the latest methods of developing and printing.

Spokane Manager Tells of Pictures' Value

Sam W. B. Cohn, Who Recently Became Manager of the Famous Liberty Theater, Writes Newspaper Editorials on What Films Have Done in 1917.

By S. Clark Patchin, E1811 Eleventh Ave nue, Spokane, Wash.

SPOKANE, WASH.—Sam W. B. Cohn, recently appointed manager of the Liberty theater which is one of the leading moving picture theaters in the Northwest, has struck a new key in the publicity field which is interesting.

The Spokane Chronicle, which has a circulation of more than 41,000 according to its statements has been devoting space on its editorial page, for several months to "Public Service." It gave Mr. Cohn the space for three nights, December 7, 8 and 10, to tell of the start of moving pictures and what their place is in the educational world and the world war today.

In developing the articles he made each complete within itself and I believe what he has told the people of Spokane will prove not only interesting but may be of value to exhibitors throughout the country to use in a publicity way in their towns and cities.

Here are two excerpts from the three articles contributed by Manager Cohn:

Place of Pictures in Modern Life.

"Moving pictures have made it possible for those of us who have never visited foreign climes to converse freely on their geographical location and their customs. We know what a Japanese village looks like and the country north of 64 does not hold the imaginative terror for us that fiction writers would have us believe—and all because of the movies.

"Public schools, churches, laboratories, cantonments and scores of other educational and scientific institutions recognize the motion picture as a powerful and uplifting influence and it is not unusual for us to hear of the picture film replacing text books.

"Animal life and bird lore have been made an open book for us through motion photography. Deep sea fish, reptiles and beasts of the jungle have been revealed to us as one might expect to see them in their native haunts.

"Movie patrons have been enlightened upon the subject of psychcology and science through the moving picture lens. Master minds have employed this agency to exploit their beneficial discoveries.

"Motion pictures are teaching the youth of the world how to work, eat and live right. As an educator, the pictorial film in motion has become an important factor in the advancement and social betterment of the world at large. Spokane is fortunate in having exhibitors and showmen who realize the importance of giving places on their respective programs to films of an educational nature.

Helping to Win the War.

"Films depicting the ravages wrought by the Huns throughout Belgium and France can not but add to the determination of the American people. To hear or read about the atrocities committed by the Germans, arouses hatred, but when such degenerate and brutal actions are visualized the impression made on an audience is far more lasting.

"Unbeknown to many persons, authentic motion picture records are being kept by the various allied governments and when the war is ended the most complete and reliable history of a world struggle will be revealed for the first time. Movements of enemy troops, strategic locations and other valuable information for military purposes are being 'mugged' every day and doubtless many a sector will be lost or saved by the motion picture camera."

Princess Darkfeather in Spokane.

Spokane, Wash.—Princess Mona Darkfeather, known to filmdom as its leading feminine impersonator of Indian characters, arrived in Spokane December The to become associated as instructor under a school of moving picture acting. She will also confer with C. J. Ward, general manager of the Washington Motion Picture corporation, in regard to a contract whereby she will be starred in western and Indian photoplays to be taken in the Inland Empire.

In private life Princess Mona Darkfeather is the wife of Frank E. Montgomery, director of the local school. Her moving picture career has been extensive.

Clemmer Organizing Big Chorus.

Spokane, Wash.—The Clemmer chorus, to be composed of 50 young women, redheads preferably, but not necessarily, is being organized by Dr. H. S. Clemmer, manager of the Clemmer theater. The first appeal for members appeared on the screen December 16, and responses were immediate.

The chorus will be under the direction of Charles W. Hawley, Jr., organist at the Clemmer, and rehearsals will begin as soon as the personnel has been determined. Dr. Clemmer plans to make the chorus an adjunct of the theater's activities. Concerts and public appearances will follow in due course. Membership is open to all young women who sing.

MIDWEST THEATER NOTES.

By F. H. Madison.

ELLIOTT, IA.—Ground has been bought by E. V. Smith on which to erect a new moving picture show.

Caldwell, Kan.—Messrs. Dial and Scribner have had the opera house remodeled and redecorated. It will be open to the public December 3.

Tulsa, Okla.—O. W. Edwards will erect an office and theater building here to cost $500,000, 80x190, twelve stories and basement.

New Nebraska Theater Changes.

Gothenburg, Neb.—The Sun theater, owned by Nate Desky of Brush, Colorado, has been opened here. It will seat 800 persons. It is equipped with a modern pipe organ. Harold N. Desky is manager.

Ulysses, Neb.—Earl Blacketer, who sold the Crystal theater to C. M. Hogan, has been making plans to enter the navy as an apprenticed electrician.

Theater Notes from the Dakotas.

Mayville, N. D.—The Monroe Drug Company has purchased the opera house and moving picture show.

Walhalla, N. D.—Regnal Cochran has purchased the moving picture show from Hemsley & Fraser.

Minot, N. D.—The Lyric theater is now under the management of Nick Greenaway.

Film Notes of Interest from Portland, Ore.

Manager Myrick of the Liberty Does Himself Proud by His Christmas Decorations —Portland Exchanges Called to Supply Flooded District.

By Abraham Nelson, 601 Journal Bldg., Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, ORE.—The Liberty theater undoubtedly takes the first prize this year for the best decorated theater in Portland. Manager E. J. Myrick has spared neither money nor labor to accomplish this result and Portland's biggest playhouse surely presents an atmosphere of holiday cheer.

The motif of the decorative scheme is cheerfulness, and this is symbolized by red-tinted globes on nearly all the lights, having the effect of a fireplace glow throughout the theater. Of course the red is varied here and there with green to harmonize with the green on the Christmas trees, two of which occupy the stage. They are trimmed with hundreds of miniature lights and hung with Yule-tide decorations.

The ramp leading to the balcony is trimmed with white holly, among the leaves of which are set red silk poppies. The Boy and Goose fountain in the foyer is entirely covered with real poinsettas which were shipped to Portland from Southern California.

On the stage are hung two big electric signs, one above the screen and one below, wishing the patrons a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year, while around the columns supporting the Venetian balconies are wound many rows of miniature lights dipped to correspond with the general color scheme. Over 500 tenwatt and 300 miniature lamps, in addition to the regular lighting, were used to get the desired effect. All these lights are on dimmers controlled by the operator.

New Publicity Man at Sunset.

Portland, Ore.—W. L Reauveau will assume charge of the Sunset theater publicity department about the first of the year. He takes the place of Charles E. Couche, now head of the Couche Advertising Agency. Mr. Couche has given up his work at the Sunset to devote more of his time to the exploitation of big concert and musical attractions that have been coming to Portland of late.

Mr. Reauveau has been a newspaper man for the past eight years, being at this time advertising man on the Evening Telegram. His film experience dates back to his work on the Los Angeles Times when he was in charge of an educational department of that paper.

Talbert Joins the Navy.

Portland, Ore.—Jesse R. Talbert, bookkeeper at the Universal exchange, has joined the navy with a yeoman's rating. He will begin training at the naval station at San Francisco. Talbert is the second man from the Portland Universal office to join the colors, the first being C. M. Hall, who is now a sergeant in the quartermaster's department.

Paramount's Christmas Tree.

Portland, Ore.—The Progressive Motion Picture Company, C. M. Hill, Portland manager, is the only exchange in Portland to have a Christmas tree. They have it on display in their show window and it is trimmed with Paramount stars. The tree excited favorable comment on film row.

Floods Put More Service on Exchanges.

Portland, Ore.—Portland film exchanges were recently called upon to supply films usually shipped from Seattle. Train service both south and east from the Sound City was impaired by washouts and snow, and one Portland exchange alone was called upon to supply eight Idaho towns usually served from Seattle. Even Tacoma, forty miles from Seattle, was supplied with films from Portland when the trains from the East to the Washington metropolis were delayed.

What's the Matter with Triangle?

Portland, Ore.—Portland exhibitors are wondering what is the matter with the Seattle Triangle office. They have been complaining that Triangle fails to ship their shows every now and then, even where there is no apparent reason for delay, and one local exchange commented on the fact that it had been called upon several times to supply a show where Triangle had been booked and did not come. The exhibitors want to know why Triangle misses these shipments.

Strikes Cause Hardships.

Portland, Ore.—Strikes in the paper mills at Camas, Washington, and Oregon City, Oregon, are causing considerable loss of business in the picture theaters in both towns. All the efforts by the exhibitors to bring up receipts have been of no avail. Manager W. H. Durham, of the Camas Grand, recently booked several big features, including "Come Through" and "Mother," paying a bigger price than usual in an effort to create interest. W. A. Long, of the Star, Oregon City, tried to bring them out by adding an excellent vaudeville act to his already strong program of pictures, but the money was evidently not in the town.

With the government taking over ten per cent. of the receipts these exhibitors are being commended for the way they stick to their business despite the labor troubles.

SEATTLE JOTTINGS.

Interesting Business Notes.

Seattle, Wash.—The Seattle Metro office reports many inquiries for the coming Viola Dana feature, "Blue Jeans."

E. R. Rdelich, Metro manager, spent a few days in Spokane last week.

B. F. Rosenberg, Metro publicty man, is in Portland this week.

W. H. Betts, of Sunnyside, Washington, who has been in Seattle for the past ten days buying equipment for his new house which he will open on December 10, has returned to Sunnyside. Mr. Betts bought 600 chairs and two Power's machines from the H. A. Johnson Company.

Chehalis, Wash.—J. D. Rice, an exhibitor of Chehalis, has been quite ill for the past week with the mumps.

Seattle, Wash.—The Theater Supply Company, of Seattle, report that the last boats leaving for the interior of Alaska carried five Motiograph machines to that section. The same company has placed several machines at Camp Lewis, the National Army cantonment at American Lake.

Seattle, Wash.—Among the exhibitors visiting Seattle this week were Fred Mercy, North Yakima; E. L. Stannard, Wenatchee; Henry Newman, Hoquiam; W. L. Ripley, Aberdeen; C. E. McKee, Everett; Jack Rantz, Bremerton; W. H. Southern, Bellingham; W. S. St. Peter, Everett; W. H. Glenn, Issaquah; H. T. Moore, Tacoma; A. C. Anderson, Tacoma; Mr. and Mrs. Dennis M. Hull, North Bend, Ore.

Exhibitor Personals.

Everett, Wash.—C. E. McKee, manager of the Orpheum theater, Everett, announces the arrival of a new manager for his entire interests. The name of the important gentleman is C. E. McKee, Jr., and his proud father assures us that he is "some boy."

Spokane, Wash.—C. E. Stillwell, manager of the Stillwell Amusement Company, will leave the first of January for Los Angeles, where he will spend the winter.

Exchange Personals.

Seattle, Wash.—N. A. Thompson, traveling auditor for World, spent several days last week at the local World office.

E. R. Simpson, assistant manager of the Seattle Goldwyn office, has just returned from a long trip through the territory.

A. W. Eden, Fox manager, is back at his desk after an absence of a week, caused by severe illness.

Warm Winds and Rain Isolate Seattle, Wash.

Floods Carry Away Railroad Bridges and Greatly Hinder Train Communication—Difficult to Transmit Shows to Nearby Cities.

By S. J. Anderson, East Seattle, Wash.

SEATTLE, WASH.—Shipments of films for all parts of the Northwest and those returning to Seattle are being held up on account of the destruction of bridges and the overflow of roads by rivers and streams near Seattle. Warm winds coming in from the Pacific this week melted the snow on the neighboring mountains and heavy rains added to the volume of water pouring down the streams. At present, December 19, there is no railroad exit out of Seattle except north to Vancouver, B. C., and as there are very few towns to be served by the film exchanges in that direction, it doesn't help very much.

Representatives from the Northwest Film Board of Trade, however, met managers of the express companies yesterday and arranged with them to take films to the fast steamers plying between here and Tacoma, from which point they can continue south and, by a detour, reach the eastern part of the state and Montana and Idaho.

Continued warm winds are melting more snow, and bridges farther south are being threatened. Crews of workmen are trying to save them and keep the railroads from being flooded, but if the present weather conditions continue for a few days longer, it is feared that Tacoma also will be cut off from railroad communication with the south. If this does happen it means that most of the motion picture theaters throughout the Northwest territory will be dark until traffic is resumed, for the exchanges in Seattle serve the entire territory, with the exception of two or three companies which have branches in Portland and Butte.

Interesting Meeting of Trade Board.

Seattle, Wash.—Every film manager in Seattle was present at the weekly meeting of the Northwest Film Board of Trade at the Metropolitan Club on December 18. Interesting talks were made by Harry Sigmond, counsel for the Board of Trade, and Herman Wobber, president of the Progressive Motion Picture Company of San Francisco, which distributes Paramount-Artcraft releases on the Pacific Coast. After these a star chamber session was held.

Salesmen Find Demand for Comedies.

Seattle, Wash.—W. A. Mead, Fox salesman, has just returned from a trip through Washington, Oregon, and Southern Idaho, and reports that 99 per cent of the exhibitors in the territory are collecting the admission tax by a flat five cent raise, and that, so far, only two or three in that territory have closed on acocunt of the tax. Mr. Mead declared that exhibitors are receiving more and more demands for comedies, as the seriousness of the war situation is borne in upon the people.

A. Malotte, salesman for Fox in the Montana territory, returned this week from a thorough combing of his territory. He also reports a big demand for comedies. Mr. Malotte says that about five per cent of the exhibitors of Montana refused to pay the reel tax, but that he had had only two cancellations on this ground. He also stated that most of the exhibitors of his territory had raised five cents in order to collect the war tax.

New Exchange Building Offices in Shape

Seattle, Wash.—Although the Seattle exchanges moved into the offices in the new exchange building several months ago, only one or two of the interiors were finished, and the office forces have been working under difficulties. Gradually, however, the different compartments have been partitioned off, the shelves have been placed in the filing rooms and Seattle managers are now proud to show their exchanges to visitors.

Two of the last to get "dressed up" are the Goldwyn and Fox offices. In the Fox office the manager, the booker, bookkeeper, the cashier and the stenographic force, all have separate glass-enclosed rooms. Near the entrance is a long table where the trade journals are placed, and around the two sides of the wall in the corner of this little alcove are upholstered settees. This is the reception room. Each compartment floor has its fine rug, and a runner extends from the door to the entrance of the filing room. The manager's office is made more private by the use of silk sash curtains.

The Goldwyn offices occupy more space than any of the others on film row. Here the manager's office is enclosed in glass with silk sash curtains, but the other departments are divided by mahogany finished railings. The space on both sides of the entrance doorway is used as a reception room, with tables and upholstered settees and mahogany chairs. The fine rugs and beautiful lighting fixtures add to the rich atmosphere in this office.

Changes at the De Luxe Office.

Seattle, Wash.—M. Rosenberg, manager of the De Luxe Feature, returned last week from a several weeks' stay in New York, where he arranged to distribute through his Seattle office for the entire Northwest the features of the United States Exhibitors Booking Association and the Foursquare features.

W. S. Partridge, general manager of exchanges for the Exhibitors Booking, spent the latter part of week in Seattle in conference with Mr. Rosenberg, and announced that O. A. Woody, salesman for Mutual out of Seattle until last spring, would be manager of the Seattle branch. Mr. Woody has not yet arrived, but Mr. Rosenberg is already giving trade showings of the first U. S. Exhibitors Booking Association release, "The Zeppelin's Last Raid."

Mr. Rosenberg also anounces that he has bought "Birth" for the state of Montana.

Albert Rosenberg, secretary of the De Luxe company, has enlisted in Dr. Eagleson's base hospital corps, and will give up his work at De Luxe headquarters directly after Christmas.

Albert Finkelstein, salesman for De Luxe, is at present traveling in Montana and Idaho territory. He reports that the exhibitors in that part of the country are having very little difficulty collecting the admission tax, and that the picture business is quickly becoming adjusted to war conditions.

Among Theaters of the Northwest.

Montessano, Wash.—W. P. Armour has bought from Herman Fowler the Gem theaters of Montessano, Elma, McLeary, and Malone.

Hood River, Ore.—Art. Colstad is tearing down his old Liberty theater in order to erect a fine new house on the site of the old one.

Nampa, Idaho—Herman Brown, who owns a string of theaters in this vicinity is building a $9.000 motion picture theater here.

Mrs. A. H. Howell has sold her Unique theater to A. W. Evers.

Wolf Point, Mont.—George Seiverson will build a new theater here early in the spring.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compete with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

BALTIMORE NOTES.

Wizard Theater in Parkway Circuit.

Baltimore, Md.—Bernard Depkin, Jr., supervising manager of the Parkway Theater Company's interests, may now have another large playhouse to look after, for the Great Wizard theater, 30 West Lexington street, has been reorganized and Harry W. Webb, president of the Parkway Theater Company, will be the acting head of the newly-formed Wizard Theater Company. Thus, the circuit of the Parkway, if the Wizard is to be included, gives this company two theaters in the shopping district, the Strand and Wizard; one in the southern section, the McHenry, and one in the northern section, the Parkway.

The Wizard theater, since the time it was first opened, has been under the management of Bohannan, Lewy and Fuld, the first two mentioned being pioneers in the Baltimore moving picture field. It is reported that in the newly-formed company Mr. Webb is entering as a partner. The Wizard is now being lavishly redecorated and overhauled.

Harry Lauder in Baltimore.

Baltimore, Md.—On Sunday, December 23, the famous Harry Lauder appeared at Loew's Hippodrome theater and made a thrilling and gripping speech regarding patriotism and the need of self sacrifice to win the present war. The theater was taxed to its full capacity and the affair was held under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association, through the courtesy of George A. McDermitt, manager of the Hippodrome.

Baltimore Makes Anthem Obligatory

Star Spangled Banner Must Be Played by Every Band or Orchestra at Every Public Function, Concert or Entertainment.

By J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mt. Royal Terrace, Baltimore, Maryland.

BALTIMORE, MD.—On December 21, an ordinance was signed by Mayor James H. Preston, of Baltimore, and which went into effect on that date, whereby the "Star Spangled Banner" must be played by every band and orchestra at all performances, public function or entertainment, as the opening number. And the fine for violating this law shall be not less than $5 and not more than $100. It is also provided in the new ordinance in Section 2, that any owner, proprietor, or manager of a theater, moving picture hall or other place of entertainment, who will not permit compliance shall be fined not less than $5 nor more than $100. When the controversy arose in this city over the reported refusal of Dr. Carl Muck, leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to play the National Anthem, the ordinance was introduced in the first branch of the City Council by President John F. O'Meara.

Colonial Theater Not Sold.

Baltimore, Md.—The sale at public auction of the old Colonial theater, 315-17 North Eutaw street, did not take place as scheduled recently, and is understood to have been postponed indefinitely. The representatives of Lee Shubert, who claims to have a mortgage on the playhouse of about $45,000, were restrained from holding the sale through an injunction issued by the courts.

Crystal Theater Damaged by Fire.

Baltimore, Md.—On Sunday night, December 23, a fire broke out in the Crystal theater, 528 North Gay street, and this playhouse was damaged to the extent of about $1,000. Harry Cluster is manager of this house.

Censors Ask Increase for Expenses.

Baltimore, Md.—On Tuesday, December 18, the Maryland State Board of Moving Picture Censors, represented by Charles E. Harper and Mrs. Marguerite E. Harrison, appeared before Governor Harrington when he began to hear applicants for appropriations to be included in his legislative budget, and it is reported that the Governor was asked to provide that they be allowed, hereafter, from the fees of their department $15,000 instead of $12,000 for the annual salaries and office expenses. The amount of $12,200 will be turned back to the state treasury during the current fiscal year by this board, it is understood.

Wallace Reid Aids Red Cross.

Baltimore, Md.—When Wallace Reid, the popular Paramount-Artcraft star, visited Baltimore last week as the guest of Harry W. Webb, president of the Parkway Theater company, the Red Cross drive was aided in a very material way. A throng crowded about him in front of the headquarters on Lexington street, demanding autographed receipts for their subscriptions to the work.

Baltimore Business Notes and Personals.

Edwin Ristau Beveridge, who at one time acted as cashier at the Parkway theater, Baltimore, and later was employed at the Walbrook theater in the same capacity, is now associated with the Hippodrome theater in Buffalo as cashier. Mr. Beveridge visited Baltimore last week and it is understood that he will soon connect himself with a large theater soon to be opened in the West. His many friends wish him success.

On Saturday, December 22, and Monday, December 24, benefit performances were given at the Rialto theater, Baltimore, to aid the Palestinian Relief War Fund.

Meyer Goldberg, the father of Thomas D. Goldberg, manager of the Walbrook theater, Baltimore, died at the Union Protestant Infirmary on Sunday, December 16, from pneumonia after an illness of two weeks.

J. Louis Rome, counsel for the Maryland Exhibitors' League and manager of the Broadway theater, is thought a lot of by the employees in this theater, for they presented him with a handsome traveling set trimmed in silver as a Christmas gift.

As a unique feature and an added attraction, Bernard Depkin, Jr., of the Parkway, Baltimore, had a full vested choir of boys from St. Michaels and All Angels Church render a number of carols on Christmas day at this playhouse. The feature was "The Seven Swans."

"The "Birth of a Nation" still proves a drawing card in Baltimore, for, as usual, crowds assembled at Ford's to see it during the week of December 18. During the first three days of the week of December 24, "The Cinderella Man," with Mae Marsh, attracted many to the New theater.

The Fosdick theater, Baltimore, now being completed at Camp Meade, will have a seating capacity of 3,000. It is being built on the side of a hill and will have no posts to interfere with the view from any of the seats.

Newark's New Forest Hill Theater Begins

Christmas Day Sees Opening of the New Picture House Owned by Arthur W. Moore, a Local Jeweler—Policy Will Be Three Changes a Week.

By Jacob J. Kalter, 25 Branford Place, Newark, N. J.

NEWARK, N. J.—The new Forest Hill theater was dedicated Christmas Day under most auspicious circumstances, a large throng turning out to witness the initial performance. The opening attraction was Herbert Brenon's "The Fall of the Romanoffs."

The theater is at Mount Prospect avenue and Heller Parkway, in the Forest Hill section of the city. The seating capacity of the house is 1,165, all on one floor. The house was built and is owned by Arthur W. Moore, of Moore & Son, manufacturing jewelers, at 22 Green street. It is the latest in point of improvements and conveniences, and was designed by Henry Baechlin. The hot air blast system will change the air every six minutes.

The building, which contains besides the showhouse, three stores, six offices and several apartments, was erected at a total outlay of $125,000. The structure has a frontage of 150 feet on Heller Parkway and 125 feet on Mount Prospect avenue.

Although the Brenon picture will run the entire Christmas week, thereafter the bills change Monday, Wednesday and Friday. The management will book only the best productions available. Mr. Moore intends now to devote his time to his new enterprise, and will no doubt add some other theaters to his list.

New Camden Incorporation.

Camden, N. J.—The Metropolitan Amusement company has filed articles of incorporation, with an authorized capital of $100,000. The registered agent is Charles A. Cogan, with offices at 509 Federal street. The concern is authorized to operate amusement enterprises. In addition to Mr. Cogan the incorporators include William S. C. Roray and F. J. Smith.

Violet Mersereau at Loew's.

Newark, N. J.—The personal appearance of Violet Mersereau, Bluebird's dainty star, appearing in conjunction with her latest picture, "The Girl by the Roadside," was greeted with extreme delight by local admirers. She appeared the evening of Dec. 28 at Loew's Newark theater, 99 Springfield avenue.

Siebert & Levy Incorporated.

Atlantic City, N. J.—A new amusement concern has just been incorporated here, known as Siebert & Levy. James M. Sheen is listed as registered agent, and his offices are at 205 Sheen building. The company will conduct amusement operations. The incorporators include Justis Siebert, Jr., James M. Sheen and Joseph A. Levy.

T. M. A. Elects Officers.

Newark, N. J.—The following officers were elected at the last meeting of the Newark Lodge, No. 28, Theatrical Mechanical Association: F. B. Flandreau, president; M. A. Hoehler, vice-prisident; Michael J. Cullen, secretary; R. S. Sayre, treasurer; W. C. Duerrier, marshal; T. Cunningham, sergeant-at-arms, and W. Clayton Lomax, J. H. Wolf and H. I. Putnam, trustees.

Gersten Appoints Seiden.

Jersey City, N. J.—Julius J. Seiden, of 15 Exchange place, has been appointed New Jersey agent for Frank Gersten, Inc., a New York corporation.

Louise Maurel.....Grace D'Armond
Sophy Gerard.....Miriam Miles
Prince of Seyre.....Denton Vane
Lady Hilda Mullock..Julia Swayne Gordon
Stephen Strangeway.....Robert Galliard
Graillot.....Templer Saxe

Directed by Paul Scardon.

The Story: Louise Maurel, on her way to visit the Prince, encounters Strangeway, through a motor accident. He tells of the superstition that evil befalls men of his race who leave their hills, but she persuades him to come to the city. The Prince does not welcome a rival, but the Hillman wins, though not until he returns to his beloved fastnesses.

For the Program: He dared to rival his Prince—and won.
Love found him in the hills of home.

Advertising Phrases: He loved in spite of guilt confessed.
Evil lurked at city gates for The Hillman.

Feature These Players: Earle Williams, as the Hillman.
Grace D'Armond as the charming actress.

Stunt Suggestions: For street work put a good-looking girl in a closed car. Stall the motor on the business streets and when a crowd collects to watch the chauffeur, drop a sign reading: "Because her motor broke down, Louise met the Hillman and ——. But see In the Balance at (house and date)." Get some jeweler to place rings and other ornaments in a promiscuous pile in his window before a card reading: "She gave up these and other things for love of the Hillman. See In the Balance (house and date)."

Advertising Aids: One style each, one, three and six-sheets. One window card. Lobby displays, 11x14 and 22x28. Slide, Herald. Press and Plan Books.
Released December 17.

WHEN MEN ARE TEMPTED.

Greater Vitagraph Presents Mary Anderson and a Strong Cast in Frederick Upham Adams' Engrossing Story.

Cast.

Jessie Garden.....Mary Anderson
John Burt.....Alfred Whitman
Peter Burt.....R. Bradbury
General Garden.....Otto Lederer
Kingsley.....S. E. Jennings

Directed by William Wolbert.

The Story: John Burt and Arthur Morris are in love with Jessie Gardner. Morris' father is a millionaire and young Morris acts as though he owned the town. Burt rescues Jessie from Morris' attempt to compromise her and publicly whips his rival. There is a struggle in which Morris' revolver is discharged and he falls wounded. Burt flees and makes his way to the West, where he locates a gold mine. Meantime Morris wrecks the fortune of Jessie's father as part of a plot to win the girl, but Burt returns in time to turn the tables.

For the Program: True love weighs worth, not gold.
His millions could not buy a girl.

Advertising Phrases: A Gold Mine beats Dad's check book.
Mines against Millions.

Feature These Players: Mary Anderson as the girl they loved.
Alfred Whitman, as the man worth while.

Stunt Suggestions: Borrow a small gold sack from your bank. Fill with washers and let a couple of gold pieces protrude to suggest a bag of money. Place this in a window beside a soiled buckskin pouch filled with nuggets made of cinders touched here and there with gold paint. For a sign: "The gold you earn has greater value than inherited wealth. See When Men Are Tempted at (house and date)." Use similar "nuggets" to decorate plain wooden frames in lobby work. The frame can be made to fit over your brass frames, or a plain board can be used instead of a frame, tacking the photos to the wood, without glass.

Advertising Aids: One style each, one, three and six-sheets. Window card. Lobby displays, 11x14, 22x28. Slide, Heralds. Press and plan sheets.
Released December 24.

HIS OWN PEOPLE.

Greater Vitagraph Presents Harry Morey and Gladys Leslie in a Fascinating Drama of Irish Life by William Addison Lathrop.

Cast.

Hugh O'Connell.....Harry Morey
Molly Conway.....Gladys Leslie
Shamus Reilly.....Arthur Donaldson
Percival Cheltenham.....William Dunn
Lady Mary Thorne.....Betty Blythe
Patrick McCormack.....Stanley Dunn

Directed by William P. S. Earle.

The Story: Lady Mary takes a passing fancy to Hugh, the village blacksmith, finding him a refreshing contrast to the weaklings of her own set. Hugh foolishly accepts her invitation to call and when his jealous little sweetheart, Molly, follows to see what happens, she falls into the clutches of Percival, who locks her into the library. She is saved only through an attack upon the castle following a fight with poachers.

For the Program: Her curiosity nearly cost her happiness.
Midnight mob brings rescue to incautious colleen.

Advertising Pharses: It's Ireland itself at the Blank theater.
And now it's an Irish Vampire.

Feature These Players: Harry Morey as the young blacksmith.
Gladys Leslie, the girl with the million-dollar smile.

Stunt Suggestions: Green crepe paper and green electric globes will provide an Irish lobby very cheaply. Issue tickets good for "One Trip to Ireland," starting at your house on the playing date. Get the phonograph stores to display McCormack's Irish records with a special sign for your attraction. Get after the Irish societies in your town.

SINS OF AMBITION.

Cast.

Andrew Maxwell.....Wilfred Lucas
Laurette, his wife.....Leah Baird
Ruth, their daughter...Barbara Castleton
Franklin Church.....James Morrison
Violet Church.....Madaline Traverse
Jay Church.....Edward Lawrence
Charles Prescott.....Anders Randolf

The Story: Engrossed by his desire to perfect a universal language, Andrew Maxwell neglects his wife and child. He sends his wife, Laurette, to Prescott, a banker, who was an admirer of hers in the days of her stage success. Prescott reawakens her ambition and promises to help her return to the stage. Their relations are discovered and Laurette takes Ruth, her daughter, and lives apart from Maxwell. Ruth, realizing that ambition for stage glory is her mother's underlying motive, sets out to distract Prescott's attention, and though she nearly wrecks her own life, she reunites her parents.

For the Program: To save her mother's honor she turned her rival.
She sought once more the glories of the stage.

Advertising Phrases: Can ambition ever prove greater than love?
Daughter jeopardizes her honor to save her mother.

Feature These Players: Lay stress upon an ensemble cast that includes Wilfred Lucas, Barbara Castleton, Leah Baird, James Morrison, Madaline Traverse, Anders Randolf and Edward Lawrence.

Stunt Suggestions: Paint or print three sheets announcing the reappearance of Laurette Maxwell after a long absence. Date the posters a few days in advance of the playing date of the film. Two days before the showing paste over the announcement with a statement that the engagement has been cancelled, the reason for which may be learned by seeing Sins of Ambition at your theater. Until this latter is pasted do nothing to connect the house with the announcements, that curiosity may be aroused, announcing the appearance at some mythical theater. Get some Esperantist to write you a lobby card. If you can find no user of Esperanto, probably you can get a book at the library that will enable you to get the card made. Use a sign: "This is in Esperanto, the nearest approach to a universal language. Trying to improve upon this nearly cost Andrew Maxwell his happiness. See Sins of Ambition (date)."

Advertising Aids: Two styles each, one, three and six-sheets. One 24-sheet. Window cards. Slides. Three 1-column cuts, two 2-column cuts. Teasers. Heralds.
Released December 18.

ALIMONY.

The First National Presents in Engrossing Fiction an Expose of Crooked Lawyers Who Keep Within the Law.

Cast.

Mrs. Flint.....Josephine Whittell
Marjorie Lansing.....Lois Wilson
Howard Turner.....George Fisher
William Jackson.....Joseph J. Dowling
John Flint.....Wallace Worsley
Mrs. Lansing.....Ida Lewis
Elijah Stone.....Arthur Allardt
Florence.....Marguerite Livingston

Directed by Emmett J. Flynn.

The Story: Based upon an actual case of record, the story tells how Mrs. Flint, with the aid of a "divorce lawyer," avoids a divorce by planning to seemingly compromise her husband. Rather than compromise the reputation of an innocent woman, Flint assents to divorce and heavy alimony. Mrs. Flint hurries to the man she loves only to be told he has no intention of marrying. To gain revenge the infuriated woman plots with the lawyer to wreck her recreant lover's happiness and very nearly succeeds through the divorce courts.

For the Program: An unwanted wife's despicable revenge.
The fury of a woman scorned.

Advertising Phrases: The skeleton in the divorce court closet.
Her husband was only her banker.

Feature These Players: Josephine Whittell, as Mrs. Flint, who makes her screen debut. She is well known in musical comedy.
Lois Wilson, as Marjorie.
George Fisher, as the man who is interested only in married women.

Stunt Suggestions: Interest some minister in the story, and get him to preach a sermon on divorce the Sunday before the showing. Have the sermon reported in the local papers and then paste up the clipping. If there is a local or locality divorce of unusual interest, play that up. For a lobby flash get a male and female dummy. Bind their wrists with rope. Above suspend a huge silver paper sword lettered "Alimony. It severs the tie that binds." The same display may be repeated in store windows, window cards putting over the retailer's message as well as your own.

Advertising Aids: Two styles, each one and three sheets. One 6-sheet, one 24-sheet. Window card. Lobby display photographs, 8x10, 11x14, 22x28. Four styles one-column half tones, four 2-cloumn half tones. Combination half tone and line cut, two tens. Two scene slides. Copy cards, 7x22, ten in set. Rotogravure heralds. Press book.

Cast.

Paula Farrington.....Irene Castle
Peter Van Brunt.....Frank Sheridan
Marion De Long.....Helen Chadwick
Dr. Smith.....Elliott Dexter

Directed by Frank Crane.

The Story: Paula Harrington's father, made the scapegoat for Peter Van Brunt, commits suicide and Paula determines to avenge the wrong. Under an assumed name she enters society, but her identity is discovered. Forced by poverty to dance in a cabaret, chance brings her the information she seeks, but she foregoes revenge to find that vengeance comes from a higher power.

For the Program: Is there anything she does not dare?
Patria outdone for daring.

Advertising Phrases: See Mrs. Castle's new dances in——.
Society girl turns cabaret dancer.

Feature These Players: Mrs. Castle as the cabaret dancer.
Elliott Dexter as Dr. Smith.
Frank Sheridan as the millionaire.

Stunt Suggestions: Hang a rope ladder from the dome of the lobby and on it place a sign—"Mrs. Castle scales a 12-story building on a rope ladder like this in Vengeance is Mine. (Date.)" If there is a tall building available, hang a rope ladder from an upper window and place a dummy figure just entering the open window. Below use a banner "Mrs. Castle climbs twelve stories to avenge her father's honor in Vengeance is Mine. (House and date.)" Stage a race up rope ladders for boys or girls. Get the local paper interested in the stunt.

Adertising Aids: One one-sheet, two three-sheets; one six-sheet; one 22 x 28 scene; lobby display; slide; campaign book; music plot.

RUNAWAY ROMANY.

Pathe Presents a New Motion Picture Star in a Romantic Drama of Gypsies in the West, Written by Herself.

Cast.

Romany.....Marion Davies
Theodore True.....Joseph Kilgour
Bud Haskel.....Matt Moore
Anitra St. Clair.....Ormi Hawley
Inky Ames.....Gladden James
Hobart.....Boyce Combe
Zelaya.....Em W. W. Bitner
Zinga.....Pedro de Cordoba

Directed by George Lederer.

The Story: A theatrical press agent causes it to appear that Anita St. Clair, his star, is the daughter of Theodore True, stolen by gypsies when a child. True accepts the actress as his daughter and takes her west with him. There he adopts Romany, a gypsy girl, in whose education the local schoolmaster has interested himself. Romany escapes from the tribe to avoid a distasteful marriage. She is suspected of stealing money from True, but in the end complications are cleared.

For the Program: A Broadway star in her own play.
A tale of the theater and the vivid West.

Advertising Phrases: Another star stolen from Broadway.
A dream of dainty daring.

Feature These Players: Marion Davies, who scored a real Broadway success in Oh Boy.
Joseph Kilgour, himself a star.
Matt Moore, as the young schoolmaster.
Ormi Hawley, the Lubin favorite.
Pedro de Cordoba, as the gypsy.

Stunt Suggestions: A few red lamps, some sticks, a tripod and pot and some grass mats will make a good camp fire for the lobby with an appropriate sign. If you have facilities you can sell tickets from a gypsy caravan wagon, reproducing only the rear end. If there is a local palmist you might set her up in the lobby, or permit some clever girl appropriately costumed, to tell fortunes for the benefit of the Red Cross. This last will pass anywhere. Use a sign "Let her read your palm now and see her in Runaway Romany (date)."

Advertising Aids: One one-sheet poster, two three-sheets, one six-sheets, twenty-four sheet, one 22 x 28 scene, lobby display, slide, campaign book.
Released December 24.

BUCKING BROADWAY.

Universal Presents Harry Carey in a Smashing Western Drama in Which a New Lochinvar Does Things to Broadway. Story by George Hivley.

Cast.

Cheyenne Harry.....Henry Carey
Molly.....Molly Malone
Her Father.....L. M. Wells
The Captain.....Vesta Pegg

Directed by Jack Ford.

The Story: Harry is only a ranch foreman, but when he falls in love with the Boss's daughter, he tell her about it and she confesses that she loves him, too. All would have been well in the little bungalow Harry built had it not been for an Army man buying remounts. He entices Molly to the city, but when she finds that his intentions are not honorable, she gets word to Harry. Harry and the Captain meet on the roof garden of a fashionable hotel and when he and his riders get through, it's an even break between the Captain and the roof garden for wreckage.

For the Program: When Hank loved, he loved for keeps.

He wrecked a roof garden, but he saved his girl.

Advertising phrases: He broke a rib making this picture, but it was worth while.

Even the crooks helped Harry to Buck Broadway.

Feature These Players: Harry Carey, in a congenial role.

Molly Malone as the girl worth while.

Stunt Suggestions: In the lobby place a large box with a false bottom just below the top. Pile this high with broken crockery from hotels and china stores. Label it "This is just a part of the crockery Harry Carey broke Bucking Broadway. See the fight in the roof garden twenty stories above the street. (Date)." Additional capital might be gained by first offering a free matinee ticket for half a dozen broken cups or plates. The local store might hook up by showing a lot of breakage in the centre of a display with "We have a lot of breakage, but you should see Bucking Broadway, at (house and date)."

Advertising Aids: One three and six-sheets. Stock ones of the stars. Black and white lobby display, player cuts. One and two-column scene cuts. Press sheets. Slides. Heralds.

Released December 24.

AN AMERICAN WIDOW.

Metro Presents Ethel Barrymore in a Five-Act Adaptation of Kellett Chamber's Play of the Same Title. Arranged by Albert S. Le Vino.

Cast.

Elizabeth Carter.....Ethel Barrymore
Jasper Mallory.....Irving Cummings
Earl of Dettsminster.....Dudley Hawley
Augustus Tucker.....Ernest Stallard
Theodore Bacon.....Charles Dickson
Pitney Carter.....Alfred Kappler
Carstairs.....Arthur Lewis
Mme. Albini.....Pearl Bowne

The Story: Elizabeth Carter, a wealthy young widow, determines to marry an English Earl for the sake of his title, but a codicil in her first husband's will requires that she marry an American for her second husband if she is to hold the estate. She conceives the brilliant idea of marrying a second husband only to divorce him and so evade the terms of the will. She selects an impecunious playwright, Jasper Mallory, and precipitates a drama that runs to a happy but unexpected ending.

For the Program: She hired a husband just to divorce him.

A rollicking farce that turns to romance.

Advertising Phrases She had to hug her hired husband.

A snappy story of society and the stage.

Feature These Players: Ethel Barrymore in a role that might have been made to order.

Irving Cummings as the young playwright.

Dudley Hawley as the impecunious Earl.

Stunt Suggestions: Use throwaways and posted bills reading "Wanted—a Husband. I want a man of apparent respectability to marry me and give me immediate grounds for divorce. Apply to Elizabeth Carpenter, Blank Theater" or use the same advertisement in the newspapers with the address "in care of this paper," and make a press story of the replies. There are bound to be some jokers write in. For the lobby use a large card $50,000 for a man to immediately divorce me. Apply within."

Advertising Aids: One and two-column mats and electros of star and scene.

Released December 17.

THE SCARLET CAR.

Bluebird Presents Franklyn Farnum in a Screen Arrangement of Richard Hardin Davis' Well-Known Story. Script by William Parker

Cast.

Billy Winthrop.....Franklyn Farnum
Samuel Winthrop.....Al Filson
Paul Revere Forbes.....Lon Chaney
Beatrice Forbes.....Edith Johnson
Ernest Peabody.....Sam De Grasse
Cyrus Peabody.....Howard Crampton
Jim Pettit.....William Lloyd

The Story: An exciting story of a small town tragedy. Billy Winthrop is the town idler, but when he finds it nearly bankrupts his father to get him out of a scrape, he steadies down. But the girl he loves is engaged to marry the son of the local banker and Billy plans an elopement that is not as simple as it was planned, for it winds up with the discovery of the girl's father and the detection of the unscrupulous banker and his son. A story with all the R. H. D. verve and dash.

For the Program: One of Richard Harding Davis' best with Franklyn Farnum for the star.

Sometimes elopements are simple. This one wasn't.

Advertising Phrases: An elopement that solves a murder mystery.

A load of shame in a scarlet car.

Feature These Players: Franklyn Farnum as Billy.

Edith Johnson as the girl.

Al Filson as the father.

Stunt Suggestions: Send a red automobile around town with a dummy body in the tonneau. On the rear use a banner "Learn the mystery of The Scarlet Car at the ——— tonight. A Bluebird with Franklyn Farnum." Get your bank to fix up a dummy page of loose leaf ledger. Offer a prize to anyone discovering the forged entry. Since there is none, there need be no prizes. Use in a frame in the lobby.

Advertising Aids: One style each one-, three- and six-sheets. Stock ones of stars. Lobby photos colored and black-and-white slide. Player cuts in three sizes, one and two-column scene cuts. Press sheet. Heralds.

Released December 24.

MY UNMARRIED WIFE.

Bluebird Presents an Absorbing Adaptation of Frank R. Adams' Novel, Molly and I, with Carmel Meyers. Arranged by George Siegmann.

Cast.

Mary Cunningham.....Carmel Myers
Philip Smith.....Kenneth Harlan
Mrs. Sutherland.....Beatrice Van
Jack Herrick.....Pat Calhoun
Dr. Allen.....Mark Fenton
Tonio.....Jack Hutchinson

The Story: Philip Smith, disowned by his father because he will not adopt a business career, is injured by a blast while saving a child from the explosion. His eyes are injured and Mary Cunningham, a physician's assistant, leads him to the doctor who declares that only a famous Swiss surgeon can give relief. Unable to pursue his literary labors, Philip is about to shoot himself when Molly, who has followed him, offers to send him abroad if he will marry her that night to fulfil the conditions of a will. He gives the wife he has never seen a little ring that was his mother's, and it comes back to him after many strange happenings.

For the Program: He could not see the woman he married.

"Going it blind" into matrimony.

Advertising Phrases: She wanted his love; not merely his name.

Love came through the kitchen.

Feature These Players: Carmel Myers, a new Bluebird star, in a really unique role. Kenneth Harlan, as Smith.

Stunt Suggestions: Get a local jeweler to make an odd-looking silver ring the center of his window display with a card reading "This ring was the only means Philip Smith had of knowing his wife, for he married her when he was blind. See My Unmarried Wife (house and date)." "The same display may be used for the lobby. Send a well dressed 'blind' man through the streets with a placard, 'I am blind and I am looking for My Unmarried Wife.' You can find her at the (house and date)."

Advertising Aids: One style each, one-, three- and six-sheets. Stock sheets of stars. Colored and black-and-white lobby display photos. Slide. Player cuts in three sizes. One and two-column scene cuts. Press sheet. Ideas sheet. Heralds.

Released January 7.

RED, WHITE AND BLUE BLOOD.

Metro Presents Francis X. Bushman and Beverley Bayne in a Five-Act Wonder-Play of Adventure and Romance. By Shannon Fife.

Cast.

John Smith.....Francis X. Bushman
Helen Malloy-Smythe.....Beverley Bayne
Patrick Smith.....William H. Tooker
Mrs. Malloy-Smythe.....Adella Barker
Bob Malloy-Smythe.....Cecil Fletcher
Light Fingered Bertie.....Jack Raymond
Charlie Jadwin.....C. R. McKinney

Directed by Charles J. Brabin.

The Story: John Smith saves a train load of fellow passengers from a hold-up and particularly attracts the attention of Helen Malloy-Smythe. He gives a fictitious name to escape her gratitude, but later, at his father's country place, on Long Island, he again rescues her, this time from the water, and he has to own his identity. They become interested in each other, but the course of true love does not run smoothly until a third time he comes to her aid and the rest is merely a demonstration that red, white and blue blood is better than the imported cerulean article.

For the Program: The Count didn't count in the long run.

Smith, plus Smythe equals—SMITH.

Advertising Phrases: Bushman and Bayne in a drama of fashion.

He saves her three times to wed her once.

Feature These Players: Francis X. Bushman as plain John Smith.

Beverley Bayne as the girl who was willing to change Smythe into Smith.

Stunt Suggestions: There is a fox hunt in this picture. Get the art stores to display some English hunting prints with a card reading "See the Famous Meadowbrook Hunt in Red, White and Blue Blood at (house and date)." Your druggist can fix up a bottle of red, white and blue liquid in layers in the same bottle or use colored gelatine. Set in a box in the lobby beside one of a pale bluish tint, and light from behind with diffused light. Above use a card "Helen preferred Red, White and Blue Blood to the imported brand. (Date)." It would be well to emphasize the fact that this is not a war play.

Advertising Aids: Two styles each one, three, and six-sheets. Press and filler sheets. Ten minute novel for newspaper work. Slide. Herald. Lobby sheet. Lobby display in sepia 8 x 10 with synopsis and title card. Colored cards 11 x 14, two colored scene cards 22 x 28. Mats and cuts as shown in press sheet.

Released December 24.

THE AVENGING TRAIL.

Metro Presents Harold Lockwood in an Adaptation of Henry Oyen's Novel, Gaston Olaf. Picturized by Fred J. Balshofer and Mary Murillo.

Cast.

Gaston Olaf.....Harold Lockwood
Rose Havens.....Sally Crute
Tom Pine.....Joseph Dailey
Devil Dave Taggart.....Walter P. Lewis
Lefty Red.....Lewis R. Wolheim
William Hale.....William Clifford

Directed by Francis Ford.

The Story: Gaston Olaf and his partner, Tom Pine, men of the woods, come to town. They see Rose struggling in the embrace of Lefty Red, and Gaston compels the bully to retreat. A challenge fight follows and Olaf wins a victory. Red's employer, Taggart, induces Gaston to become his woods foreman, but finding that the enterprise is unlawful, he gives up the job and comes to town to save Rose from Taggart, after the latter has caused her safe to be robbed. He throws Taggart into jail, after being wounded in the fight, and presides as Marshal over the reformed town.

For the Program: A story fragrant with the scent of pines.

The tale of an outdoor man's love.

Advertising Phrases: Two tremendous fights are the least of Gaston's troubles.

He fought for love and the love of fighting.

Feature These Players: Harold Lockwood as Gaston.

Sally Crute as Rose.

Walter P. Lewis as Taggart.

William Clifford as William Hale.

Stunt Suggestions: For the playing dates a little evergreen will give the proper woods atmosphere to your lobby and can be made into an elaborate display if desired. For street work send out lumbermen in boots and mackinaws with packs on their backs. Letter signs on the packs. Use two or more in single file.

Advertising Aids: One and two-column cuts and mats.

Released December 31

THE GOWN OF DESTINY.

Triangle Presents Earl Derr Bigger's Ingenious Story of How a Weakling Won a Battle and Saved His Father's Life. Adapted by Lynn F. Reynolds.

Natalie Drew.....Alma Rubens
Neil Cunningham.....Allan Sears
Mrs. Reyton.....Lillian West
Mr. Reyton.....J. Barney Sherry
Lucien Leriche.....Pietro Buzzi
Sir John Cunningham....Frederick Vroom
Mme. Felice.....Bliss Chevalier

The Story: Andre was only a dressmaker's designer, too puny to fight for his beloved France in the trenches. He could only design dresses, but one of his creations made two women happy, gave three ambulances to his homeland and sent into the trenches the soldier who led the charge that saved his father's life.

For the Program: They also serve who stand and wait.

He could not fight, yet he won a battle.

Program Phrases: A curious combination of consequences.

He had the body of a pygmy but the soul of a hero.

Feature These Players: Alma Rubens as Natalie.

Herrera Tejedde, as the dressmaker who did his part.

Neil Cunningham, as the soldier.

Stunt Suggestions: Get the local store to make a special window display of its most elaborate dress and a card explaining, "Look your best. One exquisite gown brought joy to two women and won a battle. See The Gown of Destiny at (house and date)." Erect a post in the lobby, graduated by feet and inches. Fasten a cross-piece slightly above the five foot mark and above this announce "Andre was too short to be a soldier, but he won a famous battle and saved his father in The Gown of Destiny. (Date)."

Advertising Aids: Two one, one three and one six-sheets. Herald in rotogravure. Slide. Lobby displays 11 x 14 both sepia and tinted. Scene photo 22 x 28. Electros. Mats. Press sheet.

Herman Westphal.....George Pearce
Sylvester Brandon.....Edwin Martin
Grace Garwood.....Mildred Delfino
Lonnis Gorman.....Lee Phelps
John Cameron.....Arthur Millet
Arthur Kingston..... A. C. Lamsay

The Story: To decide a wager, two young millionaires decide to take a vagrant from a lodging house and give him the name and wealth of one of the pair, to see what he will do. By mistake they seize upon a young newspaper reporter down on his luck. The reporter enters into the spirit of the idea and wins the girl of his love and gets a better job on his old paper.

For the Program: What would you do if you woke up a millionaire?

He went to sleep in a Bowery lodging house and woke on Fifth Avenue.

Advertising Phrases: What would you do with a million dollars?

From the Bowery to Palm Beach.

Feature These Players: Charles Gunn, as the young reporter.

Laura Sears as the politician's daughter.

Stunt Suggestions: For the lobby build a rude bunk with a straw mattress and a single blanket without sheets. Beside it place a handsome brass bedstead. Above use a sign "Gordon Travis went to sleep in this and woke up in this. See Framing Framers (date)." If the lobby is small, work the display with a furniture or department store. Use "What would you do with a million dollars?' as a teaser line in the papers.

Albert Lockhart.....Wallace Worsley

The Story: Jeanne Beaufort, a patriot of the confederacy, enters the secret service of the south. While eavesdropping at a meeting of the secret agents of the enemy, she is captured by eleven masked men and to save her life is compelled to marry one of them, the ceremony being performed by their leader who is a clergyman. She notices a peculiar tattoo mark on the wrist of the man to whom she is being married. With this mark as a clue she begins a search for her unknown husband, but the mark proves to be more of a hindrance than a help, and leads her into an entanglement of mystery and intrigue when she is sent to battle wits within the enemy's line. A reward is offered for her—dead or alive. During a series of thrilling adventures the web slowly closes about her and the final climax of the story comes when she is saved—just at the moment when destruction seems certain.

For the Program: An unwritten chapter from American History.
Containing all the romance and picturesque charm of the Southland.

Advertising Phrases: Chills your spine, grips your heart, and causes that quick catch in your throat.
Seven parts—you'll wish there were seven more.

Feature These Players: Bessie Barriscale, as the daring heroine.
Edward Coxen, for so long a Kalem favorite.

Advertising Aids: Two one-sheets, two three-sheets, one six-sheet, two styles 22 x 28 photos, eight 11 x 14 photos, twelve 8 x 10 photos, rotogravure heralds, slides, two 1-col. cuts, two 2-col. cuts, one 1-col. star cut (stock), thumb nail cuts, press books, music cues.

Stunt Suggestions: Offer a pair of seats to any man who has a tatoo mark on his right wrist. Explain in your newspaper stories why the offer is made, and you can get a good second day news story on the variety of tattoo marks offered in evidence. For street work use a girl equestrienne in an old-fashioned habit. Blanket the horse with an advertising sign.

ESSANAY.

WATER POWERS OF WESTERN CANADA (One Reel Scenic).—This reel takes the observer into the vast water power resources of Western Canada, showing the Schuyler Falls, headquarters of Coquitlam Lake and others of the hundreds of power-producing water agencies. You will see the intake control house at Lake Buntzen and glaciers which are melted and then water converted to produce power. It shows Calgary, Alberta, a city "grain-made and water-made," and the Winnipeg River that furnishes a capacity of 420,000 horse power. The Upper Seven Sister Falls and a general view of the city of Winnipeg are also included in the reel.

NUT STUFF (One Reel Comedy).—Featuring Arthur Bates, the director. The director believes he has a whale of a melodrama idea and after much pleading induces his company to stage the picture on credit. This they do. The director then takes the film to a motion picture buyer and tries to sell it to him. They go into the projection room and the picture is run off. It is a wild story, of a pretty girl, a black-mustached villain, a broad-shouldered hero and crooks that pass in the night. But somehow it fails to strike the pleasure of the prospective buyer. For he takes the film and throws it at the director. Entangled in the film, the director returns to his company, awaiting their pay. On the way the film catches fire and is burned up. Arriving at the studio, the director is assailed by his players and beaten unmercifully.

THROUGH CANADA FROM COAST TO COAST (One Reel Scenic).—A delightful tour via the motion picture screen is offered in this scenic reel. It will take you from Nova Scotia, "where the east begins," to the coast of British Columbia, "the valedictory of the west." It shows the building of wooden ships at Farrsboro, N. S., the great "Soo" locks, the steel mills near Sault Ste. Marie, Medicine Hat, the weather man's headquarters, Winnipeg, and other metropolitan points as well as the beautiful scenery along the Kicking Horse River. Prince Rupert, on the island north of Vancouver, is also shown, as the port of call for all northern line steamers.

HOW CANADA AND THE FARMER CO-OPERATE IN GRAIN RAISING (One Reel Scenic).—This film shows the splendid results of the Canadian Government's cooperation with her farmers toward the end of making them more prosperous and of increasing the efficiency of the soil. Science and system are revealed in this picture, in the scenes of Alberta grain growing and in the huge mills and elevators of Winnipeg and Montreal. You will see how the grain is shipped and handled in the elevators; how it is inspected, and will be given an insight into the flour mills of the Dominion.

SPARKLE COMEDY.

AFTER THE MATINEE (One Reel).—Wheeler and Bruce, law partners, go to the Beauty Show where they meet Trixie Davenport, a soubrette. Trixie has been informed by her manager that some big publicity scheme will have to be framed up, as business is bad. The partners escort her to her hotel, exacting a promise that she will drop around to their offices to see them. Trixie and her press agent see possibilities of glaring headlines, and soon the partners receive a telephone message that Trixie is about to pay the expected visit. They suspend work and send the clerks home for the day. Trixie arrives, wine is opened and all cares forgotten. Her press agent, in the meantime, has informed the wives that they are needed at their husbands' offices, and soon the partners are informed by the private telephone operator that their wives are in the outer office. Trixie is hastily togged out in various articles of the men's wearing apparel in the hope that she will pass through unnoticed, but she is careful to disclose her sex to the waiting wives, who are shocked beyond words, and are only prevented from tearing her to pieces by the press agent, who has just entered. The attorneys, hearing the rumpus, take refuge on some rigging which is taking up a safe outside the window. The wives follow, cut the rope, and all land on the sidewalk below, where Trixie and her press agent arrive in time to tell a policeman that it is all just a little publicity scheme which will be explained in tomorrow's newspaper. Having accomplished their purpose they merrily beat it, while the wives take vengeance on their misled husbands.

BROADWAY STAR FEATURE.

THE COUNT AND THE WEDDING GUEST (One of the O. Henry Series—Two Parts).—The cast: Mary Conway (Jean Paige); Andy Donovan (Webster Campbell). Directed by Martin Justice.

Mary Conway was a nonentity in Mrs. Scott's New York genteel boarding house. She had never had a beau. Andy Donovan, a new boarder, caused her first flutter and regret for her unattractiveness. A description in a lurid novel of the grief-stricken heroine and the attention she attracted in her garb of woe gives Mary an idea and—two weeks later she appears fashionably attired in Fifth avenue mourning—and weeps forth a tale to the now sympathetic Andy of a dead fiance, the Count Mazzini.

"Young men are grave-diggers by nature," and Andy hurriedly dug her heart up out of that grave.

A month later is their wedding day—Mary is radiant but Andy is gloomy. The cause, he explains, is that his very influential friend, Big Jim Sullivan, cannot come to the wedding. This fact causes Mary more anxiety until Andy asks: "Do you care as much for me as you do for the count?" Mary had almost forgotten the count, but now the past rises up to hurt, and at last she confesses that there never was a count, the picture in the locket was from a photographer's shop, and it was all a lie.

As Mary is pronounced Andy's wife, Andy, with twinkling eyes, introduces the original of the picture in the locket—Big Jim Sullivan.

NESTOR.

BUSTED HEARTS AND BUTTERMILK (One Reel—Dec. 31).—Sheesa Bear, the queen of the Slums, ruled the underworld. She grew very temperamental and deciding to masquerade as Miss Cauliflower, moved into society for some easy cash. Percival Pyface and his wife, pillars of society, were the victims of her wiles. The neglected wife becomes jealous of her enchanted husband. "Percival Pyface, all is over between us, but don't forget the alimony," cried the despairing wife when she found her husband in the embrace of the designing woman.

Time has elapsed, and while the unfaithful husband, still under the spell of the vampire, is dissipating his young life in strong buttermilk, the unhappy wife resorts to gambling—solitaire. The landlord comes for the rent, but the poverty-stricken woman had lavished it all on a pound of sugar. Her husband finally deserts the vampire and goes to his wife's rescue, but finding her out, he leaves money for her support and that of their offspring. She pays the rent, but believing her husband still unfaithful, resorts to a cruel fate. But the vampire finds the despairing wife and takes her to her rendezvous. But the husband follows and rescues his wife and child in the nick of time, spurning the vampire, who picks his best friend for her next victim. hearts finally forsook their papas and went canoeing. They suddenly found themselves in Hula-land, surrounded by Hickydoolas. The Hicky King took a sudden flight into Little Spring Fever's heart.

The King commanded Little Spring Fever to become his bride, but she was obdurate and would not consent, so the King grew revengeful and ordered Spareribs cooked, baked and served on a platter.

The object of her love was tied to a tree, but Little Spring Fever uprooted the tree and carried her lover away from the mob, but they were followed, and down the side of a steep mountain went the Hula jitney. This almost broke the lover's heart, so he parachuted down the mountain after her. They were a tough bunch, and as hard to get rid of as the smallpox, but the determined pair gave them the slip, and awoke on the knees of their papas.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

THE MYSTERY SHIP (Episode No. 6—"Treachery"—Two Parts—Jan. 5).—The cast: Miles Gaston, Jr. (Ben Wilson); Betty Lee (Neva Gerber); Jack Fay (Kingsley Benedict); Harry Russell (Duke Worne). Directed by Harry Harvey. Written by Karl R. Coolidge.

The natives toss Betty into the crater, but she is brought safely from it by the Mystery Man, before whom the natives flee in terror. Miles and Jack rush up, but can find no trace of Betty. Some distance away they are amazed to find her just coming out of a faint.

Harry Russell, in the meantime, having located the treasure, schemes with his sailors, and the treasure chest is removed to the yacht. The natives capture Betty's aunt and toss her over a high cliff, but she is rescued by Miles, who then proposes to Betty that they seek the treasure together. She agrees to this, but when they proceed to the sacred temple they find the treasure gone, and see the yacht going out to sea. The Mystery Man, however, sends a wireless to a passing steamship, which then proceeds to the uncharted island and rescues Miles, Betty and the others.

Back in Los Angeles, Harry arranges with a crook known as "The Spider," to place the treasure chest in the steel room of his headquarters. But that afternoon the treasure is removed by some one who cuts into the steel room with a flaming torch. Reading that a reception is to be given that night in honor of Betty, Miles and Jack; Harry and "The Spider" plan to capture them and force them to tell where the treasure is hidden, fully believing that they were the ones who removed it from the steel vault. The episode closes with an automobile chase, the crooks having managed to entice Betty from the reception. Miles and Jack, suspecting treachery, have followed them in an automobile, and an automobile, full of crooks, are following them. Several crooks jump from their machine into Miles', and in the end Betty, Miles and Jack are captives of the crooks.

THE RED ACE (Episode No. 12—"Overboard"—Two Parts—Jan. 5).—The cast: Virginia Dixon (Maria Walcamp); Sergeant Winthrop (Lawrence Peyton); Dr. Hirtzman (Harry Archer); Steele Heffern (Chas. Brindley); Bertha Schweir (Nellie Allen).

It was a thousand to one shot, but it succeeded, and Virginia and Winthrop made the leap across the blown-up bridge in safety. The delay had enabled Hirtzman's party to reach the vessel and it got under way directly. As Virginia dashed up, Winthrop saw there was only one chance. They always stop for the cry "Man overboard." Virginia put on all steam, and dashed over the edge of the dock into the ocean. Then Virginia and Winthrop are rescued by the outgoing steamer and Hirtzman and associates note their presence with dismay. Winthrop satisfies the captain and gets dry clothes.

Steele writes Winthrop a note asking for a truce of twenty-four hours while the voyage lasts, otherwise he will throw the platinum overboard. Virginia agrees, but she and Winthrop file a message to the inspector to meet the vessel at San Francisco and take Hirtzman's crowd in custody. The plotters learn of the message, bribe the operator to destroy it and plan to get rid of their pursuers.

Leaving Virginia that night, Winthrop is attacked by Steele and another spy. He is about to be thrown overboard when Virginia, hearing the struggle, comes to the rescue. One of the men is thrown overboard, while Steele is followed to the stateroom. Bertha, seeing her companions worsted, hurries to the cabin, tells Hirtzman, and he is about to throw the precious metal overboard.

HEARST-PATHE NEWS NO. 103 (Dec. 22).

San Diego, Cal.—The contest for football honors between army and navy waxes keen as the local Jackies meet Utah's soldier boys. Subtitles: Joy reigns in the sailors' stand as their team holds the army champions to a tie score, 3-3. It's Navy Day with a big N.

Lincoln Mass.—Cut a cord—is the slogan of the New England, and fuel savers who seek to relieve the coal scarcity by the use of wood. Subtitles: A cord of hard wood is equal to a ton of coal in heat value. The women lend a helping hand.

Weehawken, N. J.—Seventeen people are injured when a speeding trolley car, getting beyond control, jumps the tracks and overturns. Subtitle: Many of the passengers were penned inside.

With the Stars and Stripes Abroad.—Released by the Committee on Public Information through the American Red Cross. Subtitles: The Red Cross at the front. Scores of American College men enlist in the Norton Harjes Hospital Unit in Paris. In camp. A clean shave, a hearty breakfast and then ready for duty. General Pershing arrives to bid the men Godspeed in their noble work. Off for the front, midst the cheers of the village patriarchs. Note how the roads are camouflaged to prevent detection by enemy aviators. Tireless guardians of the battlefield, they assuage war's misery and suffering. Help them "carry on" by joining the Red Cross.

Union Hill, N. J.—Another battleship finished. Powerful dreadnought of the latest type, built of "massive snow," is ready for launching. Subtitles: Amateur sculptors depict world-war characters in snow. The British Lion. A familiar face.

Washington, D. C.—Colonel E. M. House, head of America's envoys to the Allied Council, who brings back a message of confidence in Democracy's victory. Subtitle: Off to the White House to report to President Wilson on the activities of the Council.

New York City.—Keep the trench fires burning. New York University students utilize old newspapers to make trench candles for the "Boys." Subtitles: The strips of paper are rolled tight and then dipped into paraffin. Every little bit helps.

Camp Grant, Ill.—Target practice is held very often at National Army Camps, for Uncle Sam wants every soldier to be a sharpshooter. Subtitles: They have their eye on "Old Fritz." The "chow-guns," too, have established an excellent record.

THE HIDDEN HAND (Episode No. 7—"The Fire Trap"—Two Parts—Jan. 6).—The cast: Doris Whitney (Doris Kenyon); Doctor Scarley (Sheldon Lewis); Verda Crane (Arline Pretty); Jack Ramsey (Mahlon Hamilton); the Hidden Hand (???).

Doris has been captured by the Hidden Hand and his henchmen and is suspended over a bed of boiling lime. Ramsey starts to open the door which will release the rope by which Doris is suspended and allow her to be burned to death. His intuition warns him it is a trap. Instead of entering by the door he smashes in a window and jumps into the room. The Hidden Hand, not to be foiled, rushes to the door and opens it, releasing the rope that sustains Doris. Ramsey grasps the girl just as she is about to drop into the lime, and routes the Hidden Hand and his henchmen after a vigorous struggle. Detective Flatt, who has obtained evidence that Scarley is stealing from the estate, instead of arresting the physician, combines with him to beat Ramsey on the case.

Doris returns to her home with Ramsey, and is talking with him in her living room. Verda sees them put the packet into the safe. Detective Flatt, walking in the woods of the estate, is attacked by the Hidden Hand and his henchmen. Flatt overcomes them and takes the locket from the Hidden Hand's pocket. He goes to the Whitney home anxious to settle the question of who is the girl of the prophecy by opening the packet with the locket. Doris and Ramsey are in the garden but Flatt finds Verda in the house. She tells him that the packet is in the safe. Flatt knows the combination and secures the packet. He goes to his room.

Verda tells the Hidden Hand that Flatt has both the packet and the locket. The Hidden Hand climps up to Flatt's room and enters through the window. He overpowers Flatt with the deadly gas from his claw and secures the locket and the packet. Flatt had opened the locket and examined the hand-print and before the Hidden Hand had entered had taken one of the jewels from the locket, so that it would not open the packet.

Doris and Ramsey enter the house and find Scarley and Abner Whitney before the open safe. They learn that Flatt had taken the packet. As they are talking the announcer from Flatt's room rings and Doris, Ramsey, Scarley and Abner go to investigate. They find Flatt dead on the floor in his room. Ramsey reconstructs the scene after finding the finger prints of the Hidden Hand on the window sill. An overturned hourglass caused the bell to summon the butler, and suspicion of Flatt's death points to Abner. Both the packet and the locket are missing, but Ramsey finds the jewel in the dead detective's hand. Verda overhears him tell Doris that the locket will not open the packet, and she warns the Hidden Hand just as he is trying to open the packet.

As part of a plot Verda is kidnapped by the Hidden Hand and his henchmen, Doris and Ramsey witness the capture and follow the car, in which Verda is carried away, in their roadster. The Hidden Hand takes Verda into a deserted house, and Doris and Ramsey enter after them.

As Doris and Ramsey are mounting the stairs the Hidden Hand releases a lever, which throws them into a pit under the stairway. As they are seeking for means of escaping, the Hidden Hands turns another lever and long tongues of flames shoot out from the wall and up from the floor, getting ever closer and closer to Ramsey and Doris.

The Hidden Hand goes to a glass trap-door to the pit to gloat over his victims. He sees Ramsey, who has secured a brick, about to throw it through this trap-door. Concealing himself he sees the brick thrown through the trap-door, breaking the glass, and sees Ramsey grasp the floor at the side of this trap-door, pull himself and then, hanging by his knees, lower his body to pull Doris to safety. Realizing that his victims are about to escape him, he starts to attack them as they hang in this precarious position.

THE EIGHTH ANNUAL ROUND-UP—PENDLETON, ORE. (Three Parts—Dec. 30).—In the picture are shown such thrillers as broncho busting, wild horse racing, bull-dogging steers, horse breaking by some of the famous cowgirls of the West, squaw races, roping cattle and riding them. The observer soon becomes conscious of the great danger to life and limb that these contests impose. There are several instances where men and girls are thrown so violently to the ground before the camera that they lie senseless and are taken away to the hospital.

In the bucking horse contests there is keen competition since the championship of the world is involved. One notes that there are many different kinds of bucking. Some horses at once rear, prance around on their hind legs and fall backward. Some jump around the arena stiff legged. Others pitch violently with a rocking chair motion. Still others run at full speed and then suddenly come to a stop, frequently flinging their riders over their heads.

Most difficult of all the sports is bull-dogging. In this the cowboy races after the running steer and throws himself from his horse to the back of the steer while going at full speed, seizing at the same time the horns of the animal. There comes a contest of strength. Finally, if he is lucky, by twisting the neck of the steer, the man gets him down and they go in a heap together. Then comes another struggle while the cowboy endeavors to twist the steer's nose around and upward so that he can seize the beast by the upper lip with his teeth and hold him securely enough to release and raise his hands as a sign of victory.

There is much that is exciting and dangerous about a wild horse race, and there is considerable comedy as well. When the rider has succeeded in mounting his horse, which, by the way, has never been ridden before, and has been able to stay on, it is laughable to see the horse refuse to go in the direction in which the race is being run, but turn around and race the other way. Barely one rider in fifty succeeds in making his horse go around the track the right way without being unhorsed. His competitors, most of them, have been thrown so violently that one wonders what manner of men are these that can have such falls and live. Sometimes the horses charge the fence with their riders and break their way through in a shower of timbers.

PARAMOUNT PICTURES CORP.

TAMING TARGET CENTER (Two Parts—Dec. 30—Mack Sennet Comedy).—The cast: The New Sheriff (Polly Moran); the Old Sheriff (Ben Turpin); the Cafe Proprietor (Tom Kennedy); His Leading Vampire (Gonda Durand).

Target Center is a rather sleepy little town—that is until Polly arrives—and Ben has been a good sheriff, especially when nothing else was going on. The village jail made a most satisfactory chicken roost and all was to the merry.

This was all changed, however, when Polly arrived. She had planned to marry Ben and came to pay his folks a visit. The time she had picked to arrive wasn't the quietest in the history of Target Center by any means, for some of the inhabitants had planned a jolly little riot—but they didn't know it was a riot until after Polly had taken a hand, when the riot became a rout—and the jail was filled with lodgers, not chickens this time.

Meantime Polly had discovered that Ben was no more than a coward, a fact which certainly didn't make a hit with her. The breach was widened by Target Center's leading vampire, Gonda Durand, although it wasn't Ben's fault. As so often happens, circumstantial evidence proved his complete undoing. Caught by Polly herself and Tom Kennedy, the cafe proprietor, apparently in the very act of having a comradely drink with "that terrible vamp," he tries to make his escape by hiding under a barrel—but without success.

Next comes a tangle which implicates Polly, the cafe proprietor, the parson, a couple of vampires and many others, leading up to a certain Red Letter Day when Target Center donned its best suit and all its Sunday best and went to church for the first time in all its lurid existense.

Better Projection

means pleased patrons; pleased patrons mean increased profits.

Are you always satisfied with the results you get on the screen? Does your light flicker? Any trouble keeping it focused? Do your dense films always come up clear and bright? How about the colored ones?

You've been using alternating current. Perhaps it's the only kind available in your town. Then change it over to direct current with a

Westinghouse-Cooper Hewitt Rectifier Outfit

Direct current doesn't flicker. It's easier to keep in focus because one of the carbons burns very slowly. These Rectifier Outfits give complete regulation of light for the dense and colored films. Operation is simple and noiseless, and your current will cost less than it does now.

SECRETARY

THE undersigned committee of the Allied Exhibitors' Organizations of America elected by the Joint Conventions of all Exhibitors' Organizations, held at Washington, D. C., December 11th and 12th, hereby request the fullest co-operation and assistance of every motion picture exhibitor in America.

We are charged with the duty of gathering the exact and absolute truth of how the war tax is affecting every motion picture theatre, with a view of securing through united effort a readjustment of the war excise taxes on motion picture theatres and film for presentation to Congress.

Therefore we respectfully request each and every exhibitor to fill out the following blank, giving the full facts and figures available, the experience of each theatre, and forward immediately by mail to:

FRANK REMBUSCH,
Secretary, Allied Exhibitors' Legislative Committee,
407 Indiana Trust Building, Indianapolis, Ind.

How does the business of your theatre for the month of November, 1916, compare with the month of November, 1917?

.....

Have you suffered a comparative loss? and to what do you attribute same?

.....

DO IT NOW!

Did the war tax affect your business? and to what extent?

.....

General remarks: .....

.....

Your answer will be doubly effective if you send it immediately.
A letter of explanation will be very acceptable.

1604 Broadway, New York City.

Dear Mr. Hallberg:-

Three years ago you equipped our theatre with a complete outfit - two Powers 6-A projecting machines which I am pleased to state have given us good service and are still in good condition. Nevertheless, I want to be up to date and I herewith place my order for two more Powers machines, latest type, and I am willing to pay the regular price - although I have been offered two complete projection machines from other manufacturers without charge. The reason I prefer the Powers machine is that I have a 165½ foot throw, and the size of my picture is 16½ x 20½', on a plaster wall, and I use only 45 to 50 amperes - and have perfect projection. Please let me know when you will be able to install the new machines.

Very truly yours,

CLAREMONT THEATRE,

"The PRICE of a GOOD TIME"

it's a Lois Weber Production

IN plain, commercial English—what's the reason for the instant and overwhelming success of this play?

Because every man and woman knows long before they come to your box-office little Linnie's tremendous temptations, dangers, hunger for a good time and pretty clothes.

They know instinctively that only tragedy can result—and they must have that Big Thrill!

WHY do the crowds go away advertising it for you?

Because Lois Weber—the Belasco of the Screen—has created with Mildred Harris a true, human, lovable character, essentially innocent, just as your audience wants her to be.

Put everything else aside till you've booked this tremendous success to run at least twice as long as you ever ran a picture before. You need every cent of the money this winner will draw for you right now.

Mary Garden in "Thais" Draws New Audiences into Theatres

GOLDWYN'S presentation of the famous prima donna for the first time on the screen has proved, as we knew it would, a master-stroke for the box-offices of the nation. We knew that Mary Garden in "Thais" would be the sensation that the newspapers now proclaim her to be, but even we in our enthusiasm had underestimated this wonderful star's drawing power.

Needing patronage, as all amusement enterprises do at this moment, your surest way to increase receipts is by booking Mary Garden in "Thais." Here you find the verification of these statements:

BOSTON: The Globe: Men and women rarely, if ever, seen in motion pictures houses have flocked to the Boston Theatre to see the remarkably notable Goldwyn production, Mary Garden in "Thais." Patrons have swamped this theatre all week. Boston Post: Mary Garden's popularity is drawing capacity audiences. Boston Herald: One look at the long lines waiting outside the Boston Theatre gives you proof of Mary Garden's great success in motion pictures.

NEW YORK: Evening Sun: Mary Garden in "Thais" is the acme of photoplay perfection. Morning Sun: Tremendous assemblages are greeting Mary Garden in "Thais" at the Strand this week. N. Y. Tribune: Goldwyn's presentatation of Mary Garden in "Thais" is magnificent beyond one's fondest dreams. Miss Garden is a beautiful, sensuous priestess of passion. N. Y. Times: "Thais" is one of the greatest and finest films of the year. Evening Mail: Mary Garden in "Thais" is a joy to behold.

BALTIMORE: The American: Mary Garden in "Thais" is the year's most memorable production. Miss Garden is a revolutionary artist in the drama of silence. Goldwyn is to be congratulated for bringing her to the screen.

Goldwyn Pictures

Book This Production Lauded By the Best Brains of the Nation

HERE is one truth that can never be denied: The critics of one or two cities occasionally may be wrong in their judgments but there never has been a time when the critical judgment of the nation was wrong. Goldwyn's presentation of Mary Garden in "Thais" is approved without one dissenting opinion in every section of North America.

These tremendous approvals should cause all exhibitors to book or increase their playing time for the assured attraction that will fill their houses to capacity.

CHICAGO: Evening Post: Mary Garden in "Thais" is an artistic triumph that will thrill the picture audiences of the world. Miss Garden is magnificent. The Examiner: Emphatically a picture that all the world is hungry to see. The Tribune: Permit this critic to assert that Mary Garden's form divine is the sensational hit of Goldwyn's "Thais." The Herald: Mary Garden justifies the Goldwyn faith in her screen art. A picture of gorgeous splendor.

CLEVELAND: The Plain Dealer: At The Standard Mary Garden in "Thais" besides drawing the customary big attendance has broken all house records and also attracted a patronage that usually never sets foot in motion picture theatres. The Leader: Goldwyn's "Thais" is the big sensation of the screen year. Mary Garden is wonderfully alluring.

Mary Garden in "Thais" will receive more newspaper attention in your city or town than was ever bestowed upon a screen or dramatic production in your community.

PARALTA PLAYS are being booked with an enthusiasm which justifies all my faith in this great and pleasing product. The three stars series are being received in a way that goes down to a BED-ROCK APPRECIATION of the three great artists who head the Paralta casts:

★ ★ ★ J. WARREN KERRIGAN ★ ★ ★
★ ★ ★ BESSIE BARRISCALE ★ ★ ★
★ ★ ★ HENRY B. WALTHALL ★ ★ ★

The first three PARALTA PLAYS were made known to the industry by months of intensive advertising. Today they are three signposts which mark the path of appreciation for clean, bright stories, portrayed by talent fitted and worthy of the story and Paralta Production:

A MAN'S MAN WITH J. WARREN KERRIGAN	MADAM WHO WITH BESSIE BARRISCALE	HIS ROBE OF HONOR WITH HENRY B. WALTHALL

These three plays, the first two of which are now released and the third, "His Robe of Honor," released this month, will be followed by twenty-one others; in all, eight for each star during the year. These three "star series" are worthy of any theatre in the world, and an asset to every theatre which has contracted for them.

They are available for bookings in "star series" contracts through "HODKINSON SERVICE" of the various GENERAL FILM EXCHANGES.

Are YOU in Business for Profit or

Are You Satisfied "To Hold the Bag?"

Last week we quoted from Mr. Mason of the Exhibitors Trade Review to the effect that "exhibitors are getting tired of holding the bag"—of paying $100. per day for $25.- a-day film.

The week before Tom Moore of Washington, D. C., a prominent exhibitor with eighteen houses, told you how he had cancelled ninety contracts with two companies because he was tired of paying exorbitant prices, and because he was told he must show all the pictures of those two companies to the exclusion of the pictures of all other companies. Mr. Moore told you he would not be bulldozed. And Mr. Moore booked PATHE PLAYS.

If you too have seen your film rentals climb to a point where, like Mr. Dooley of Paterson, you find you have been operating your house for rent alone, we have a message for you. Pathe Plays are quality plays, with big box-office stars, and are offered to you at a fair price, —a price at which you can surely make money. Beginning with "INNOCENT" with Fannie Ward, on January 27th, Pathe will release one of these quality features every two weeks. We tell you in all sincerity, Mr. Exhibitor, that these Pathe Plays are excellent, judged from every angle-story, star and production. They will be sold purely upon their merits as box-office attractions. We back up our confidence in them by not requiring of you an iron-clad, long-term contract. The new Pathe Plays Stars, Fannie Ward, Bessie Love, Frank Keenan, Irene Castle and Bryant Washburn, will not be made to carry the burden of poor productions.

If you are satisfied to pay big prices for pictures that surely are no better if as good, in other words to "hold the bag," then these words may fall on deaf ears. But if you are in business to make money, make us show you!

"STANDING ROOM ONLY"

Says the ROYAL THEATRE of Laredo, Tex.

"THOROUGHLY SATISFACTORY"

Says the ISIS of Denver.

"The results on the 'Painted Doll' are thoroughly satisfactory. I received more inquiries after it had been run, as to when and where it would be shown again, than on most pictures I have run during recent months."

Isis Amusement Co., Denver, Colo. per Samuel Baxter.

The RUSSIAN ART FILMS CHAVE MADE GOOD

"I played the 'Painted Doll' to standing room only. My patrons want only high class pictures. After viewing the 'Painted Doll' they were very enthusiastic in their praises of both the production and the acting of the stars. Please send me a list of all Russian Art Dramas you will release."

Royal Theatre, Laredo, Texas.

TRIANGLE

"How Does Triangle Pay the War Tax?"

Triangle is paying the war tax. It is not passing it on to the already burdened exhibitor.

The reasons "why" have been clearly stated in the trade papers and in other advertising media. We are not surprised, however, that the question is still asked, "How does Triangle pay the war tax?"

The "why" and the "how" of the matter are different problems.

Triangle believes that the government intended the tax to be paid by film manufacturers, producers and importers, and was not to be transferred to exhibitors. We believe it is "our bit" and we are glad to make any sacrifices to do our part. That is the "WHY."

Exhibitors whose confidence has made Triangle a leading factor in the industry, are entitled to know "HOW" we can afford to pay this tax. It means a large sum of money and it must come from somewhere. Triangle wants every exhibitor to know from what source this money comes.

The answer is simple and is best given by another question, "How can the people of this country afford to buy Liberty Bonds, pay increased prices for necessities, and send their sons to the battlefields?" Economy, which is the answer the American public would make to these questions, is also our answer to the tax question.

Ruin faces us if we believe the prophets. The air is full of accusation and insinuation. These clouds of dust may obscure some men's vision, but these men

are not exhibitors. Exhibitors know that Triangle prices have not been raised, that Triangle pictures are better than in the old days of individual stars and producers, and that Triangle service has set new standards for the whole industry.

Triangle did not wait for the crisis, to economize. Months ago the eye of scientific management was turned on production. The result is a dollar's worth of picture for every dollar spent, and a better dollar's worth in story, cast, settings and photography. If these things had not been done, who would have paid the bill? First, the producer—and then the exhibitor, who in turn must pass it on to the public. But, these things have been done with the result that a margin has been left out of which Triangle pays the war tax.

Months ago plans were made for a Traffic Department. Transportation waste, an enormous item in overhead, was cut to a minimum.

Triangle is also serving a large number of new exhibitors—increased business means decreased expenses. The famous Triangle pictures made by Hart and Fairbanks have been reissued. Hundreds of exhibitors are making money on these pictures because of their unusual drawing power and the reasonable prices at which they are sold.

These are only a few of the many reasons why Triangle pays the war tax.

The Triangle exchange nearest you is willing to do business with you in the same frank way.

A MESSAGE TO EXHIBITORS

For over ten years this paper has been the leading weekly in the moving picture field, the most complete, the most progressive, the most reliable source of information on every angle of the whole industry.

Its unique ability to furnish such thorough information is the result of the combined efforts of the largest and best posted staff in the trade. Including its correspondents in all the leading cities in the States and Canada and foreign countries and the staff in its three offices, over fifty people labor every week to make it the leading paper in this field and one of the best trade papers in the world.

It represents the whole industry and is not the mouthpiece or organ of any individual or group or trade organization. It is the real exhibitor's paper, always independent and free from all trade connections or entangling alliances, is not subsidized and is not subsidizing any section in the trade.

What it has done is the surest criterion of what it will do. It was founded and has been conducted on right business principles and has always stood for the best interests of the whole industry. It has secured and retains the esteem and respect of all the prominent men in every branch of the trade.

It is worth many times its cost to every one interested in the moving picture field, no matter what he may pay for other less known publications. We believe it will prove a big saving in time and money for every exhibitor to continue his allegiance to this paper or to begin now if not already on our subscription list.

With many sincere thanks to friends and readers everywhere for their confidence and co-operation during the past ten years and trusting to merit a continuation of these relations to an even greater extent in the future, we remain

Respectfully,

MOVING PICTURE WORLD.

GENERAL FILM COMPANY.

Making It Pay

IN its business aspect the motion picture industry has just made an evolution. Throughout the trade there is a stir over the recent big initiative in merchandising reform profitably taken by a brilliant distributor in co-operation with a great exchange system.

W. W. Hodkinson, distributor of the Paralta Plays, adopted the splendid facilities of the General Film Company as the mechanism of his service to the exhibitor.

The arrangement, as Mr. Hodkinson believed it would, proved a huge success.

In less than three weeks of operation under the mutually advantageous method, the Paralta Plays, the highest grade of picture product existing, has found its market without waste, without delay, without circumlocution. In less than three weeks Paralta Plays, as distributed intensively by Mr. Hodkinson through General Film exchanges, have gained a series of most impressive first run bookings over the country.

All this heralds the survival of real business principles in the industry. It is not only complimentary to the inspired choice of General Film's exchanges by Mr. Hodkinson, but demonstrates to the industry at large the vital way to conserve marketing costs as affecting manufacturers and exhibitors alike.

The facilities which General Film Company has furnished Mr. Hodkinson in his distribution of Paralta Plays, the General Film Company can furnish for any motion picture product.

No test more comprehensive nor more exacting of General Film Company facilities could be asked than the one that has been given.

General Film Company is a modern specialized organization. It comprises the last word in motion picture exchange machinery. Its exchanges are at the service of the worth while product that seeks a logical, economical, efficient route to the exhibitor.

Very truly,

GENERAL FILM COMPANY (Inc.)

Facts and Comments

WHEN it comes to argument on the question, we simply cannot help standing up for the moving picture. It is primarily the working people's recreation, entertainment and needed relaxation because the cleanest, most wholesome and about the only one within their reach. True, the aggregate spent on pictures is large, but consider how many make up this total. A season's Grand Opera in New York, within the reach of and furnishing enjoyment and pleasure to comparatively a few thousand people, will make the year's expenditure of the millions in several states for moving pictures look like thirty cents. Again, are the majority of patrons of the higher priced entertainment in need of relaxation from eight or more hours of monotonous work and the daily grind for existence? Hardly. This will suggest scores of other arguments on the subject, but need we say more?

WE are trying to sell War Savings Stamps to raise $2,000,000,000 for the Government and before the winter is over we will be asked to float another Liberty Loan of two or three times that amount. How can we do these things unless we have plenty of work for all, with good wages, with shopkeepers busy, factories running and business normal?" This is the question that a writer asks in a recent issue of Leslie's Weekly. The answer is obvious and right here we want to say that this industry is doing its part. Also kindly do not forget that it provides the wherewithal to quite a large army of workers and has done so for several years.

* * *

WAR conditions are teaching us many things, many lessons that we trust will prove beneficial. If the noisome, spendthrift, extravagant ten per cent. of our people will be taught thereby to live a saner, more wholesome life, it will not necessarily mean a loss of trade or disrupting of business, which would be a calamity. It may be made to mean, however, a better share of the necessaries and a few of the comforts to a much larger proportion of our people. If, in their grapple with war problems, taxes, food distribution, wages, etc., our legislators can evolve a condition that will mean a more equable distribution of the ordinary comforts and necessities and a few of the pleasures of life, surely the country will be a great gainer. There will be fewer, perhaps, to grudge the tired workers of the country their fifteen or twenty cent ticket for an hour's relaxation, even if it means that a small minority will have to forego, at least, a few nights of opera, roof garden suppers, etc., at, say, five to twenty dollars a throw. Why not?

SO long as the moving picture maintains its position as the best popular priced form of public entertainment and amusement will it continue to be one of the leading industries of the country? Along with all other activities, it is feeling the effects of present war preparations, taxes, etc., but it will rally more quickly than higher priced similar commodities and in fact is not suffering as much as the legitimate theater and other more expensive diversions. There is nothing else to take its place and nothing will, unless picture theater admissions are increased beyond the reach of the masses. Give them all you can for their dimes and they will give you all the dimes they can.

CENSORSHIP of moving pictures continues to remain the bugaboo of the industry, although it has been a somewhat dormant issue for some time. The experience of Maryland picture people for the past few months is another reminder, however, and now comes the Mayor of Los Angeles with his plea for local censorship. Not that there is any need or real benefit to be gained, bless your innocent heart, no. Just the same old issue, providing of an easy place for another useless official and an excellent opportunity to secure funds. What was in the Mayor's mind is easily seen when he so readily pointed to another city which is charging four times the price for film inspection that he proposed to charge. Exhibitors, are you educating your public against the idea through slides and your local papers and programs? It may be your turn next!

Pictures in Review—Fatalism

By Louis Reeves Harrison

MOST of them are recent releases, and some of them represent a class of picture done over and over again. Most of them are well enough made, but that is growing more and more to be a question of outlay—whether or not they should have been made is quite another matter. There is a steady demand for creditable performance on the screen, and there are producers who sincerely believe that skilled use of picture language fills all requirements without regard to what is to be said in that language. There are writers in this language, the one I am using, who handle it cleverly enough to really say something once in a while.

It is not so easy in journalism, however, to sing the same old tune all the time and get away with it, though there is an illustrious instance on record where a windjammer wrote six months on one subject, said nothing new, accomplished nothing whatever, and was proud of it. Only a limited number of us have to stand for that sort of stuff when it is printed, but think of what millions of people have to put up with in the weary old repeats of past errors. We are laughing to scorn the Kaiser's claim that God is a German in feeling and sympathy and yet handing out almost exactly the same sort of thing on the screen.

William the Hun says that God will punish his enemies for the wrong they are doing him. That is exactly the idea of a story in which the Deity dispenses the events to punish the wicked and reward the virtuous, a very desirable arrangement if it could be carried out, but, if it had, there would be no moral variety. All would be one level of virtue. We could all pass through the days and years of our allotted terms with the serenity of an oyster. Luckily for the drama there is still sin in the world.

Many who go to the picture show are comparatively poor and correspondingly kind-hearted. They take it for granted that the Deity can see ahead, know in advance that a crime is to be committed, hence it seems kind of hard on the poor fellow who is picked out to do it—how can he help himself—only to be cruelly punished in the end for helplessly serving the ends of an Omniscient Power. It is a regular stunt of production—and we are told production is the thing—to have the Divine Will at work, so that the hero may embrace the heroine at the end and the villain get all that is coming to him here as well as elsewhere.

There is a sense of justice in the audience which is liable to turn sympathy to the villain most unexpectedly. As well say the herbivorous little lamb must have been naughty because he was carried off and eaten without mint sauce by the carnivorous wolf. Photodramas of that kind may seem like true diamonds in the studio, but they do not shine on exhibition any better than a piece of glass. Like them in most respects are those stories of fatalism which have a grip on theatrical people like that of the Old-Man-of-the-Sea had on Sindbad the Sailor.

There is the baneful influence of some object, usually a jewel, which has been ruthlessly stolen from the rightful owner—how he got it does not matter. I wrote one years ago, "The Idol's Eye," so extensively copied from the little one-reeler in which it appeared, that I begin to think it must have been good. Simply change the jewel and the place it was stolen from and, lo, a new plot. To drive fatalism out of minds theatrical is to deprive them of explanation why actors prosper one season and live in hall bedrooms the rest of their lives. They hear you—that is all—when you try to reason with them on the subject.

Cinderella stories, delightful examples of predestination, encourage the idea that all goes by predetermination and nothing by heart work. The idea is that there are no causes whatever. Events simply happen. It is very pleasing to the hired girl of noble birth to realize that she need not try to do her work. She should only wait her time. The Wall Street millionaire will surely turn up in his Packard and carry her off to his Fifth avenue mansion, or his grand country estate. Then she can turn up her nose at persecutors who asked her to wash the dishes.

There is the poor young man who does not seem to get along, yet he is not a bad fellow at all—it is a shame. But why should he bother? We are not the authors of our destinies. He may have an idea of when he came into existence, but how is he to know what for? For him there is a beautiful heiress waiting. She usually inherits a great fortune from one of those rich uncles who do not seem to have anything else to do in the theatrical world than leave money. She will give it all to the nice young man in the end, so it will no longer be necessary for him to work for a living like the rest of poor ordinary mortals.

Such is production without anything to produce that is particularly calculated to increase the progress of the art, nor the popularity of moving pictures, nor their value either material or intellectural. We are expected to believe that Kaiser Wilhelm stuff, which has everything settled beforehand, all ordained by fate, even if it belittles the Almighty and destroys the order of the universe. It is production, the investiture of the being with a semblance of that being inside, but it is not a live creature and it lacks the warm blood of common sense.

Most of the people in moving picture audiences know a great deal more about the prime essentials of drama than they are credited with. Life for them is a struggle, a perpetual case of cause and effect, with hard necessity as a leading cause, and no happiness can come to them through false presentations of any kind, not even of the moralizing type. The horrible fate which overtakes the possessor of stolen goods may furnish material for a story to be told little Johnny when it is suspected that he has been hooking jam from mother's preserve closet, but, if there was any real fatality about the possession of ill-gotten gains, whether of sugar or coal, all the undertakers would be busy carrying off bodies of profiteers dropped dead in the streets.

A great element of the drama is exactly that found in the lives of common people, the struggle. Even when a man makes money they want to know how he did it. What sort of application of energy and intelligence brought the result? But it is not at all necessary to confuse the possession of money with that of happiness, the one thing for which we are all living and struggling. Creative genius, not production, can alone discriminate between the two.

Moral progress in the world is more apparent than real. In the drama we are not developing, therefore standing still, which means eventual decay, when we do not deal with conditions as they exist. The aim of dramatic action should be certain, just as surely as that action should be certain of its aim, and we are shooting into the air with stories of fatalism. The real human character is not one depending on fate. There is a state of mind involved, questions of whether the end is perceived or grossly misconceived, liberty to act and manner of action. On these depend the success or failure of the screen story, just as in the story of life itself.

Howdy Do, Mr. Exhibitor? By Sam Spedon

THE producers and distributors have decided to get better acquainted with the exhibitors, to co-operate and find out their needs, adapt themselves to conditions and get in closer touch with the fellows who show the pictures. Some of the executives of the big distributing companies have resigned their positions to go abroad among the theater managers and extend the glad hand and rub elbows with those whom they were heretofore too busy to give the attention which they sought and were denied. Other concerns are employing ex-exhibitors to meet and treat with their erstwhile business associates and give their fellow showmen the advantage of their experience and supply what their superiors lack in training and knowledge.

Things Have Changed.

We know from ten years' experience, it requires a man of tact, judgment and the human instinct of a gentleman to deal with exhibitors. Our associations with the exhibitors have taught us that they want to meet a good listener more than they do a good talker. A man who is willing to learn and not one who starts out with the assumption that he knows it all and has come to tell them what they want and not find out what they want.

Today we are dealing as a whole with a much different class of exhibitors than we did ten years ago. The old line of "bull" and the "graduated peddlers" and the "camouflaged" hold-up men won't do. Real honest-to-goodness salesmen who can deliver the goods and are not afraid to come again, are the only men in demand.

A Whole Lot to Learn.

Cultivating an intimacy with the exhibitor is one of the much neglected and finer touches of industrial advancement. In getting at it, we hope those who are visiting about the country and getting closer to facts, will not be too intent on going to the big cities and larger theaters. We hope they will go into the highways and byways and learn what is doing there. We know it will be a surprise to these seekers after knowledge and promoters of business relations. They will be surprised to find in some small towns, theaters that would do credit to larger ones In some other instances they will find houses that are only on the map, because they run themselves or are run in a haphazzard sort of way and need either better showmanship or the assistance which these itinerant promoters are expected to give.

A Better Acquaintance.

An exhibitor who has a very attractive house with a ten-piece orchestra in a small town a hundred miles or so from New York City, said: "A great many of us out-of-town exhibitors go to the city to visit the exchanges about once a month and it makes us laugh and sore the way the managers treat us. They think we are a lot of rubes. They sit at their desks and judge us by a lot of so-called exhibitors with whom they come in contact from the cheap sections of the city. They don't take time to get acquainted with us and we never get the attention and discrimination we deserve." We hope this class of exhibitor will be favored with a visit by the socially inclined representatives.

A Good Chance to Get Acquainted.

This New Year's resolution, to get better acquainted, was a splendid one for the producers and distributors to make. If it is put into practice practically, it will be a big help to the industry. It might be followed up at the combined exposition and the eastern states convention to be held at Grand Central Palace, in New York City, the week of February 2-9. Every exhibitor who can make it possible to attend ought to be there and give all the other branches a chance to make themselves known. It will be a big chance for all hands to get acquainted. Besides, it will be one of the best bets of the season in meeting everybody you know and care to know. Everybody ought to hold open house at that time.

Behind the Men Behind the Guns

THE motion picture industry has been called on to contribute its quota in winning the war, not only in taxes imposed but in devoting its screens to that end. It has responded nobly and unselfishly. While the bankers are helping to augment Government loans and investments, they are pursuing their own business and its interests correspondingly. Even they are credited with much patriotic fervor and far be it from us to detract from this complimentary recognition.

We herald the deserved commendations of the work of the Y. M. C. A. and the Red Cross, whose officers are beneficiaries of the subscribed fund. Last, but not least, come the moving picture men who, outside of a few who are benefited by the sale of films and raw stock, are never heard of excepting through an occasional "eulogy" in the trade papers.

Always Ready and Willing.

Thousands of moving picture theaters throughout the length and breadth of the land are giving their theaters for Red Cross, Y. M. C. A. and other charitable benefits. Many thousands of exhibitors are devoting their screens to the propaganda of war loans, saving stamps, food conservation and other patriotic objects, without price or compensation, besides paying their own and collecting the public admission taxes. Manufacturers are contributing many pictures to educate the people and entertain and cheer the boys at home and abroad. Notwithstanding all this display of patriotism and cooperation from the fifth largest industry, "the poor man's pastime," we cannot understand why some thoughtless but well-meaning people should consider it one of the first non-essentials to be eliminated from our indulgence, as an economic means of contributing to victory and peace. Admission prices to moving pictures are limited. We cannot do as the butcher, baker and other trades people, who, when we economize on their wares, calmly jack up the prices two or three times and make us pay dearly for our economy and necessities.

Sunday Opening Would Help.

We are aware that we are subject to the coal and transportation situation and many other unavoidable conditions that must be met in the natural course of circumstances, which make us feel that there is all the more reason for our business being conducted as in the normal order of things. Instead of curtailing our possibilities through legislation against Sunday opening we should be given every benefit within the spirit and letter of the law to keep the home fires burning and care for those who are dependent upon our business.

A Question of Service

By Edward Weitzel

IT is hardly necessary to make the assertion that no sane person attempts to offer anything for sale without knowing that the purchaser expects to receive an adequate return for his money. Also that this condition applies to moving picture trade journals. There are several other self-evident facts appertaining to the subject. Among those that may be mentioned none has broader scope than the statement that any experiment, theory or experience that tends to improve the product of the screen is the sort of service that cannot but benefit everyone financially interested in the motion picture.

The first fact that should be recognized by the manufacturers and the exhibitors is also broad in its scope: Showmanship is the watchword that must govern every move in the business of either manufacturing or exhibiting screen products, if anything in the shape of a profit is to be looked for by the producer of the picture and also by the manager of the theater that shows the picture to the public.

It makes but slight difference what the manufacturer or the exhibitor may think about this picture or that. Aside from a decent regard for the moral tone of the film, it is the Golden Rule of the amusement world to give the public what it wants. And the wider the appeal of either special feature or one-reel comedy the larger the percentage of profit to all concerned. Pictures that win the approbation of but one-half or one-third of a body of spectators, can never become financially successful. Every person present is a potential advance agent for the photoplay seen the night before—or a knocker of deadly power.

Universal appeal is the one necessary quality of all screen drama. Any one can recognize it, once the picture is unwound before a theaterful of paid spectators. The trick is to know how to tell it before this takes place, No one, as yet, has discovered the infallible method.

There are certain general rules, however, that are of service in giving a picture box office value, and the better they are understood and the more diligently the matter is probed along these lines the larger will be the balance on the credit side of the ledger. Both the manufacturer and the exhibitor experience a difficulty in the matter that is not shared by men in corresponding positions connected with the spoken stage. The producer of a spoken drama has centuries of tradition behind him, is not forced to retain the personnel of his cast to the finish, and is able, in many cases, to turn an apparent failure into a success after it has been produced, by engaging new actors and changing lines and situations before seeking a New York verdict.

The producer is also, in most cases, the man who has charge of the booking of the play, the managers of the out of town theaters being little better than janitors and bound by their contracts to take the attractions sent them. The moving picture exhibitor relies, to a large extent, on his own judgment and is influenced to some degree by the trademark on the picture and the reviews printed in the moving picture trade journals. He has many problems, large and small, to solve in connection with the running of his theater; but the most important is the ability to judge, as near as possible from the information furnished him, how the picture he contemplates booking is going to impress his public. Anything which adds to the sum of this knowledge is service he cannot afford to disregard.

The special articles that appear, from week to week, in the MOVING PICTURE WORLD are the result of an effort to apply to the moving picture, whether written in play or novel form, the laws of the drama, which belong equally to the stage and the screen and were formulated by a desire to create a reproduction of life that would sway a body of spectators as if they were one man.

This accomplished and the entire assemblage is turned into a concrete body of boosters, and becomes the moving picture theater's greatest asset.

"When the Wind Blows Hold on to Your Hat"

WHILE some of the officials of the film companies have been talking through the press of impending ruin and wreckage due to war conditions, John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, is to the fore with a declaration that the business is very well, thank you, and moreover Mr. Freuler tells why.

"Much expert advice is being offered for ostensible conditions in the motion picture industry," says Mr. Freuler. The assumption is that the industry is sick. I did not know that it was sick. In fact the film industry is much better off than this sudden uprising of the doctors would seem to imply.

"Once in a while some man who thinks he is in the film industry takes a look at his ledger and finds figures in red ink. Right away he thinks the industry is sick. It isn't. He is.

"This sort of thing is just as natural in the film trade as spring freshets are in the Missouri. The film business is not headed for perdition. The film business is doing fairly well.

"Of course there are several things the matter just now and there always will be things the matter. There will always be unwise investors who will put good money into bad projects. What I am impelled to call 'lunatic competition' is bound to arise at times. Promotions based on such factors are always certain to have their unhappy periods, but these will not spell ruin for the motion picture industry.

"The industry is working out its own salvation. It is perfectly capable of working out that salvation despite some of the handicaps I have suggested. There is nothing the matter with the industry. It is sound as a new minted dollar. To be sure the wind is blowing; but as I said in the first place—

"When the wind blows, hold on to your hat."

ROSS FILM DELIVERY LOSES FILM.

The Ross Film Delivery of New York City informs the Moving Picture World that one of its motor delivery machines was stolen on December 27 while standing on 48th street between Broadway and Seventh avenue. The machine has since been found, but not the reels of film which it contained at the time. Mr. Ross enumerates the following reels as having been stolen:

TRIANGLE FILM COMPANY.—Keystone Comedy, two reels; "Ten of Diamonds," five reels; "A Fallen Star," one reel.
WORLD FILM CORPORATION.—"Divorce Game," five reels.
GEO. KLEINE.—"Truant Lord," eight rels.
FAMOUS PLAYERS EXCHANGE.—"Antics of Ann," five reels; "Silks and Satins," six reels (Sherry's Copy); "A Comedy," one reel; "Who's No. 1?" Episode No. 7, two reels.
PATHE'S EXCHANGE (NEWARK BRANCH).—"Fatal Ring," No. 13, two reels.
NEW JERSEY METRO FILM COMPANY.—"The Patriot," one reel. Also one reel showing the carnival at Keyport, N. J.

The internal revenue department has notified all exhibitors who have not made their admission tax returns that they must set them aside in a separate fund or bank account, to be paid to the government when it calls upon them for the back taxes. We understand that report blanks have not been supplied to some exhibitors.

New Line-Up at Universal

Nineteen-Eighteen Brings Promotions and Changes of Duties to Several Deserving Workers at Headquarters.

AN ANNOUNCEMENT coming from the home offices of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company reveals a number of important changes in the duties of several of the principals of the office staff. Beginning at the top Carl Laemmle adds the duties of director-general to those of president, which is said to mean that be becomes the de facto general manager of the Universal Company, in which position he calls to his aid C. H. MacGowan, who becomes assistant to the director-general. Mr. MacGowan formerly was auditor of the company.

Joe Brandt, formerly general manager, has been promoted to the important position of general sales manager, with jurisdiction over the world-wide activities of the Universal sales forces, with the added duties of assistant treasurer.

E. H. Goldstein was appointed to take complete charge of merging the various New York City exchanges of the Universal, the Bluebird, the Longacre (Alice Howell comedies) companies into one large unit, occupying the entire seventh floor of the Mecca Building at 1600 Broadway.

"The advancement of Joe Brandt is simply a reward of merit," said Mr. Laemmle after the meeting of the Board of Directors. "It is the result of long and loyal service. Away back in the days of the old Imp company I took Mr. Brandt from the Dramatic Mirror and made him my private secretary. He continued as such after the Universal was formed. In this capacity he had splendid opportunities to learn every branch of the business, and he made the most of them. Shortly after the Universal was formed he became advertising manager, and from that he has advanced from time to time until he became general manager.

"Now that we are contemplating revolutionary changes and improvements in our sales systems, not only in this country, but in foreign lands, I have again called on Mr. Brandt to take up a more important work than he has ever had before.

"Mr. Goldstein and Mr. MacGowan are also given recognition for splendid and faithful service. Both have been with the company a number of years, working their way up from minor positions to positions of trust and importance."

SIXTY-ONE PATHE MEN IN UNIFORM.

Sixty-one employees of Pathe Exchange are now in uniform and actively fighting for World Democracy, while the whole organization has been congratulated on its work as a distributor of Official War Films. An additional number is likely to be added to the present list and of course the House of Pathe in foreign countries has many more swelling the total of Pathe fighters for freedom to a very large one.

The sixty-one Americans are: Walter Drake, J. Cunningham, Michael Carroll, Andrew Golitko, Jack Schaeffer, Arthur Hile, Frederik Hansen, Ralph Wade, Fr. H. Christoph, Oscar Helwig, J. C. Reynolds, Jacques Meyer, Felix Slatosky, Edward R. Paul, Fred Ford, Ray Libby, W. S. Morse, C. D. Foster, C. H. Wortman, Geo. W. Chappel, James M. Curran, Howard Wilson, William Sullivan, Walter F. Peacock, Geo. L. Hanes, Irving Rauchwerk, R. E. Walker, C. M. Seipel, Lee Wentz, Cicero Alexander, B. E. Loper, Jr., Geo. Carney, Albert Friedland, Arthur Gray, James H. Cuniff, Manferd Wiman, Harold Goodemote, J. S. Cowan, George Farrow, Fritz Bierman, Frank Olsen, H. Adamson, Clinton Taafe, D. Bokee, Sidney Lencher, D. E. Carroll, Karl A. Suelke, A. Fasano, O. J. Robichek, A. Gini, A. L. Jonas, T. P. Langdon, A. C. Gottschalk, O. J. Pean, J. C Donahue, J. Rothman, James Keating, J. R. Sloan, William Bevan, L. C. Varela, E. I. Sweigert, A. E. L. Martzolf.

HIGHLY IMPORTANT TAX DECISION.

E. S. Bowman, secretary of the Automatic Ticket Selling and Cash Register Company, has just returned from Washington, where he secured a decision from the Government of interest to all exhibitors who have been making daily inquiries regarding the Government requirements for printing on admission tickets.

Mr. Bowman has just received written communication from B. C. Keith, Deputy Commissioner, Treasury Department, Washington, to the effect that moving picture exhibitors will not be required to have printed on tickets the legend, "War Tax Paid," for the reason that this applied only to those advance sale tickets, purchased prior to November 1, upon which the war tax had not been paid.

The Government in this communication states that where automatic ticket selling machines are used, the cashier cannot stamp this legend on the tickets at the time of sale, as said cashier does not handle the tickets at all, said tickets being delivered directly to the purchaser from the machine.

It will be a considerable relief to exhibitors to know that they are not required to stamp on their tickets the word, "War Tax Paid."

This is another evidence of the solicitude of the welfare of the exhibitors constantly shown by the Automatic Ticket Selling and Cash Register Company, 1731 Broadway, New York.

Walsh to Remain With Fox

Director Who Had Just Signed With Goldwyn Discovers Employer Has Option on Services.

R. A. WALSH, the able young director of many successful motion pictures, who recently signed a long-term contract with Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, will be unable to join Goldwyn because of his discovery in his contract with the Fox organization that he had given that organization a further option on his services when signing up with them last.

This discovery was made by Mr. Walsh upon the arrival in New York of papers and other effects from his Los Angeles home, and it caused him quite as much surprise as it did Goldwyn, which had entered into an agreement with him upon Mr. Walsh's assurance that he was free to deal with whoever he pleased with regard to his services. Goldwyn, upon the signing and delivery of Mr. Walsh's contract, made all arrangements for his first Goldwyn production, which was in readiness for him to start work in Fort Lee.

Mr. Walsh immediately upon the discovery of his dilemma frankly laid the matter before Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, and Mr. Goldfish, following the fixed rule of the organization not to interfere with any person holding a contract with another organization, gave Mr. Walsh his written release from his Goldwyn contract.

"It is a matter of natural regret that Goldwyn should lose the services of a successful and able director like Mr. Walsh," says Mr. Goldfish, "but at no time has Goldwyn wished to have men break their contracts with any other organization. The mistake in this case, as Mr. Walsh himself frankly says, is of his own making. He felt when he came to us that he was free to dispose of his services in any manner he desired, but upon a reading of his contract when received from Los Angeles, both he and his representatives reached the conclusion that the Fox organization had a valid claim and right to his services upon the exercise of the option in the previously made contract."

EXPOSITION PLANS PROGRESSING.

Cooperation from many sources is making the outlook for the forthcoming Motion Picture Exposition most encouraging. This exposition, which is to be thoroughly representative of the huge industry, is to be held in Grand Central Palace, February 2-10, under the auspices of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, and these associations are receiving the support of entire sales organizations of large film companies who are to exhibit. These sales staffs have been set to work boosting the show systematically. Triangle, Pathe and others are doing their utmost, the Triangle salesmen being active with a "see us at the Show" campaign.

J. A. Berst, vice president and general manager of Pathe, says that this meeting of the public, the exhibitors and the manufacturer will be conducive of benefit to the entire industry. "Pathe will be properly represented at the exposition," said Mr. Berst.

LIEUT. R. HENDERSON BLAND IN FRANCE.

A holiday card from Lieutenant R. Henderson Bland, Thirteenth Gloucestershire, B. E. F., in France, brings the welcome news that the English actor was up to December 16 still in the land of the living. Lieutenant Bland joined the colors about two years ago, closing his engagement in this country as Lord Inglehart in "Kitty Mackay" and returning home for that purpose. It is a long time since the lieutenant has been heard from, and his friends have been anxious as to his welfare. The lieutenant is best known to photoplaygoers for his remarkable portrayal of the Christ in Kalem's "From the Manger to the Cross."

BRADLEY BARKER IN MARKOVA SUBJECT.

Bradley Barker has returned to the William Fox forces for an important role in "A Heart's Revenge," starring Mme. Sonia Markova. This picture is among the January releases.

Felix Malitz Is Arrested

Film Man Held in $5,000 Bail, Charged with Smuggling Rubber Into Germany.

FELIX MALITZ, for years connected with the motion picture business in New York, was arrested on January 3 and held in $5,000 bail for appearance in court on January 10. Malitz is charged with having, in the fall of 1916, smuggled rubber into Germany. Arrested with him under the same charge was Adolph Engler.

Malitz, who now is general manager of the Piedmont Pictures Corporation, was at one time vice-president and general manager of Pathe. He was relieved of that position by Charles Pathe in the early days of the European war and Malitz ceased to be an employee of the company. Since that time he has been busy in a film way, among the concerns with which he was connected being the American Correspondence Film Company, the activities of which have received the attention of the authorities.

Malitz was born in Brandenburg, Germany, January 10, 1876. He was educated in the Gymnasium Zum Grauen Kloster. He early became identified with French business life and for twelve years was managing director of a French company. He was considered an expert in organization and direction.

John T. Doyle, president of Piedmont Pictures Corporation, has issued the following statement:

"In regard to various rumors and published accounts, the Piedmont Pictures Corporation, of 729 Seventh avenue, New York, wishes to state that it is purely an American concern, organized in June, 1917; that its capital interests are American and American exclusively, and that it has been engaged exclusively in the export and sale of moving picture films, moving picture accessories and supplies of all kinds. It has never had and never will have any dealings that are unpatriotic or un-American."

At Leading Picture Theaters

Programs for Week of January 6 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

"Rose of the World" at the Rivoli.

ELSIE FERGUSON had the place of honor on the second week's program at the Rivoli, the beautiful new playhouse at Broadway and 49th street, beginning Monday, January 7. She appeared in "Rose of the World," an Artcraft picture adapted from the story by Agnes and Edgerton Castle and directed by Maurice Tourneur. Many of the scenes are laid in India, which affords Mr. Rothapfel an opportunity to give the picture a special presentation, full of Oriental color and accompanied by exotic music. Wyndham Standing, Clarence Handysides, and other capital players appeared in support of the star.

Exclusive pictures of the Holy Land, taken by Sidney Olcott and the Kalem Players, formed the scenic feature of the bill. Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew lent their humorous presence to the entertainment in "Our Mutual Motor," and the Rivoli Animated Pictorial offered news events and film oddities.

Gladys Rice and Alberto Bachmann were the soloists.

"His Mother's Boy" at the Rialto.

Charles Ray in "His Mother's Boy," an Artcraft picture, produced by Thomas H. Ince, from a story by Captain Rupert Hughes, was the featured attraction at the Rialto. Unlike the lively young blood he portrayed in "The Son of His Father," Ray's role in his latest vehicle is that of an utterly unsophisticated youth from New England who goes to Centipede, Texas, to find out why his father's oil interests are not paying dividends. The things that happen to him in Centipede are not only laughable but highly exciting. Doris Lee plays the part of Centipede's sole redeeming feature, and William Elmer one of its most undesirable citizens.

"Just for Joy," a Robert C. Bruce scenic feature; "Taming Target Centre," a Mack Sennett-Paramount comedy; and Mr. Rothapfel's Animated Magazine completed the pictorial portion of the program. Rielle Dorree and Yvonne Robert were featured in a minuet to the music of "Pavanne," by Ganne. The singers were Mlle. Madeleine D'Espinoy and the Rialto Male Chorus.

"Mrs. Dane's Defense" at the Strand.

The Strand theater presented two features. Pauline Frederick in "Mrs. Dane's Defense" was the principal photodramatic attraction, and a condensed operatic version of "Carmen" headed the musical part of the program. "Mrs. Dane's Defense," by Henry Arthur Jones, was one of the most successful stage plays of its time. As a photoplay it has been greatly enhanced and abounds in intense situations. The character of Mrs. Dane is one that suits Pauline Frederick's dramatic technique to a marked degree. It is a Paramount picture.

The second of James Montgomery Flagg's comedies, "The Bride"; scenic studies in natural colors, "Animals in Midsummer"; a chapter from the Living Book of Nature, by Raymond L. Ditmars, and the Strand Topical Review were also shown.

Mary Quentay was the soloist.

"Madame Spy" at the Broadway.

"Madame Spy" was the leading attraction at the Broadway theater. This five-reel production, featuring Jack Mulhall, has a cast which includes Wardsworth Harris, Maude Emory, George Gebhart, Donna Drew, Clyde Benson and Claire DuBrey. Lee Morrison wrote the scenario, story by Harvey Gates. It has to do with love and the adventure of a college youth who becomes adept as a woman impersonator. "Vamping the Vamp," the Universal Screen Magazine, Universal Animated Weekly, and Current Events completed the program.

Eighty-first Street Theater Bill.

Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday J. Warren Kerrigan was seen at the Eighty-first Street theater in "A Man's Man." Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday Bessie Barriscale in "Madame Who" headed the list of attractions.

Paramount-Artcraft Managers in Session

Convention in New York Takes Up Matters of Distribution and Exhibitors' Problems.

UPON assuming supervision of the distribution of both Paramount and Artcraft Pictures for the new year Walter E. Greene and Al Lichtman, general manager, called a meeting in New York of the district managers of the Paramount and Artcraft exchanges. The meeting continued over the week-end and was one of the most successful and helpful conventions ever held in the Famous Players-Lasky organization. The keynote of the meeting, it developed, was one of optimism, a feeling that seemed to be shared by all the men present.

Many of the district managers attending are among the best known and most successful territorial distributors, and the large proportion of them have been associated with the Famous Players-Lasky organization since its inception. The first meetings were concerned with general distribution and a discussion of problems that affect the exhibitor and how to meet those problems with proper distribution service.

At the first meeting discussion was led by Mr. Greene, with Al Lichtman presiding. Among those present were Frederic Gage, general sales manager of Paramount; William L. Smith, C. E. Tandy, William L. Sherry, J. V. Chamberlain, James Steel, Max Goldstine, Harry Asher, Herman Wobber, A. D. Flintom, Louis Marcus, Louis E. Loeb, controller of Paramount; Carl H. Pierce, general representative, and John C. Flinn, general director of publicity and advertising.

At the conclusion of the discussion General Manager Lichtman said: "We want to congratulate the district manager and the representatives of the exchanges in placing so successfully the Paramount and Artcraft pictures under the new distributing star series policy. A work to which we are all giving our most earnest attention now is toward strengthening the bond between the exhibitor and our company, and to this end we are inviting expressions of opinion on how to improve our service."

While in New York the district managers visited many of the picture houses of the city as guests of S. L. Rothapfel, Harold Edel, Marcus A. Loew and other prominent exhibitors.

AL KAUFMAN A SECOND LIEUTENANT.

Al Kaufman, who has been studio manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation at 130 West Fifty-sixth street, New York, is now second lieutenant in the Signal Corps. Mr. Kaufman joined the corps two weeks ago, and has just received his commission. He has been directly connected with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation almost since its incorporation, and for a long time has been a very efficient manager of one of the busiest studios in the motion picture division of the Signal Corps, in which activity he brings an experience which should prove invaluable in the service of the Government.

PAUL ARLINGTON DEAD.

Paul Arlington, for the past year with the Essanay Company and who directed Max Linder, died on December 23, 1917. He is survived by a widow.

Massachusetts League Annual Meeting

Plans Made to Have Big Delegation of Boosters at New York Exposition—Election of Officers Postponed.

EXTENSIVE plans for New England's part in the big National Motion Picture Exposition in New York City, February 2 to 10, were formulated at the annual meeting of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, Massachusetts and Rhode Island Branches, which was held last week at the Quincy House, one of Boston's exclusive hotels.

The new state leagues voted to furnish a delegation of at least one hundred New England "boosters" to represent this section of the country at the great "movie" convention. These men will endeavor in every way possible to make the annual exposition a great success for the New York exhibitors.

Samuel Grant, manager of the Peerless Pictures Corporation of Boston, and assistant manager of the exposition, read a detailed report to the meeting on the successful outlook and pleaded with the members present to all be there and urge others to go.

The following members were selected to make arrangements for transportation to the Metropolis, including the securing of special cars, hotel arrangements and other details: E. R. Gregory, Dorchester; Jacob Lourie, Boston; Colonel Henry L. Kincaide, Quincy; Harry I. Wasserman, Roxbury, and Frank Howard, Boston.

According to present plans the boosters will depart from this city Tuesday afternoon at one o'clock on the Knickerbocker Express, which will arrive in New York about six o'clock. The party plans to be at the exposition on Tuesday night, Wednesday and Thursday.

Tremendous enthusiasm is being manifested in the proposed trip and it is expected that New England will carry a much larger delegation to the exposition than is already planned. Many of the wives of the exhibitors besides friends will attend the big convention.

An appeal will be sent out to film manufacturers and distributors and film supply and accessories men to accompany the delegation on its trip. They are urged to give their full and earnest support and co-operation in making the affair a huge success.

Acting President Ernest H. Horstmann presided over the meeting.

Because of the fact that several members of the league complained of receiving their notices of the meeting too late to be present, it was voted to postpone the election of officrs until January 22 at 2 p. m. in the Quincy House. It is planned to serve dinner in the parlor of the hotel at 6.15 in the evening, following the meeting.

Among the members of the league present were: President, Ernest H. Horstmann, A. Montague, Samuel Moscow, Alfred S. Black, Walter Nelson, Charles Mailley, Elmer R. Daniels, George Ramsdell, Samuel Grant, Jacob Lourie, David Lourie, M. J. Lydon, Mildred Champagne, Mrs. Marcella Ayers, Frank Howard, P. F. Lydon, E. R. Gregory, Stanley Sumner, Al. Somerby, H. A. Gilman, Leon Dadmun, Harry I. Wasserman, Frank Brown, George A. Giles and Colonel Henry L. Kincaide.

NORTHWEST EXHIBITORS INDORSE HAMLIN PLAN.

Fifty exhibitors, representative of every section of Minnesota, Wisconsin, North Dakota and South Dakota, unanimously adopted the Hamlin plan of marketing and distributing film, at the annual meeting of Associated Theaters, Inc., in Minneapolis, Dec. 17.

This organization is only six months old and has a membership of more than five hundred and fifty theaters. The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted as follows: President, Chas. W. Gates, Aberdeen, S. D.; vice-president, Wm. S. Smith, Menomonie, Wis.; treasurer, Henry P. Greene, Minneapolis, Minn.; chairman Board of Directors, H. L. Hartman, Mandan, N. D.; secretary and general manager, Thomas J. Hamlin, Minneapolis, Minn. The above mentioned officers are the board of five directors and the executive board is composed of Messrs. Gates, Greene and Hamlin.

"We are going to open one large central film exchange in Minneapolis," said General Manager Hardin, "where a master booking sheet will be used in conjunction with seven distributing and inspection stations throughout the four states.

"Operations will start about January 28, just one month ahead of our previous schedule."

BRONX CINEMA ELECTS OFFICERS.

At the regular meeting of the Cinema Exhibitors' Association, Bronx Local No. 2 M. P. E. L. of America held on December 27, the following officers were unanimously elected for the coming year: John J. Wittman, president, for his sixth consecutive term; Nathan Vinegrad, vice-president (second term); Henry Cole, executive secretary (second term); Abe Suchman, treasurer; Sam Spanier, financial secretary; Abraham B. Samuelson, three-year term as trustee, and Herman Bolte, sergeant-at-arms.

The delegates to the Allied Exhibitors' convention held at Washington, December 11 and 12, 1917, made their report, and it was well received and accepted. A banquet and installation of officers will be held at Fleischmans, Bronx, on Thursday, January 10, 1918.

TEXAS ASSOCIATION GROWING.

Membership in the Texas Amusement Men's Association keeps on growing. Recent additions to the roster have included A. W. Lilley, Hippodrome, Commerce, Tex.; Mark Cole, Dreamland, West, Tex.; Carb and Bailey, Pershing Theater, Fort Worth; Dalton and Mitchell, Majestic, Waco.

Branch Makes Appeal

Urges Michigan Exhibitors to "Jump in with Both Feet" to Build Organization.

RAY J. BRANCH, manager of the Michigan branch of the American Exhibitors' Association, has issued a very interesting letter of appeal, in which he asks the exhibitors of Michigan to jump in with both feet and cooperate with the state association to eliminate the many trade evils and to put the entire industry on a higher plane. His letter, or circular, says in part: "We are trying to build a foundation for a permanent organization of exhibitors in the state of Michigan. Our object is to create and maintain a Michigan body of exhibitors to improve and protect the business, to encourage the production and showing of high-class pictures only; to protect individual members from any unfair methods of trade and other abuses, and in general to promote the whole industry to arbitrate the differences between the members and the various branches of the industry; to assist the United States Government in times of war and other great crises, and in every way to uplift and assist in the general betterment of the whole industry.

"We have, if nothing else is never accomplished, succeeded in bringing competitors closer together for the interest of each other; we have shown each exhibitor that by applying this principle to his business he can live, and we want him to let live; we have proven very conclusively that we are not organized for the sole purpose of antagonism to any branch of the business; we have shown a way that many existing evils can be abolished and many obstacles removed from the path of success, but we still have more work ahead of us before the foundation of this wonderful building is completed.

"We are running short of material; we want more members; we want assistance from the many members that we now have. We are not promising a single thing to our prospective members aside from the fact that we will all save them at least the amount of their dues some time during the year. We urge upon you not to expect too much from us until we have time to get the organization out of the foundation stage, and then we will be in a position to start. We want you to do your share in the promotion of this permanent organization. Remember that we are all stockholders and should promote and assist in any way possible. Don't feel that your share has been accomplished when the dues are paid—that is but the start."

Bray Wins Interference

FOR the second time an action to nullify patents of John R. Bray on processes evolved by him for making animated cartoons has been dropped because of insufficient grounds whereon to establish a claim. The applicant was Carl F. Lederer of Rochester, N. Y. This action has the approval of the many who have realized the tremendous task that Mr. Bray set for himself when he started to work out the means for making and transferring to film animated cartoons.

John R. Bray.

Mr. Bray is the pioneer producer of animated cartoons, and it has been possible to produce them on a practical basis only because of his genius and untiring perseverance. As a matter of fact through the use of his patented processes an entirely new field of endeavor has been opened up, enabling hundreds of persons to profit thereby, and millions of theater-goers to derive enjoyment.

Recently the Bray-Hurd Process Company was formed to control the patents of J. R. Bray, and Earl Hurd, who made some later important additions to the original processes. Since the patents held by this company cover completely the means of making animated cartoons producers who have not been granted a license to use the processes are infringing, and in order to maintain its just rights this company is about to take action against all such infringers who are consciously using the processes.

Tom Moore, Goldwyn

TOM MOORE'S engagement in Goldwyn pictures goes on. First he was engaged to support Mae Marsh in the "Cinderella Man," Edward Childs Carpenter's unique play. His charm, vigor and capital restraint were so clearly evidenced in this production that he was demanded by George Loane Tucker for his next Goldwyn production, "Dodging a Million," written for Mabel Normand by Edgar Selwyn and A. M. Kennedy. Scarcely had this starring vehicle been completed than Mr. Moore was put under contract for the next Mabel Normand production.

Tom Moore.

The young leading man's success is not difficult to understand for those who have followed pictures. His noteworthy endeavors with Kalem, playing opposite Alice Joyce, attracted the notice of film fans. His ease of manner, unaffected manliness and excellent discretion in whatever role he undertakes is today as valuable an asset as it was when he began. Nor is it obscured by the presence in the same cast of players older than himself.

It is hardly necessary to enumerate the important productions in which he has played, but in "Dollars and Cents," with Ethel Clayton, Tom Moore will be remembered. Albert Payson Terhune, the author, commended him on his perfect visualization of the difficult part he essayed.

"The Lucky Moores" they call his family, for it numbers three members who have made their mark on the screen—Owen, Mat and Tom. It is a matter of dispute which of the three brothers embodies in greater degree the qualities possessed by all.

Tom Moore was born in County Meath, Ireland, about thirty miles from Dublin, and came to this country as a boy. Patrons of the good old "ten-twent'-thirt'" shows, put out by Al Woods before he hit Broadway, may remember Moore as a Jewish comedian in "Since Nellie Went Away." His first five parts on the legitimate stage landed him as a stranded thespian in five different American cities. Tom sees certain advantages in motion pictures.

Tom Moore is the husband of Alice Joyce.

LUTHER REED JOINS METRO'S SCENARIO STAFF.

Luther Reed has been added to Metro's staff of scenario writers. Mr. Reed is a well-known newspaper man and scenario writer, who has been identified with Paramount, Universal and other motion picture companies.

Mr. Reed never expected to be a screen writer. His people sent him to Columbia University to learn civil engineering. He learned the civil engineering all well enough, but while in college he became correspondent for the New York Herald, and one thing led to another. In a newspaper career that ranged from street reporting to ship news, with dramatic criticism thrown in, he "covered" the Titanic disaster, the opening of the Panama Canal, the unrest in Mexico, and other interesting news items. The progression from real thrills to those of make-believe was perhaps a natural one.

Luther Reed has his own ideas about the writing of scenarios and the cutting of film, and under the friendly supervision of Maxwell Karger, general manager of the Metro studio, he is proceeding to put them in operation.

Would Amend Film Shipping Regulations

Report of National Association Committee That Has Been Working with Bureau of Explosives

WE print herewith a letter received by Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, from W. S. Topping, chief inspector of the Bureau of Explosives. It will be found of interest by all who have to do with the shipment of film.

A sub-committee of the transportation committee of the National Association has been working for several months with the representatives of the Bureau of Explosives for the purpose of amending the present regulations so as properly to protect film in transit and safeguard the public as well. Owing to the scarcity of tin and sheet iron, occasioned by war requirements, it has been found necessary to make radical changes in the specifications.

The sub-committee of the transporation committee, which has had this matter in charge, is composed of the following: A. E. Siegel, chairman, Greater Vitagraph; Herbert S. Clark, Paramount; Allan Rock, Parmount; W. E. Atkinson, Metro; J. C. Clark, William L. Sherry; A. E. Rousseau, Pathe; J. H. Stilson, Paramount; G. J. Schaefer, World Film.

The letter is as follows:

Bureau of Explosives, New York, December 31, 1917.

F. H. Elliott, Secretary,
New York City.

Dear Sir: The experience of the Bureau of Explosives in connection with the enforcement of the Interstate Commerce Commission regulations, covering the transportation of dangerous articles other than explosives by express, and the experience of the express companies, indicates the necessity of revising the present regulations covering the packing of moving picture films. As a result of various conferences with sub-committees of your association I have prepared a draft of a proposed amendment to Paragraph 43 of the express regulations and I have included a specification for a motion picture film container and beg to submit the same herewith.

The records of the bureau show that there has been a tendency on the part of shippers of motion picture films to use cases too long; that is, they have been used beyond the time when they afford the protection required by the regulations.

In connection with the use of a telescope case there has been a tendency on the part of both exchanges and exhibitors to crowd too many reels of films in these cases, and, coupled with the fact that many reels of film are shipped without inside cases to protect them, hazardous conditions have thus been created.

In the use of telescope cases, although they may have originally been provided with web or leather straps, reports of our inspectors show that in the majority of instances these straps have outlived their usefulness and instead of being replaced by new straps have been permitted to continue in use, or have been replaced by the use of rope or string, thereby providing an insecure package for transportation purposes. My information indicates that the exhibitors are the principal offenders in this respect, and that, although cases may be in good shape when originally shipped by exchanges, on return movements by exhibitors they are not in the same shipping condition when presented for transportation.

In preparing the proposed amended regulations due consideration was given to the fact that the present condition of the metal market makes it extremely difficult for exhibitors to secure at reasonable cost a proper supply of metal cans with which to inclose individual reels of films. It is our belief that each reel of film should be properly protected by a tightly closed metal or fiber can, but at the present time we do not believe it would be reasonable to include this requirement (except when packed in outside wooden containers). It should be borne in mind, however, that when the conditions in the metal market ease up it is the intention of the Bureau of Explosives to recommend the adoption of this additional safeguard.

It will be noted that in the proposed revised regulations we have made provision for the use of wooden packing cases, complying with the Interstate Commerce Commission. Shipping Container Specification No. 19, of which I am also inclosing a copy provided that each individual reel is placed in a tightly closed inside metal container, it being the intention to make proper provision for the transportation of bulk shipments of motion picture films and also for individual reels that it may be desired to pack in outside wooden boxes. It is understood that some exhibitors now use wooden boxes, lined with metal, and they may desire to continue the use of these packages. If so full description as to the character of the box, etc., should be submitted to the Bureau of Explosives for further consideration.

It will also be noted that we are providing for the ordinary shipments of moving picture films from exchanges to exhibitors in a metal case that is lined with hard fireboard at least one-eighth inch thick or with some other equivalent insulating material, which must be approved for this purpose by the Bureau of Explosives. In view of the various kinds of insulating material outside of hard fiberboard it has been deemed desirable to afford sufficient latitude to enable manufacturers to provide satisfactory cases.

It will be further noted that hinged metal cases are provided for, but the method of fastening must be by a strong metal hasp fitting over a staple or eye bolt and provided with a permanent non-detachable catch.

With respect to the telescope case, which may be either round, square or rectangular, it will be noted that the use of a web or leather strap is to be prohibited, and the method of fastening is by the use of a strong, positive mechanical device, made of metal, and this device must be approved by the Bureau of Explosives, both as to design and construction.

It will be still further noted that it is not contemplated that these revised regulations will take effect until February 1, 1918, which means that all containers purchased subsequent to that date must comply with the new requirements, and that the present supply of shipping containers may be used until September 1, 1918, provided they are in good shipping condition and are securely closed, and that telescope cases are provided with leather or web straps. The use of rope or cord is absolutely forbidden.

It is respectfully suggested that this matter be given as wide publicity as possible and that any criticisms or objections to the proposed rule be filed at the office of the Bureau of Explosives, 30 Vesey street, New York City, not later than January 15, 1918. Due consideration will be given to all protests, and we shall also be glad to receive suggestions.

W. S. TOPPING, Assistant Chief Inspector.

The proposed Paragraph 43 and the specification for motion picture film containers are as follows:

43 (a) Motion picture films must be packed in spark-proof metal boxes or cans complying with Specification No. 32. Not more than eight reels (approximately 1,000 feet each) may be packed in one such outside container.

(b) Motion picture films may also be packed in outside wooden boxes, complying with Specification No. 19, provided each reel is placed in a tightly closed inside metal container. The gross weight of such a package must not exceed 400 pounds.

SHIPPING CONTAINER SPECIFICATION No. 32.

1. Cans or cases must be made of sheet iron not less than .02 inch thick. These cans or cases must be lined throughout with hard fiberboard at least one-eighth inch thick, or with some other equivalent insulating material approved for this purpose by the Bureau of Explosives.

2. Covers may be permanently attached to metal boxes, cases or cans by not less than two hinges, which must be securely riveted, or they may be slip covers, closely fitting. The covers must be lined with insulating material of the same character and thickness as required for the body of the container.

3. Hinged covers must fit tightly against the shoulder of the body and lap over or inside the body not less than seven-eighth inch on all sides. A strong metal hasp must fit over staple or eye bolt, and must be provided with a permanent non-detachable catch to engage in staple or eye bolt.

4. Telescope or slip covers must fit tightly against the shoulder of the body and lap down over or inside the body not less than three inchess (except that for a one-reel box the lap may be two inches). Telescope or slip covers must be secured to cans or cases by a strong, positive, mechanical device, made of metal. This device must be approved by the Bureau of Explosives, both as to design and construction.

5. Each outside metal container must be plainly marked: "Complies with I. C. C. Spec'n 32," or, if desired, this marking may be indicated by a symbol consisting of a rectangle, as follows:

I. C. C. No. 32.

The letters and figures in this symbol must be at least one-half inch high.

When offered for shipment the package must also be plainly marked "Motion Picture Films," as required by the Interstate Commerce Commission regulations for the particular article contained therein.

NOTE.—Shipping containers complying with Rule 43 (a), effective October 1, 1914, and purchased prior to February 1, 1918, may be used for the shipment of motion picture films until September 1, 1918, provided they are securely closed and in good condition, and provided further, that if fitted with telescopic covers the covers fit tightly against the shoulder of the box body. Leather or web straps, if used, must be in good condition and tightly fastened. String or rope must not be used.

Manners Goes to Court Over "Happiness"

Author Files Complaint Against Triangle Corporation and Rialto Theater.

THAT the moving picture rights to J. Hartley Manners' play entitled "Happiness," which is now playing at the Criterion theater, is to be the subject of further litigation was evidenced a few days ago when the author filed an amended complaint in the United States District Court in his suit against the Triangle Film Corporation and the Rialto Theater.

A cinema production based on the author's play was produced by the Triangle Film Corporation, but the author claims that when he sold the publication rights to the story to Dodd, Mead & Co. he reserved the moving picture and dramatic rights and consequently he demands that the film company and the exhibitors be compelled to render an accounting and be enjoined from producing and exhibiting the photoplay.

The film company acquired what was believed to be legal title to the right to produce the photoplay when the story was published and the court refused an application for a preliminary injunction until the plaintiff filed a bond to indemnify the defendants in the event that the suit was finally decided in their favor.

The plaintiff filed a bond for $5,000 and obtained a preliminary injunction and subsequently he was given an opportunity to file an amended complaint to correct certain legal defects in his original bill.

Takes Many Pictures of Legion of Death

Lieutenant Travis, with Red Cross Mission, Brings 120,000 Feet of Negative from Russian Battle Centers

AFTER exposing 120,000 feet of negative in Russia for the Red Cross and incidentally exposing his own skin to hostile artillery fire Lieutenant Norton C. Travis is back in New York. Lieutenant Travis left here March 28 last with the William B. Thompson Red Cross Mission to Russia. The thirty persons in the party reached Petrograd May 7. The personnel included doctors, nurses, engineers and social workers, one of the chief objects being an investigation of conditions in the country, with the view to lending a hand to Russia where it might be most needed. The lieutenant passed many days in the trenches, some of them in the company of the famous Battalion of Death, the women who took up arms to fight for their native land.

Lieutenant Norton C. Travis.

The party traveled from Vladivostock to Petrograd on what had been the imperial train, the Czar having been deposed after the party left New York. Lieutenant Travis spent most of his time in Petrograd, Moscow and in the Russian western trenches. The great majority of the negative used by the lieutenant was exposed in the front trenches with the women soldiers, in Petrograd and in and around the hospitals in Moscow and Archangel. In Minsk the lieutenant looked over a hospital containing 21,000 beds.

Lieutenant Travis, who is a member of the Cinema Camera Club of New York, has been doing camera work for fourteen years. He has been employed by Pathe, Fox and by Universal and has done much as a free lance. He said that all the negative he had brought back was now in the hands of Red Cross officials in Washington and that he assumed much of it in time would be shown to the public. Asked as to what facilities he found in Russia for developing his film, he said it was very well taken care of at the Pathe laboratory in Moscow.

The lieutenant photographed many prominent Russians, among them former Premier Kerensky, for whose ability the cameraman has the greatest respect. General Korniloff decorated seven of the American party with the front-trench medal, and Lieutenant Travis was one of the seven. He still wears the decoration of platinum, set with jewels and gold enamel, and bearing the insignia of the Russian Medical College. Also, in the Petrograd streets, he recognized I. W. W.'s whom he had seen in New York—the agitators who contributed to the downfall of Kerensky and seriously interfered with the plans of the Allies.

From Petrograd the lieutenant went to Minsk. Everywhere women were engaged in men's occupations. Women were doing the work of firemen, brakemen, switchmen, flagmen, conductors and cleaners; the locomotives were driven by men. For two weeks the cameraman was in the trenches with the Battalion of Death. One of the pictures reproduced herewith is of four survivors of two hundred women, and these four had been wounded. The original battalion was composed of two hundred. Afterward the corps was recruited to three thousand, a large number of whom are shown in the accompanying illustration. "Russian women have been the enthusiasts," said the lienutenant. "They have been less crushed than the men, and seem to have some patriotic feeling.

"We set out from Minsk at midnight. As we approached our objective the roar of artillery became louder. Shells began bursting about us; rifle fire sounded like the popping of firecrackers amid the larger din. From a shelter on the hill we looked down upon trench-gashed and wire-enmeshed fields, swept by searchlights.

"In the dark of four o'clock in the morning we crawled on our hands and knees down the saw-tooth zigzag of the parallel to the trenches, two hundred yards from the first-line enemy trench. We were very quiet. Overhead aeroplanes were dropping bombs—"pots," they call them—that burst with a rending flare. Guns shot at them, sending a ball of smoke high in the heavens. It was like looking at a magnificent show. I was dazed for twelve hours. In a few days, however, I stood around in the rear of the trench as unconcernedly as did the others. We soon learned we couldn't dodge the missiles. If we were going to be hit we would be hit.

"Taking pictures in the rear is more dangerous than doing so in a first-line trench. The enemy is always shelling the rear. I soon found it impossible to decide where to picture the explosion of an aeroplane bomb. The planes moved at such speed that bombs almost never fell where they were intended.

"I had painted my camera battle gray and stood its tripod on the railroad ties that constituted the floor of our trench. Sometimes rain washed down the hill and we stood in mud and water. For eighteen days I ground out 75,000 feet of pictures, my lens poked through a hole between bags of dirt larger than the rifle holes and having a range of the whole enemy front line."

The party of which the lieutenant was one had a rough time leaving the trenches. They were discovered by the German gunners and shelled. Pictures were forgotten and all made a rush for the waiting automobiles. All escaped injury, however. The return journey from Petrograd to New York took forty-one days.

Talk in Albany of Sunday Bill

Politics Will Play Strong Hand if One Is Presented—Governor Whitman a Friend of Pictures.

THE New York State Legislature may take some action on the legalizing of Sunday motion picture shows, judging from talk that is already heard about the corridors of the State Capitol. If any such legislation is attempted politics undoubtedly will play a strong hand. Assemblyman Hebron Wheeler is no longer in Albany, and even if he was, following the ignominious defeat of his bill last spring, there is little likelihood that he would again care to figure in the limelight of motion picture publicity. From conversations with many of the leading senators and assemblymen there appears to be no desire on their part to further burden the motion picture business by any footage tax or nonsensical censorship.

There remains, however, the possibility that is always a part of every session, from the man who, about to serve his first term, looks wildly about in the hope of discovering something which needs "regulating" through the introduction of a bill which will bear his signature and which will bring him to the attention of the voters in his home district. The movies and motor vehicles have had their full share of such "legislation." When there is nothing else in sight, the motion picture business and the automobile has been picked out, and bill after bill has come up and later died in committee or on the floor.

The chances are, however, that some sort of an attempt will be made this session to legalize the Sunday motion picture show in this State. The chances are, moreover, that Senator Elon R. Brown, again leader of the Senate, will be either behind such a bill or directing its course through orders. Some talk along these lines has already been heard, but whether this talk is a matter of near speculation or has foundation remains to be seen.

The Walker bill was defeated last year. Prediction was made at that time by Senators from rural sections that Sunday motion picture shows would never be legalized throughout New York State. Apparently they based their prophecy on the attitude of their constituents as judged by the number of letters which they received. There is no question but that public sentiment against the Sunday movie is gradually changing in the smaller places where they have been strongly against what might be termed a continental or open Sabbath.

There isn't a better friend of the motion picture at Albany than Governor Charles S. Whitman. He doesn't believe in taxing to death an industry which is bringing so much pleasure to the people at large and which is now doing its share for the men "over there." Governor Whitman does not think there is any need of censorship of the screen in this State at the present time. He is of the belief that the people at the head of the industry realize that their own growth and existence must come through clean intellectual pictures of the better sort, so why annoy them with pernicious legislation that hampers and kills rather than stimulates and broadens.

Thaddeus Sweet, again heading the Assembly as Speaker, is not saying anything these days one way or the other about the movies. But he is a man, like the Governor, who wants to assist rather than tear down.

Judging from comment heard in the Executive Chamber and in Senate corridors, there is no question in the mind of the Governor and others of prominence at Albany that motion picture shows are today attracting a larger and better patronage than ever before. People are conserving their resources these days. Fifteen or twenty-five cents more means more today than it did a year ago. If it can provide an excellent evening's entertainment, why should one pay more? A year or so ago, the movie was referred to in Albany as "the poor man's theater." No such appellation is heard there today, for it is attracting the rich and poor alike. Governor Whitman does not fancy pictures of the slapstick variety, but for the better type he has only words of encouragement, and in the past his action on some bills has spoken louder even than words.

If the question of legalized Sunday movies again comes before the Legislature at Albany and eventually reaches his hand for approval or veto, his action can only be guessed at, but as for censorship or further taxation they appear to be today dead issues.

Walter Greene Directs Paramount

Al. Lichtman Will Be General Manager—Both Long in Organization.

WALTER E. GREENE, president of Artcraft, who last week assumed supervision as head of the Paramount Pictures Corporation, said on the occasion of the beginning of his new duties: "I believe the year 1918 is going to be the biggest year in the history of motion pictures, and I am glad to be able to link up the possibilities for the future at the head of an organization with such splendid heritage of the past. We are approaching the new duties and problems with a spirit of optimism." The further changes in the personnel of the departmental activities of Paramount have been announced as follows: Al. Lichtman, general manager; Louis E. Loeb, controller; Frederic Gage, sales manager; C. Lang Cobb, Jr., assistant sales manager, and J. K. Burger, manager of department of exchange requisitions. John C. Flinn continues as general director of publicity and advertising.

Walter E. Greene.

Mr. Greene is a pioneer in the motion picture industry, having been identified with it for more than twelve years. He learned the picture business from the bottom, and after opening a booking office in Boston, through which the motion picture theatres of New England were supplied with attractions, he ultimately converted his exchange into a distributing centre for Famous Players pictures.

Attracted to New York as the centre of the moving picture industry, Mr. Greene affiliated himself with Paramount and soon became an important factor in the affairs of that organization. When Artcraft Pictures Corporation was organized in 1916 Mr. Greene was chosen president.

Al. Lichtman.

Al. Lichtman, Paramount's new general manager, was the first sales manager for Famous Players and remained with that organization until he founded the Alco Corporation, now known as Metro.

Mr. Lichtman has been in every activity of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation since its inception. He was general manager of Artcraft when that corporation was organized and was general sales manager of Paramount and Artcraft when they inaugurated the famous star series policy of booking.

MARSHALL NEILAN TO GO EAST.

On the completion of the next Artcraft picture, starring Mary Pickford, entitled "Amarilly of Clothes-Line Alley," Marshall Neilan, her director, will make one more film in which she will star and then go east to direct some one of the Paramount or Artcraft stars in New York.

William D. Taylor, upon Mr. Neilan's departure, will undertake the direction of the next Mary Pickford production for Artcraft.

Foreign Trade News

Possibilities of Foreign Trade

New York Evening Post Gives Extended Prospectus of Trade Expansion.

THE possibilities of the foreign trade of the United States are beyond imagination almost. The following excerpts culled from the Foreign Trade Review section of the New York Evening Post, issue of December 31, present a few angles worthy of consideration. There is also a side to the question of film exports that should be cultivated, as it will undoubtedly benefit all export trade of this country. Films of American manufacture in any foreign country will wonderfuly help to make the people of these countries understand us better and thereby should make it easier for all exporters and manufacturers to introduce their wares of all sorts. This will be true of not only the films showing commercial processes, but of films of every kind. Here again the film will be more potent than the printed page in combating the misinformation about the States and the Yankees, etc., that has been spread broadcast for the past half century, especially in the republics to the south of us. Oh, for several in this industry to realize the possibilities of our films to aid this country in her great task as the standard-bearer of democracy in the world!

The following paragraphs are cut at random from different articles in the Evening Post's excellent review of our foreign trade for 1917:

Future of United States Foreign Trade.

"The question whether the United States can hold first place in world trade when the war closes requires for its answer consideration of the fundamental basis of foreign trade," says Frederick W. Gehle, of the Merchanics and Metals National Bank. "That basis, it is quite well understood, is not merely an ability to undersell competitors. There are such important matters as quality, suitability, packing, promptness of shipments, and relation of credits between this country and those with which we endeavor to foster our relations.

"At the present time customers abroad are buying American goods because they have no choice in the matter. Will they choose to buy when, later on, their choice is made possible? The matter of preference is something we must consider seriously; customers for German goods, for English goods, and for goods of every other nation in the past learned to prefer those goods, and would have no other. It remains for us then to cultivate the world's markets so that when the day comes for us to operate again on a competitive basis we, too, will have the advantage of preference which the German and English exporters in other years counted upon so much in the selling of their goods.

"It is no little thing to count upon that in South America, and other markets which we have cultivated, our new customers have for more than three years had opportunity to thoroughly test American products and American business manners. Having had this opportunity there should be no reason why they should sever existing relations unless the American products and American manners have failed in the test. We see no evidence that this is so."

Our Exports to Brazil Show Increase of Nearly 100 Per Cent. Over 1915.

Trade between the United States and Brazil since the outbreak of the war, and especially in the past two years, has increased in volume as well as in value. The value of our exports to Brazil during the present year will show very close to a 100 per cent. increase over that of 1915, while our imports from Brazil will be more than 50 per cent. in excess of those of two years ago. In round figures the commerce between the United States and Brazil is about $220,000,000 a year at the present time as compared with about $135,000,000 in 1915. These figures are based on foreign commerce reports, issued by the United States Government for the first nine months of the present year.

Cuba's Foreign Trade at $650,000,000.

J. V. Knight observes that Cuba, one of the smallest republics in the world, and in size far inferior to many of her Occidental neighbors, today boasts of a greater volume of trade with the United States than any other Latin-American nation.

More tonnage enters and leaves the port of Havana than any other harbor in the western world, with the sole exception of New York.

Cuba imported sugar-mill machinery alone from the United States for the first ten months of this year of a value of $11,000,000, more than $5,000,000 more than for the year 1916. The value of her foreign trade this year will be more than $650,000,000.

All but 25 per cent. of Cuba's exports go to the United States, and 70 per cent. of her imports come from this country.

Since the birth of the Cuban Republic, in 1902, her foreign commerce has increased 500 per cent.

Argentina's Imports Show a Decrease.

Argentina's imports have steadily decreased, and the result is that exchange is away up to the clouds, with nothing actually in hand to bring it back to a normal state. Eighty per cent. of this republic's trade today is with the United States of America and the United Kingdom and the United States dollar, which, at par, is $1.03649 Argentine gold, stands at $.9680 Argentine gold. Compared with London there is a 10 per cent. premium; on France, 17 per cent.; on Italy, 60 per cent., and that nominal.

Trade with Peru Nearly Trebled Since 1915.

Since 1915 trade between the Republic of Peru and the United States has almost trebled in value. The latest available figures, which cover the first nine months of the present year, show that the total value of our exports to and imports from Peru were more than $47,000,000 as compared with $16,650,000 for a similar period in 1915.

While this enormous increase may be due to a small extent to the unusual circumstances brought about by the war, the real reason for it is the fact that during the past two years Peru has developed at a rate never before equaled in the history of the South American republic.

Since 1913 the exports of the United States to Peru have been steadily climbing, having risen from $4,585,000 for the first nine months of 1914 to $15,329,000 for the first nine months of the present year. A similar increase has been shown in the imports from Peru.

Commerce of Porto Rico Seven Times That of Sixteen Years Ago.

Since the American occupation of Porto Rico in 1898 commerce between that island possession and the United States has increased by 700 per cent. This has been brought about by changed political, commercial, educational and social conditions. Hayden L. Moore, Collector of Customs for the District of Porto Rico, reported the total trade of the island for 1916 as $105,682,729 as against $83,241,751 for 1915. Due to the augmented sugar production there have been proportionate increases in the last year, figures for which are not available.

Nine-tenths of all the outside trade is with the United Statts. Porto Rico is buying goods from the United States at the rate of three-quarters of a million dollars' worth every week. Its trade is worth more to the United States than that of many foreign countries, and the market is as close to New York as Topeka, Kan.

Effect of War on Film Trade

By Clarence L. Linz

Interesting Figures Supplied by Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce for Ten Months of 1917

THE effect of the war on our trade with the countries of Europe in exposed motion picture films has been quite serious, according to the figures just made available by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the Department of Commerce. For instance, American sales to Great Britain during the ten months ending with October, 1917, were about one-third less than they were during the same period of the preceding year and about 10,000,000 feet less than for the first ten months of 1915. The French business has fallen off 5,000,000 feet, and, of course, there has been no trade at all with the Central Powers. Thus it is that with the 1916 period the high water mark, totaling 136,141,137 feet valued at $6,051,031, this year the ten months show 93,054,425 feet and the value, $5,152,785. There is one satisfaction, however; these figures are considerable ahead of the ten months of 1915, when they were 60,976,486 feet valued at $3,056,720.

For the single month, October, in 1916, the figures were 7,779,105 feet valued at $479,418; 1917, 5,176,357 feet valued at $366,172. Analyzed, these figures are as follows:

	1916		1917
	Feet.	Value.	Feet.	Value.
France.	254,174	$33,567	94,083	$15,413
Italy.	1,991,661	49,309	.....	.....
United Kingdom.	1,276,011	158,840	481,886	58,434
Canada.	1,016,828	77,184	1,597,506	123,430
Newfoundland-Labrador.	123,900	3,732	107,000	1,369
Australia.	505,658	37,377	717,757	60,347
Other Countries.	2,610,873	119,409	2,178,125	107,179

During the ten month period of 1916 there was shipped to the United Kingdom 76,968,230 feet, valued at $3,406,230. This was more than double the amount of exposed film exported to the United Kingdom during the same period of the preceding year, when the figures were 36,022,397 feet, valued at $1,472,528, and more than three times as great as during the first ten months of the present year, during which we shipped 23,741,312 feet, valued at $1,853,061.

In much the same way the French purchases in this country show a decrease, although the 1917 period is more than four times as prosperous from an export point of view than the 1915 period. The month of October, 1916, found American shipments of films to France totaling 254,174 feet valued at $33,567; October, 1917, shows but 94,083 feet, valued at $15,413. The figures for the ten-month periods are: 1915, 1,965,369 feet, valued at $88,562; 1916, 14,963,075 feet, valued at $445,903, and, 1917, 9,721,633 feet, valued at $251,801.

Italy bought from the United States during the first ten months of 1915, 397,680 feet of film valued at $27,587. Those figures jumped during 1916 to incredible heights, reaching 9,690,599 feet, valued at $242,825, while during the ten-month period of the present year, a further increase, to 11,405,765 feet, valued at $280,108, took place.

Canada's purchases have been constantly jumping upward. In October, 1916, the footage amounted to 1,016,828 feet, and the value, $77,184; in October, 1917, it was 1,597,506 feet valued at $123,430. The ten-month periods show—1916, 9,423,593 feet valued at $722,390; 1916, 10,435,519 feet valued at $783,807, and, 1917, 12,667,900 feet valued at $961,271.

It requires these two countries and Newfoundland and Labrador, Australia and "all other countries," showing an advance in purchases to keep our exports from falling to even lower figures than they have. These others show as follows for the ten-month periods:

Newfoundland and Labrador—1915, 1,210,350 feet, valued at $82,112; 1916, 1,592,220 feet, valued at $74,916; 1917, 1,256,600 feet, valued at $45,808.

Australia—1915, 4,728,657 feet, valued at $338,429; 1916, 6,207,156 feet, valued at $467,724; 1917, 7,620,224 feet, valued at $522,748.

Other Countries—1915, 7,228,440 feet, valued at $325,110; 1916, 16,384,338 feet, valued at $629,626; 1917, 26,640,991 feet, valued at $1,237,988.

Increase in Raw Film Importation.

American importations of raw film stock during the month of October, 1917, show an enormous increase over our purchases abroad during the same month of last year. There are several interesting points here, for while the imports are larger than ever before, the "high cost of living" seems not to have affected this class of film.

Last October the importations into the United States of raw film totaled 6,073,516 feet valued at $92,397. The figures for October, 1916, were 1,582,601 feet, valued at $25,828. It is interesting to note, also, that our importations so far this year (ending with October) show a marked increase over a like period of the preceding two years. For the ten months ending with October, 1915, the importations of this class of material into the United States totaled 43,225,532 feet and were valued at $554,526. During the ten months' period of 1916, the footage was $31,782,927 and the value, $470,639. This year, in the ten months under consideration there was brought in, 56,744,652 feet valued at $848,919.

The effects of the war upon the European studios is reflected in the figures covering American exports of raw film. The ten months' ending with October, 1917, shows a cut in our foreign business in this line of about three-fifths as compared with the same period of 1915. Taking the month of October, 1916, and of 1917, there is but a slight difference, the figures being (October, 1916) 3,982,548 feet, valued at $108,084, and (October, 1917) 3,358,954 feet, valued at $72,454. The footage and values for the ten months' period of the several years are as follows: 1915, 124,659,022 feet, valued at $2,773,383; 1916, 57,024,143 feet, valued at $1,783,353, and, 1917, 51,459,222 feet, valued at $1,136,510.

Opportunities in Spain, Says Marion

Cinema Commissioner Declares American Manufacturers Should Distribute Film Through Their Own Spanish Offices.

THAT there is a wonderful opportunity for the rental and sale of motion picture film in Spain is attested by official information to this effect sent to George Creel, Chairman of the Committee on Public Information at Washington, by Frank J. Marion, president of the Kalem Company, who is a member of the National Cinema Commission. Chairman Creel has referred the matter to William A. Brady, who is chairman of the Motion Picture Industry's War Council and who has authorized the publication of the announcement.

Commissioner Marion is enthusiastic over the opportunity which is afforded for the showing of motion pictures in Spain. He states that agencies or branches directly owned and controlled in certain centers would make big returns, and is willing to assist any individuals or companies which desire to enter this field.

The commissioner recommends that only film men speaking Spanish should be assigned to these branches, and that films should be shipped by Spanish liners sailing from either New York or Havana. Any film companies desiring to open up negotiations should communicate direct with Frank J. Marion, commissioner of the National Cinema Commission, care of Captain Decker, United States Army Headquarters, Madrid, Spain.

The text of Commissioner Marion's cable despatch to Chairman Creel is as follows:

Secretary of the Navy. Madrid, December 8, 1917.

Creel Committee Public Information: Progress favorable. Naval attache, Eastman and Pathe Freres Company co-operating. Going to Barcelona for today, but return here; headquarters with Captain Decker. Suggest following information be given by you to trade papers or procuring firms. Marion says splendid opportunity in Spain for leading film features like Fox, sensational drama big spectacles and lively comedies; also western life. Hartwell films now distributed by agents from Barcelona, but think directly owned and controlled agencies at Coruna, Madrid, Cadiz, Barcelona, would make big money, and stocks could be shipped by Spanish liner from New York or Havana. Exchange should be in charge of film men speaking Spanish. I will gladly assist and personally agree with such campaign. Would greatly enhance my work.

MARION DECKER.

CAMPBELL WON'T BE SEEN IN PICKFORD PICTURE.

In the death recently of Eric Campbell, heavy man with Charles Chaplin, a loss was suffered not only to the forces of Chaplin, but also to the Mary Pickford company in the production of "Amarilly." Campbell, who had been loaned to the Mary Pickford organization by special arrangement with Charlie Chaplin, started work in scenes for the Pickford-Artcraft picture on the day before his death, which was occasioned by an automobile accident. Scenes in which Mr. Campbell had appeared will, of course, not be used in the production, but will be remade, with Thomas H. Wilson filling the part to have been played by Eric Campbell. So the final appearance of the big comedian on the screen was in Mutual's "The Adventurer."

Ralph E. Earle Ends Trip

Pathe Scenic Cameraman Completes Tour of Many Thousands of Miles By Motor Car.

AFTER a motor car trip of many thousands of miles, Ralph Radnor Earle, who is engaged in filming America's scenic wonders for Pathe, arrived recently in San Francisco without a single mishap to mar his record of having covered eleven of America's national parks without a breakdown or a single day lost from work. The eleven parks were Mount Lassen, Crater Lake, Ranier, Glacier Park, Rocky Mountain, Grand Canyon, Mesa Verde, Casa Grande, General Grant, Sequoia and Yosemite.

Mr. Earle is spoken of as the originator of the "See America First" motion pictures. He has been with Pathe for five years, during which time he has taken many pictures of more than ordinary interest and beauty. One of his most recent films is "Yellowstone Park," which is on the Pathe program for January 13. Another is "Ranier Park" in combitone, which will be released January 27. Mr. Earle is not only an expert cameraman, but he is also an adept at picking out the best locations for his "shots."

It is interesting to note that on his trips Mr. Earle is accompanied by his wife who, for nerve and pluck, rivals a serial star. No matter how hazardous a location is selected for his camera by Mr. Earle, Mrs. Earle is always along. She takes with her on the trips a tiny stove, coffee pot and frying pan, and as the couple is well equipped with sleeping bags and provisions they are independent of hotels and spend most of their time while on a trip in camping out.

THEODORE FRIEBUS DIES ON STAGE.

Theodore Friebus, known to serial fans for his excellent work in "Pearl of the Army," the serial in which Pearl White was starred, and in which he was one of the featured members of the cast, died December 26. Mr. Friebus was appearing in "A Tailor-Made Man" at the Cohan & Harris theater, New York City, and dropped dead from heart disease while waiting for his cue in the second act.

Mr. Friebus was 38 years old and was well-known for his work in stock companies. "Pearl of the Army" was the first picture in which he appeared. He was leading man of the stock organization at the Academy of Music for many years, and had appeared under the direction of Charles Frohman, David Belasco and Henry B. Harris. He was also well known in Boston, where he played the leads in one of the prominent stock companies.

CABANNE TO PRODUCE A PICTURE.

William Christy Cabanne, who for several months has been quietly making a careful investigation of the motion picture industry, with a view to producing his own pictures, left for Los Angeles this week, where he will produce a multiple reel feature under his own banner. His organization will be known as the William Christy Cabanne Producing Company, and is backed by practically unlimited capital.

J. L. Barnard, who launched the publicity campaign for Thomas H. Ince's "Civilization" in New York, Chicago and other cities, and who has made a thorough study of the selling as well as the producing end of the motion picture business, negotiated the organization of Mr. Cabanne's new company. He will represent Mr. Cabanne here, having this week opened offices for the new firm in the Longacre Building.

METRO HAS ENGAGED WHEELER OAKMAN.

Wheeler Oakman has signed a long-term contract with Metro Pictures Corporation to appear opposite the favorite star, Edith Storey. The first production in which he will appear is "Revenge," a screen adaptation of Edward Moffatt's story, "Hearts Steadfast," which is now in preparation at Metro's West Coast studio at Hollywood, Cal. He recently completed work in "Princess Virtue," playing opposite Mae Murray.

Mr. Oakman is one of the most popular leading men of the screen world. Among the features in which he has been identified are "The Spoilers," "The Ne'er Do Well," "The Battle of Hearts," "Micky," "Shotgun Jones," and "The Cycle of Fate." A career on the speaking stage preceded his entry into motion pictures, and he had valuable experience in stock. Miss Storey's new leading man is a native of Washington, D. C.

Small Theaters in Chicago Dwindle

Thirty-Two Closed Their Doors in 1917 and 140 Since 1914—Now 393 Houses as Against 500 in 1914, But Total Seating Capacity About the Same.

FIGURES taken from the Chicago license committee's reports from Jan. 1, 1914, till Jan. 1, 1918, show that the number of moving picture theaters in the city have been steadily diminishing, and that all the loss has been confined to houses seating 300 or less.

In 1914 there were 312 of the latter type; in 1915 there were 258; in 1916, 220, and in 1917, 204. In the last period of 1917, of the 204 small theaters remaining, only 172 took out licenses, showing a reduction of their number since 1914, up to Jan. 1, this year, of no less than 140, and that 32 closed their doors, near the close of last year.

There are now 393 picture theaters in Chicago, with a seating capacity of 220,594, as against 500 theaters in 1914, with a seating capacity of 222,750, a difference of only 2,156 seats. With several new houses of large seating capacity now in course of erection, the total seating capacity of Chicago's picture theaters will soon considerably exceed that of any other period in the past.

These figures cannot fail to impress both the producer and distributor of moving pictures. Mere surface analysis will show that the future points to a still further reduction in the number of small houses, and that means still fewer customers to book the film output. With the excessive output of films in the market at present and the demand lessening, excessive production should be regulated accordingly.

The gradual passing of small houses in the larger cities brings a feeling of sadness to the oldtimers; but they in their day drove the old store shows and still smaller theaters out of business, and evolution shows no favoritism in its silent onward march.

The Last Word on Lightless Fronts

Exhibitors Should Carefully Observe Order No. 16, Recently Sent Out By the U S. Fuel Administration, Washington, D. C.

Raymond E. Durham, chairman of the Cook County Fuel Administration committee, recently sent the following letter to Chicago Local, M. P. E. L. of America, regarding Order No. 16, governing lightless fronts of moving picture and other theaters:

"We are in receipt of specific orders from the U. S. Fuel Administration in Washington regarding the use of electric lights on Thursday and Sunday nights. We quote such order as follows:

> "Although appreciating cooperation by moving picture houses, the shortage of fuel renders necessary its conservation by eliminating superfluous lighting. We believe that any deviation from the order would result in its purpose being defeated and consequently must advise that your compliance with the terms of the order is compulsory.

"Acting upon the above, we beg to advise you that hereafter, 'lightless nights,' you will be permitted to burn no lights outside your theaters except lights in and immediately around the box office. This order will supersede all others heretofore issued, and will be effective at once.

"We call your attention to the fact that these regulations govern the burning of all lights during the day on Thursday and Sunday, as well as after sunset."

Order No. 16 went into effect throughout the country on Thursday, January 3.

Review of 1917 by Joseph Hopp, Showing the Good Work Done by Chicago Local, M. P. E. L. of A.

Following is a transcript of the review of the year 1917 and its activities as participated in by the members of Chicago Local, M. P. E. L. of A., written and sent out by President Joseph Hopp:

The attendance of meetings has on the average been far greater than that of any preceding year in the history of the League. The year has been an unusual one, owing to the many matters of direct interest that have arisen and which required close attention and fair solution.

On my assuming the office of president, the principles of "neighborhood alliance" was advocated and a committee appointed to further same. While this desirable co-operative effort did not become as general as was hoped, it nevertheless resulted in quite a number of neighborhoods carrying out the idea with splendid results.

When the bill for state censorship was before the Legislature last spring and had passed the House and then passed the Senate in amended form, and went back to the House for conference, our League stepped into the fray and through our special committee that handled the matter we succeeded in killing the bill, irrespective of the fact that certain film interests stood sponsor for the bill, apparently unmindful of the adverse influence the passing of such a bill would have on exhibitors in other states.

One of the great patriotic organizations of the United States is the "Four-Minute Men" organization, conceived in Chicago by one of its brilliant young citizens, who sought and readily received the co-operation of our League, and thus made possible this great organization.

The deposit system is a question that has received much attention. While our deposit committee did not succeed in securing the abolition of deposits from exchanges, yet they did a splendid work and it influenced some exchanges to do away with deposits while all others have since taken a very liberal position regarding same.

As a result of the splendid work of our music tax committee and with the assistance of Miss Melcher—resulting in the publication of the names of thousands of compositions that are non-taxable—we have done more than any other one agency to kill the "Society" which threatened to fasten this additional burden upon us. Hardly a month passes now that there is not a recorded desertion from the ranks of the "Society." In this work alone our League has made itself a valuable asset to each member.

Another issue that required much attention was the war tax on admission tickets. On account of the conflicting interpretation of how the law was to be applied, most of our members appealed to us for information. After much effort, we finally secured from the Collector of Internal Revenue at Washington, a clear interpretation, and same was at once communicated by mail to our members. Placards and one-sheet posters, explanatory of the tax, were furnished gratis by our League to any exhibitors who desired same.

A matter that came up and which required much thought and clear action was the 15c. reel tax imposed by distributors. This we fought vigorously and succeeded in getting the greater number of distributors in Chicago either to eliminate same or not collect it from our members. Only a few of the exchanges are still asking payment. It is safe to predict that this charge will soon fall away entirely.

The National Military Training Camp Association had a film produced which was distributed through one of the exchanges. A rental was charged in order to secure funds to aid the splendid work of this association. The distribution was gratis and thus the entire rental went to the support of the association. When a committee visited one of our League meetings, urging the use of the film, their request met with a ready response, and thus we aided this splendid work.

The by-laws of our local League were revised and a number of changes made in same that will aid very much in additionally putting the administration of the League in the hands of the entire League itself, where it belongs. As expressed from time to time at its meetings, it is our aim to continue to keep the mandatory power only in the hands of the entire League and thus carry out the ideals of democracy as far as it is possible. In this you are expected to aid by constant attendance at meetings. The changed by-laws are in keeping with progress.

A matter of great importance which has been carefully watched by the League committee having same in charge, is a proposal to raise the theater license in the city of Chicago on theaters seating 400 people and over. The proposed ordinance has been pending since last spring. After several meetings with the license committee of the City Council, we succeeded, in June, in having further consideration deferred until fall, through our desire to be fair to all owners of motion picture theaters and thus endeavor to prevent an injustice to any one. The matter was again taken up in November and a continuance was secured until the middle of December. Finding difference of opinion among exhibitors themselves as well as among members of the Council committee, we thought it best to endeavor to secure another continuance, believing in such case it would ultimately result in a schedule that would be fairer to every fair-minded person. Wholly through our efforts, another continuance was secured, thus preventing an increase of the license for a period of one year. This is a material gain and the credit belongs to our committee that had the matter in charge.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Winfield Sheehan, general manager for the Fox Film Corporation, spent three days in the city last week, and left for New York Sunday evening, Dec. 23. During his stay Mr. Sheehan opened a new office in Room 1406, City Hall Square Building, which will be devoted exclusively to the handling of the William Fox road attractions, with Frank Hurst as manager. Mr. Hurst was formerly connected with the Sherman-Elliott Company of Minneapolis, which handled the "Birth of a Nation." Mr. Hurst is now engaged in making bookings for Fox road companies for "Cleopatra," in Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa and Nebraska. Three or four companies will be routed.

Cresson Smith, who was manager of the Metro Chicago office for the past fifteen months and who, prior to that, was manager of Metro's Des Moines office for about a year, will be stationed in the Chicago office of the Fox Film Corporation as supervising manager. Mr. Smith will take charge of his new duties about Jan. 27. Lester Sturm will retain the management of the Chicago Fox office. C. W. Eckhardt, who has been in the city for the past five months re-organizing the Fox local branch office, will leave for a trip to the Coast when Mr. Smith takes charge. Mr. Eckhardt will stop over at various cities on his way, visiting the Fox local offices and on concluding his trip, will return to New York where he will be the home office representative.

Colin Campbell, dean of Selig directors, accompanied by Mrs. Campbell, arrived in the city Thursday, Dec. 26. They left on Saturday, Dec. 28, for Mrs. Campbell's home in Brantford, Ont., to spend the holidays. Mrs. Campbell will remain there for some time, but Mr. Campbell will return to Chicago shortly to consult with Mr. Selig on future productions.

Work on a "Pair of Sixes," adapted from the stage play of that name by Edward Peple, was begun Wednesday, Jan. 2, at the Essanay studios, with Taylor Holmes as the star. This special feature will be released through the George Kleine System about March 1. The next vehicle chosen by President George K. Spoor for Mr. Holmes will be "Rainbow Chasers," which has been adapted from the story by Freeman Tilden, entitled "Mr. Williams Takes a Chance," which appeared recently in the Saturday Evening Post.

Mr. Russell, owner and manager of the Bellevoire Theater, Champaign, Ill., left Thursday, Dec. 28, to join the wireless division of the navy. Mrs. Russell, his mother, is now running the theater in his place. E. E. Alger, owner of the Gem and Majestic theaters, Paxton, Ill., is another moving picture theater owner who will go to the front. He will leave Tuesday, Jan. 8, for the school of aerial observation at Fort Sill, Okla. A. M. Carrier, owner of the Avon Theater, Decatur, Ill., and a graduate of the Illinois State University in 1915, is still another patriot from moving picture theater owners' ranks who will fight for his country. He will leave shortly for the balloon school at Omaha, and will be accompanied by the manager of the Strand Theater, Decatur, who will also join the ranks of the aerial fighters.

H. M. Berman, sales manager of Jewel Productions, Inc., is at present on an extended national tour to secure actual trade conditions throughout the country. His first stop was at Cincinnati, O., where he visited nearly all the large exhibitors. He found that present conditions are not just as good as they might be, because at this section of the year it usually shows a slight depression. He states that exhibitors in that city are not worried because in past years exactly the same conditions have prevailed during the holiday season. Mr. Berman found, while conversing with exhibitors, that the war tax had not hurt the business to any great extent. At the time of writing, Mr. Berman is busy ascertaining the facts concerning trade conditions in Chicago.

The Chicago Association of Commerce, it would seem, is not exceedingly impressed by the importance of moving pictures, as was shown at a recent meeting when the members were selecting committees for the coming year. That wise body placed the moving picture among the printing industries and when objection was raised by Richard R. Nehls, manager of the American Film Company, they considered that the industry could line up with lithographers, or, if preferable, with the bookbinders and the printers. Mr. Nehls has been chairman of the photographic committee for the past year and the moving picture industry has been formerly placed under the photographic list by the association. Mr. Nehls held that the industry was of sufficient importance to have a committee all to itself or, if not, that it should at least be placed where it rightfuly belongs, under theaters. No heed, however, was paid to his suggestion.

Mr. Nehls, at the time of writing, is eagerly looking forward to Saturday night, Jan. 5, when he will be welcomed into the third degree of Masonry at Birchwood Lodge, Birchwood Hall, Rogers Park.

The Strand Theater, Evanston, was completely destroyed by fire early Sunday morning, Dec. 30. John Bokkin, the manager, is puzzled as to the origin of the fire, as there is no furnace in the building. An observer who was passing the theater shortly after the fire started, was of the opinion that it had broken out under the balcony. Evanston's Chief of Police declared that the fire must have been the work of an incendiary. The damage is placed at $45,000.

Julius F. Smeitanka, internal revenue collector in Chicago, has requested moving picture theater owners in the city and in the rural districts to flash announcements on their screens at every presentation which will assist his department in the collection of income tax assessments for 1918.

Theda Bara, the well-known star, brought suit against Major M. L. C. Funkhouser, the titular head of the Chicago censor board, for $100,000, charging slander. It is charged that Major Funkhouser made certain damaging and uncomplimentary remarks about the actress regarding the scanty attire which she wore in her impersonation of "Cleopatra." The case has been filed for trial in the superior court by Attorney Chas. P. Schwartz for the actress.

Suit also has been brought by the Fox Film Corporation against Major Funkhouser for $25,000, as damages for certain statements made concerning the "Rose of Blood." The Fox Film Corporation holds that the major stated, in the presence of others, that the government did not want his film shown, whereas it is held that the contrary is the case. This case will also be tried in the superior court with Chas. P. Schwartz as attorney for the Fox company.

About the middle of February, the Ascher Brothers, this city, will open a new theater at Rockford, Ill., which will be called the Midway. The cost of the ground and the building, which will include several stores, will be about $250,000. The Midway's seating capacity will be 2,000 and music will be furnished by a fifteen-piece orchestra and an organ. Camp Grant, near Rockford, where many thousands of soldiers seek amusement, led the Ascher Brothers to build the Midway.

On Saturday, Dec. 29, a booking combination was formed by the Ascher Bros. and Lubliner & Trinz, by which the films used in the houses on these circuits will be booked for a period of from fifty to sixty days. In addition to being used in the houses on these circuits, the bookings will be open to the Orpheum on State street, owned by Jones, Linick & Schaefer, and the Crystal theater, 2901 W. North avenue, owned by Fred and Frank Schaefer. The Academy, Waukegan, is also included on the list.

Nate Ascher states that the object of the combination is not so much for obtaining a reduced rental on the films selected as it is for securing the first run on the pictures so rented. This method of booking will lead to a great saving of time, which was formerly spent in booking films by the old method, Mr. Ascher states.

In his review of the work of the year 1917, Joseph Hopp, president, included the following supplementary paragraph regarding the "Four-Minute Men": "We bespeak for the 'Four-Minute Men' organization the hearty and close cooperation of motion picture theater owners and managers. We should work together and thus render a great patriotic service. When a 'Four-Minute' man has been assigned to your theater and it has been announced in the daily papers, then by all means allow the man to go on after he has made his appearance at your theater. If the man comes to you on a day of the week other than you prefer, then either take up the matter direct with the offices of the 'Four-Minute Men,' 120 W. Adams street, or communicate with the president of our league, and another regular day will be assigned. If the speeches are too long and go beyond the four-minute limit, or are offensive to your patrons, or are of poor quality, please report same and show no hesitancy in doing this. You will be rendering the 'Four-Minute Men' organization a real service. They want to know these things."

The Central Film Company, this city, has secured the rights to "The Frozen Warning" for Illinois, Indiana and southern Wisconsin. This production was made by the Commonwealth Pictures Corporation and features Charlotte, the well-known skater. Four road companies will be sent out on Jan. 21 by the Central Film Company to cover the territory mentioned.

Censorship Fight on Again

Mayor Postpones for Two Weeks Enforcement of Ordinance Following Meeting of Film Men.

GENERAL indignation at the action of the Los Angeles City Council in proposing a new ordinance creating a motion picture censor is voiced by managers of motion picture theaters, exchange men and producers. Several meetings have been held by exhibitors and exchangemen in reference to the proposed ordinance. A mass meeting of film men was called at the Mayor's office to protest against the new motion picture ordinance being enforced until the exhibitors had an opportunity to present their side of the argument against film censorship. A delegation of about fifty men, representing all branches of the film industry, were present. The delegation was headed by Frank Garbutt, Thomas H. Ince, J. A. Quinn, W. J. Reynolds, Harry Leonhardt and others.

In response to the appeal of the representatives of the moving picture industry Mayor Woodman announced he would defer the appointment of a censor commission for at least two weeks. The picture men contend it would be a serious hindrance to the business, and that the license fee of 25 cents a reel for inspection by the film commission would work a hardship.

Mayor Woodman declared he thought the fee reasonable, inasmuch as Chicago imposes a fee of $1 a reel for similar purposes.

"There is not going to be any change in the ordinance," said Mayor Woodman, "but I agreed to delay appointing the commission providing the film men did not delay too long in presenting their case."

It is expected that nothing will be done by the Mayor for at least two weeks.

The Mayor was informed that the Theater Owners' Association of Southern California has appointed the following commitee to inspect the films in the exchanges and in circulation and to make eliminations of objectionable pictures: T. L. Tally, W. H. Clune, F. A. Miller, Frank H. MacDonald, Michael Gore, H. S. Lewis and W. F. Jensen.

This committee, it was stated, was to investigate all films now on the shelves of the exchanges and elsewhere, and wherever they find a film which they believe unfit to be prsented they will order its rejection and its order will be obeyed.

The action of the City Council, it has been stated, was taken upon receipt of a message Monday morning, December 24, from Mayor Woodman relating to the action taken by the police department to prevent the showing of the Al H. Woods production, "Free and Equal," and urging the municipal legislative body to establish a censorship to prevent a repetition of such exhibitions in the future. Following a brief discussion, an ordinance creating the position of motion picture censor was adopted by unanimous vote. The salary of the official was fixed at $175 monthly and a fee of 25 cents a reel was imposed as a license. Once it goes into effect no picture can be shown within the city limits until it has been officially approved and licensed by the censor.

Pathe Plans Activities on the Coast.

There is a strong probability that Pathe will centralize its most important production activities in Los Angeles. J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of the company, arrived in Los Angeles December 22 with his assistant, G. A. Smith, on what Mr. Berst termed a "sightseeing" trip. However, it is reported Mr. Berst is considering several propositions to bring a number of his most important producing companies to this city.

The visit of Pathe's chief executive here is also significant at this time in view of the early release of the new Pathe plays with such stars as Fannie Ward, Bessie Love, Bryant Washburn, Irene Castle and Frank Keenan. It is known that Mr. Berst's plans for the new year contemplate "big stars" only, and there are rumors that there will be some important additions to Pathe's list of stars as a result of his visit. It is announced that the Pathe Company plans to erect a large motion picture studio on the coast to cost at least $250,000 and which will accommodate from six to eight producing companies.

Universal Players Entertain Orphans.

Bluebird and Universal players made up a program that delighted four thousand poor children of Los Angeles and about three thousand grown-ups in the Shrine Auditorium on the night of December 22. The occasion was the annual Christmas tree celebration of Al Malaikah Temple for the poorest youngsters attending the public schools of Los Angeles.

Miss Mae Murray danced with two little girl protégés and made a hit. Dorothy Phillips recited a poem about "Little Charlotte Russe"—one particularly appropriate for the occasion, the children listening with rapt attention.

Zoe Ray, the child star, appeared with Burwell Filson Hamrick, another one of the clever Universal juvenile actors, and did an original pantomime, which was splendidly presented. Jack Wells sang "Over There" and several other songs. The program was concluded with a tableau representing the patriotic picture, "The Spirit of '76," the characters of which were portrayed by George Barrell, Thomas Hutchinson and Howard Daniels.

At the conclusion of the program, which also included several numbers by the Shrine band, gifts of toys, candy and fruit were distributed to the children.

Goldstein Seeks Release on Bond.

Another effort has been made to obtain the release on bond of Robert Goldstein, producer of "The Spirit of '76," the film play, which as has been previously stated was seized by the Federal Government because of anti-British scenes embodied in it. Goldstein has been in jail for three weeks in default of $10,000 bond. New sureties were offered, but the matter was continued to allow time for an investigation of the properties owned by the proposed bondsmen.

Goldstein has intimated from time to time that he was being made a "goat," that wealthy men who had backed the production of his film play through the Continental Producing Company were as culpable as he. Investigations by the Federal officials have convinced them, it is stated, that the other members of the company had little or nothing to do with the production of "The Spirit of '76," and had no knowledge that certain scenes were eliminated when the picture was exhibited to Federal censors and afterward reinstated when the picture was displayed to the public.

"Tarzan of the Apes" Completed.

Production of "Tarzan of the Apes," the eight-reel screen version of the popular novel by Edgar Rice Burroughs, has been completed by the National Film Corporation, and William Parsons, president of the company, has left this week for New York City, to make arrangements for the premiere presentation of his photoplay.

An all-star cast was engaged for the picture. Among the principals are Enid Markey, Elmo Lincoln, True Boardman, Katherine Kirkham, Thomas Jefferson, Bessie Toner, George French and Gordon Griffith. Scott Sidney directed the production and took his company for several weeks down to the jungle district of Southern Louisiana. It is stated the National Film Corporation has invested $250,000 in this picture, which it has taken them six months to produce.

Vivian Reed Stops Runaway.

At the risk of being thrown over a high embankment, Miss Vivian Reed stopped a runaway horse in Griffith Park, Los Angeles, recently. The horse was attached o a buggy in which a little girl was seated. Miss Reed, who was taking a horseback ride, was attracted by the cries of the child and dug her heels into the sides of her horse. She was unable to seize the reins as she reached the side of the runaway and flung herself from her saddle to the back of the animal and brought him to a stop.

Los Angeles Film Brevities.

Margarita Fischer, the American Film Company star, has completed her third feature photoplay, "High Heels," by Lloyd Ingraham, and has been in Los Angeles for the holidays. Most of her time has been taken up with selecting new gowns to be worn in her fourth screen play, "Ann's Finish," another offering from the pen of Beatrice Van, author of "Miss Jackie of the Army" and "Molly Go Get 'Em," Miss Fischer's first two American pictures. In the production just completed Jack Mower plays the leading masculine role, and the supporting cast includes David Howard, Golda Madden, Edward Peil, Jean Robbins and Fred Smith.

Director Frank Borzage, with Wallace MacDonald and Dick Rosson in his cast, has begun work on what Editor Julian Johnson declares is one of the most interesting stories bought by the department in some time. The working title is "The Shoes That Danced," and it is the screen adaptation of John Morosco's story by the same name. Jack Cunningham did the continuity. This is a story in which the leading characters are gangsters and it borders on life in the underworld. A most unusual feature is that the villain attends a masquerade ball disguised as Charlie Chaplin. Little Pauline Starke will be seen in the leading feminine role.

Thomas N. Heffron has started work on a water subject called "The Sea Panther." It is a tale of pirates of the Carribean Sea written by Kenneth B. Clarke and in it smiling Bill Desmond will be seen as "The Panther," a swashbuckling freebooter of the early days when the old sailing ships fell easy prey to the speedy pirate craft. The barkentine Fremont, former blackbirder, and blockade runner of the Civil War times, will be used in this Triangle drama of the sea.

Edward Sloman, who has directed twelve productions starring William Russell for the American Film Company, is editing the final screen play produced under the title of "Detective Dan Cupid." It is a thrilling comedy drama filled with the usual punch which characterizes the new Russell series.

Jay Dwiggins, of the Triangle-Keystone scenario staff, has given up the chase for the elusive laugh and will turn his future activities to the dramatic end of scenario writing. Henceforth Dwiggins will train his typewriter on five-reel dramatic stories with a light comedy vein. Dwiggins is an actor as well as an author and just recently bid good-bye to his screen career to devote his entire time to thinking up hard things for other Keystone comedians to do.

Tom Mix and his company have returned from a trip in the fields and desert where they have been making some of the most important scenes in the new starring vehicle that will show the depictor of the Western at his best. In the cast with Mix are Enid Markey, Sam De Grasse, Charles Stevens, Louis Sargent, George Stone, Virginia Corbin and Violet Radcliffe. The director is S. A. Franklin.

Anita King, who has been ill at the Clara Barton Hospital, Los Angeles, for some weeks, is once more able to be at the Balboa studios, where under the direction of Howard Mitchell she is filming a Western story for the Mutual program.

Dorothy Phillips, Carmel Myers and Ruth Clifford were among the volunteers from the Bluebird studios who assisted in the drive in the city of Los Angeles for new members of the Red Cross. Each of these stars conducted her campaign in one of the leading banking institutions during the forenoon and while they were occupied for not more than three hours did a land-office business.

George Crane, of the Coast Artillery Company stationed at San Luis Obispo, was formerly connected with the chemical laboratories at the Balboa studio. He is first of the studio's twenty-two Liberty boys to return and autograph his own star in the Balboa service flag. It was H. M. Horkheimer's idea to have each star in the flag autographed by a former employee now in the service, and wherever it is impossible for the men to come to the studio the flag will be sent to them. After the signatures are all secured, a flag raising ceremony will be staged at the studio.

Director Wilfred Lucas is still away with his company in the desert region near Hesperia, where he is engaged in making exteriors for Bluebird's "The Heart of the Desert," which has been adapted for the screen from the book by Honore Willsie. Reports received at Universal City this week stated that the company has encountered unusually hot weather, the temperature averaging between 90 and 98 degrees every day since they have been there. Lucas has a company of more than forty people with him and several dozen horses. At Hesperia he was joined by a score of Indians, who are appearing in the picture.

Informed that a young man was attempting to sell ounce boxes of a chemical used in the development of films and photographic plates, at prices far below the present value, the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company investigated and found chemicals valued at approximately $500 had been stolen from their studio. The police are now searching for the man who has been attempting to sell the chemicals in downtown photographic studios.

Keeney Engages Kirkwood

Well Known Director Starts Work on Catherine Calvert Production—Ben Kutler Appointed Scenario Editor.

WHEN Frank A. Keeney decided to go into the film producing business he announced that he was going to sign the best director in the business. Accordingly, he now makes public the engagement of James Kirkwood. Mr. Keeney also announces that he has engaged as his scenario editor Benjamin S. Kutler, formerly editor for Augustus Thomas and Popular Plays and Players, writer of photoplays for Pathe and Metro and other well known companies, and director of some of his own plays.

James Kirkwood.

Mr. Kirkwood has just completed his work as director of the Billie Burke picture, "Eve's Daughter," and from now on will devote his entire time to the Keeney enterprise. He is working in conjunction with Mr. Kutler on a screen feature photoplay which is to be produced in about a month, with Catherine Calvert, widow of the late Paul Armstrong, playwright, as the star. The title of the picture has been chosen, but will not be announced until later. Mr. Kutler says that the work is being especially fashioned for Miss Calvert's winsome type of personality, and that he is endeavoring to weave into the plot a tensely human motive and a strong story interest.

Mr. Kirkwood's abilities are too well known to need extended exploitation at this advanced stage of his career. His experience on the dramatic stage gave him a solid basis to build on when he entered the picture field, and he at once took his place in the first rank of directors.

The Keeney Pictures Corporation does not intend to base its activities solely upon production. Announcement is made that plans are now being drawn for the second in a chain of the aters at which its products will be exploited. The house will be located in Williamsport, Pa., on the site of the old Lycoming opera house, which was burned down about three years ago. It will seat about 1,800, and will cost approximately $200,000, including ground and equipment. Work will be started in the early spring, and will probably be completed by the end of the summer.

TRIMBLE PICTURE CORPORATION DUE SOON.

At the recent completion of the second, as yet unnamed, Petrova picture, Larry Trimble stated that the formation of the Trimble Picture Corporation would mark his entrance into the field of productions during January, 1918, an appropriate climax to the career of a man who eight short years ago was an unknown in the picture industry.

Further details concerning this newest of manufacturing enterprises have not been made, but the trade should doubtless soon know the officers of the company, the calibre of subjects to be filmed, the leads, supporting cast, and such other necessaries.

After a record of many successful productions under the Vitagraph banner, with which organization he made his debut to the film industry, Trimble went to England as managing director of a new company starring the former Vitagraph favorite, Florence Turner. Returning to this country a year ago the young producer added to his already long string of achievements the making of "The Auction Block," the Rex Beach novel released by Goldwyn, and the "Spreading Dawn," starring Jane Cowl.

JOE LEE BACK AGAIN.

That popular and fast-stepping film figure who, with Charles Rankin, owns and is offering the rights for sale of "A Modern Lorelei," featuring Tyrone Power and Frances Burnham, by name Joe Lee, has returned to New York City after his trip to the Middle West.

SECOND BIRTHDAY OF CHRISTIE COMPANY.

WITH New Year's day, the second anniversary of the Christie Film Company, an interesting story of achievement was unfolded by Al. E. Christie, director of Christie comedies and the pioneer studio builder in Hollywood, California.

On New Year's day, 1916, Al. Christie entered the producing field under his own name. He selected the same location at Sunset boulevard and Gower street where, four years before, he had established the old Nestor Film Company. Christie comedies soon attracted the attention of exhibitors through their individuality of staging, lighting, and, in particular, their smart costuming and the story of the picture.

Al. E. Christie.

Today the Christie Film Company ranks among the best known film producing organizations in the United States. Its executive personnel consists of Al. E. Christie, president and producing director; C. H. Christie, general manager, and Fred L. Porter, vice-president and secretary.

In discussing the two years of development at his studio, Al. E. Christie said, "On New Year's day we will shoot the first scenes in a new covered stage just completed and equipped with a modern $25,000 lighting system. We are going to christen this new stage on our second anniversary for the sake of the sentiment there is in it and with the hope that a year from now we will have two more stages of even greater dimensions."

GOLDBURG ON TRANS-CONTINENTAL TOUR.

Jesse J. Goldburg left New York Thursday, January 3, on a sales-swing that will cover the country before he returns. Philadelphia was his first stop, and he has also been in Washington and Atlanta, with New Orleans, Dallas Fort Worth, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, Salt Lake, Denver, Des Moines, Chicago, Detroit and Pittsburgh to follow.

Mr. Goldburg, on his trip, will not alone exploit the attractions of the Ivan Film Productions, Inc., but will also contract with one state rights buyer in each territory to act as the sole and exclusive buying representative on all productions to be handled by such exchange in its respective territories.

SHERRILL RETURNS FROM FLORIDA.

This week, William L. Sherrill, president of the Frohman Amusement Company, is due to return to his desk from the balmy climate of Tampa, where he has spent the holiday period in the midst of his subordinates who under the general supervision of director Jack W. Noble, are making certain of the scenes of the forthcoming spectacle, "The Birth of a Race," which the Frohman corps is making for the Birth of a Race Photoplay Company of Chicago.

FRANK HALL BACK AT DESK.

In the United States Exhibitors Booking Corporation offices in the Times building, Frank G. Hall, the firm's president, is again to be found after having returned from a holiday trip through the middle west. He observes that there is absolutely no foundation for the uneasiness of the future of the motion picture business, which has been expressed by various of the skeptics of the trade during the past two months.

W. H. PREPARED TO BECOME SALES AGENT.

In line with the expansion of their business, W. H. Productions Company are now prepared to handle the exploitation of any independent production of merit produced on the market. They are prepared to handle world rights on either percentage or on an advance with a minimum guarantee.

"Broncho Billy" Returns to Screen

Erstwhile Essanay Cowboy Hero Announces His Re-entry for Limited Series of Pictures.

ANNOUNCEMENT is made that G. M. Anderson, the famous "Broncho Billy" of screen fame, will return to the moving picture theaters for a brief period in a series of big feature pictures exploiting his familiar character in a number of all-American stories, with glorious nature as his stage.

"Broncho Billy" a few years ago was one of the best known and beloved characters in moving pictures. Mr. Anderson made of him a type that stood out boldly in an individual field and realized all the tremendous vitality, energy, and sturdy manhood of the West. So strong was the impression that he created that he has never been forgotten, and both exhibitors and public have repeatedly urged him to return to the field where he made his reputation. Of late years he has devoted himself to the legitimate or spoken drama, and in conjunction with L. Lawrence Weber and several other prominent managers has made a number of successful comedy, dramatic, and musical productions. "Broncho Billy" will always be the same, no matter what his endeavor. The same marvelous energy and virility that characterized him in pictures marks his life in other directions. Action is his motto and theory of life, and action has brought him his success. Although he will produce a number of new feature pictures, he will not cease his efforts as a dramatic producer for the spoken stage, and has a number of new productions in view for the present and coming season.

G. M. "Broncho Billy" Anderson.

The first feature picture to be released is called "Naked Hands," and is said to be full of thrills. It is a typical Western story, and reveals "Broncho Billy" in all his pristine glory, and carries with it a few surprises that will not be at all unwelcome to his admirers. "Naked Hands" will appear in five parts via the state rights market.

STERLING MANAGER ON ROAD.

H. R. Ebenstein, manager of sales for the Sterling Pictures Corporation, left New York on the sixth of the month for a half-month trip to the Middle West. He is taking samples with him of various of the three Sterling series of productions that feature Catherine Calvert, Alma Hanlon and Jean Sothern, respectively. Arthur Beck, head of the enterprise, only recently returned from a tour of the Great Lakes section.

BEGINNING OF MYSTERIOUS PROPOSITION.

Hereto hangs a tale—on January 28, Marcus Loew's theaters begin the booking of "Persuasive Peggy" for 66 nights within that seven-day period. This is the commencement of a series of over 300 bookings in New York state alone, and represents a pledge revealing a co-operative exhibitor booking movement which will very shortly bask in the full gaze of the trade's attention.

FOURSQUARE CHAIN COMPLETE.

Foursquare exchanges throughout the United States and Canada greeted the new year in twenty-one different cities; for now this independent distributing organization completely covers this country. The latest exchanges opened are San Francisco, at 191 Golden Gate avenue; Los Angeles, at 514 West Eighth street; Dallas, at 1911½ Commerce street, and Minneapolis, at 206 Film Exchange building.

PARSONS IN NEW YORK.

William Parsons, president of the National Film Corporation of America, the independent Los Angeles producing firm who have just finished "Tarzan of the Apes," has spent part of the past week in New York among the film fraternity. He is putting up at the Astor, and promises a full statement through the columns of the Moving Picture World for the benefit of exhibitors and the state rights exchange domain.

SILVERMAN EXPLAINS FURTHER.

Following up his recent statement to the Moving Picture World as recorded in the January 5 installment of this department, Mayer Silverman, president of the Liberty Film Renting Service, Pittsburgh, advises the latest details of his exhibitor-exchange co-operative proposition:

"We are all the way to half of our minimum quota of exhibitors. In a great many towns, I find that conditions are occasioned, not by the lack of business, but more on account of the lack of business acumen on the part of the exhibitors. For instance, in a town where there are two theaters, we find both of the theaters fighting for one class of productions, blindly insensible to the value of other productions and only with the idea that their competitor shall not get this certain service no matter how much it costs both of them.

In one of these two towns, I interviewed the first exhibitor I talked to, and showed him how foolish he was to pay twice as much for the pictures he was using and using them two days. It only took me about ten minutes to show him where our proposition was a life-preserver and he immediately gave me his $100 check.

The possibilities of our company are really wonderful, as reviewed by most exhibitors. I feel that we will not have any trouble at all in inducing our minimum quota of exhibitors to join us six weeks before the time we placed for securing them. This speaks very well for our project and I have started negotiations for a branch in another city and if it is agreeable to our body of exhibitors, we will endeavor to spread it over the United States.

In pointing out the fact that there is no proposition that takes care of the exhibitors, any new amalgamation, this fact alone has been very forcible in procuring our $100 checks with promises of purchasing stock, that insures our project a big success."

USOSKIN ASSISTANT PRODUCTION EDITOR.

Moe Usoskin is the latest addition to the W. H. Productions Company staff.

Mr. Usoskin was born in Odessa, Russia, and secured a great deal of his training with a film importing company in Russia, helping to introduce moving pictures in that part of the country.

Upon his arrival in New York in 1913 he became assistant manager of the Riverview theater in New York. He then joined the Inter-Continent Film Co., as assistant editor, and the University Film Co. later. He also helped to establish the New England exchange for the Sawyer products in 1914. He was later connected with the National Film Corporation, helping to exploit "The Fall of a Nation," and in 1917 became affiliated with the Mammoth Film Corporation as manager of the film department.

Mr. Usoskin will assist the production editor, Mr. McGovern.

TRADE SHOWINGS OF "THE EAGLE'S EYE."

Arrangements are being made for a simultaneous trade showing at all the Hoffman Foursquare exchanges of the Whartons' production of "The Eagle's Eye," the Secret Service expose of Imperial Germany's spies in this country, founded on a story by Chief Flynn. All exhibitors are invited to witness the run of the first episodes of this serial and will be notified of the date and sent an invitation if they will communicate with the manager of the nearest Foursquare exchange. The episodes of this story are being produced as rapidly as possible, and an early release of this attraction may be expected by the trade.

TWO MORE U. S. APPOINTMENTS.

Leon Bories and Murray Beier have been added to the sales-force of the U. S. Exhibitors' Booking Corporation. Mr. Bories, who has had long experience on the Pacific coast, having served with a number of film concerns, will represent the U. S. Corporation in the Seattle district, while Mr. Beier will supervise U. S. distribution in the Buffalo territory. Both men will work under the supervision of Lynn S. Card, general sales-manager.

BILLY WEST TO WRITE MORE MUSIC.

Billy West, who surprised his numerous admirers and patrons by composing a very melodious set of waltzes, which he dedicated to his admirers and presented to the King-Bee company with the understanding that the waltzes were to be given away as an advertising feature, will compose a fox-trot which the King-Bee Films Corp. will publish on or about March 1, to be released free of charge to newspapers and exhibitors.

"THE BIRTH OF DEMOCRACY" SHOWN.

"The Birth of Democracy," heralded as a most spectacular production, is going to have a private showing at the New York Roof, on Tuesday, January 8th, at 11:30 a. m.

Quite a number of important personages are to appear; among others, a special representative of Ambassador Jusserand, and New York's new Mayor, John F. Hylan, has been invited to make the opening remarks.

Abramson Signs Well Known Favorites

Engages John Mason and Anne Luther for Leading Roles, Rents Biograph Studios and Begins Production.

THE past week was a busy and telling one for the Graphic Film Corporation, of which Ivan Abramson is president and the directing head. First of all, Mr. Abramson has rented the Biograph studios in the Bronx, and begins production on Thursday, January 10. Secondly, he announces the engagement of John Mason, of "Libertine" stellarship, not to mention a long list of stage successes, for the role of the father of the story, who, through a second matrimonial alliance, brings on the development of the strong punches which are said to be features of the forthcoming seven-part story, "Moral Suicide." Thirdly, the Graphic head announces the signing up of Anne Luther for the role of Beatrice Covington, the most tempting bit of feminine stage work yet provided in any of Ivan Abramson's productions.

Anne Luther.

Anne Luther was selected for this role because of her ability, comeliness and photographic qualities, her titian hair, blue eyes, and dainty figure having long stood her in good stead from the time, now more than four years ago, when she essayed her first part with the Reliance Company under the direction of D. W. Griffith. Since then she has come to the fore under the Lubin, Kinetophote, William Fox, and other banners, and will be very favorably recalled for her work in "A Man's Shadow" opposite Tom Terris; "The Double Life," with Harry Myers; "The Beast," opposite George Walsh, and her most recent stellar undertaking in "Who's To Blame?" though the last mentioned production has merely been privately shown as yet. In fact, Miss Luther had only just arrived in Manhattan from the Coast after finishing this picture, when Mr. Abramson signed her.

George Backer, builder of the Godfrey building and sponsor for M. H. Hoffman, Inc., is quoted by the Graphic head as having offered to guarantee the new concern a minimum of $75,000 within three months after reading "Moral Suicide" in scenario form.

Sales of the Week

Herebelow a Compendium of the Selling Activities Recorded in the State Rights Market the Past Seven Days.

W. H. PRODUCTIONS COMPANY announces the following sales during the past week:

The rights to Wm. S. Hart in "The Bandit and the Preacher" to the Peerless Photoplays Co., Omaha, Nebr., for Iowa, Nebraska, Kansas and Missouri.

The rights to twenty-eight Keystone Mack Sennett produced comedies to R. D. Lewis Film Co., Oklahoma City, for Oklahoma.

J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., 729 7th Ave., hold secure the selling agency for the foreign rights of the France Films Corporation's production, "The Natural Law," featuring Marguerite Courtot.

"The Eyes of the World" has been sold to Geo. E. Hale for the States of Washington and Oregon, to J. L. Adams, of the Deseret Film Company, Salt Lake City, for Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, New Mexico, Idaho and Montana.

In Illinois it is being handled with success by Spence C. Rogers, while California, Arizona and Nevada is being worked by Theo. M. Newman, head of the W. H. Clune Film Producing Company of Los Angeles.

Through the Arrow Film Corporation, Times Building, New York, several important deals are pending for this feature both in the East and in the Midwest.

Arthur Beck, president of the Sterling Pictures Corp., reports that the New York State and northern New Jersey rights on "Peg 'o the Sea," the five-part production featuring Jean Sothern, has been secured by the Modern Feature Film Company, 729 Seventh avenue, New York City.

Likewise the Michigan, Ohio and Kentucky rights on the entire series of five Jean Sothern features, to the Standard Film Service Co. of Cleveland, Harry Charnas, manager.

Renowned Pictures Corp. has concluded the sale of "The Public Defender" for eastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey, to the Stanley Booking Corp. of Philadelphia.

Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin announce the disposal of the seven-part feature, "The Warrior," to the Midwest Civilization Company of Denver, Colorado. The buyers were represented by James W. Burke, president of the Midwest concern, and Max Schulbach, general manager. The sale entails the states of Colorado, Utah, New Mexico and Wyoming, and Messrs. Burke and Schulbach report that several road companies will be toured over the four states. This pair is a prominent territorial distributing partnership in the far West that has already acquired considerable reputation through the handling of Thomas H. Ince's spectacle, "Civilization." Three companies are at present presenting the latter picture throughout Colorado, Utah, New Mexico and Wyoming, and it is planned to give "The Warrior" the same method of handling.

Contracts were also closed during the past week whereby "The Warrior" becomes the property of the Eltabran Film Company for the states of North and South Carolina. Thomas Branon is the purchaser of this territory and, following the sale, left for Charlotte, North Carolina, to make arrangements for the initial presentation of the picture.

It appears that John L. Sweeney, Central theater, St. Louis, Mo., and not William Sievers, has purchased the Missouri rights of the Cosmofotofilm production, "I Believe." Mr. Sievers merely arranged the negotiation.

A KING-BEE AND A QUEEN-BEE.

Mildred Burstein, niece of the president of the King-Bee Films Corporation, has become the bride of Harry Naughton, studio manager of the corporation. The wedding took place at the home of the bride's uncle at Hollywood. Lou Burstein gave the bride away and Billy West acted as best man. After the wedding the newlyweds departed for a two-weeks' honeymoon, destination unknown.

Harry Naughton was born in Worcester, Mass., and educated at the Holy Cross College, receiving the degree of A.B. in 1906. He received an M.D. degree in 1910. His first business engagement was with the firm of White, Naughton and Co., Boston banking house. His relatives have been in the banking business for two generations.

It was Cupid that drew Mr. Naughton into the film business. He had been courting Miss Burstein for the past two years, and when offered a position in the King-Bee studio at Bayonne as studio manager he grasped the opportunity to be nearer his heart's desire.

S. R. D. BUYERS DUE JANUARY 9.

Owing to the fact that two of the foremost new productions that C. Mell Simmons, general manager of the State Right Distributors, Inc., has arranged for the inspection of his firm's buying committee, would not be ready for exhibition on Jan. 4, the day originally set for the convening in New York of said buying body, the date for the gathering of these gentlemen in the metropolis has been postponed until Wednesday, Jan. 9. Accordingly, on that day Broadway will claim as visitors J. J. Allen, of Canada; Sidney B. Lust, of Washington; D. M. Vandawalker, of Chicago; Harry Grelle, of Pittsburgh; Leon D. Netter, of Cleveland, and Nathan Hirsch, of Manhattan, which group constitutes the buying committee of Mr. Simmons' organization.

"MICKEY" IN SEVEN PARTS.

The Western Import production of "Mickey," the Mack Sennett-directed comedy—plus featuring Mabel Normand, which is due for a trade showing during the latter half of January, was inadvertently announced as a five-part production in the last issue of our publication. The trade is herewith advised that "Mickey" will appear in seven parts, and has been so advertised since the Western Import Company first announced the production as available for the state rights market.

S. & P. AGENCY HANDLE STEINER COMEDIES.

Arrangements have been perfected whereby the William Steiner two two-reel comedies featuring Twede Dan, now renamed the Jester comedies, will be sold to the state rights market via the Shallenberger and Priest Selling Agency.

HORSLEY STILL ON WAY

D. W. Russell, Eastern manager of David Horsley's film interests, has not yet been visited by the producer. Russell now looks for his chief around the fifteenth of the month.

Motion Picture Educator

Conducted by REV. W. H. JACKSON and MARGARET I. MACDONALD

A Golden Opening

"Triumph of the (Educative) Motion Picture."

By Rev. W. H. Jackson.

A GOLDEN occasion is usually the completion of a period of time and effort, in Rothapfelism it is made the set time for a new beginning. The opening of the Rivoli in New York, Friday, December 28, was the climax of the first great period in the history of moving pictures; from now on a new period has begun. The Rivoli theatre itself is a building of which it must be said that its superior does not exist; it is the very quintessence of rich refinement; an entire absence of color—in so far as the ordinary uses of colors are made—in the quiet richness of gold with ivory to tan accompaniments, elegance is made the foe of the gaudy and vulgar.

A Gold Program. As gold is only pure after a sevenfold passing through fire, so the opening night program bore evidence of having passed through severe trials before it was permitted to appear to equalize and reflect the richness of the surroundings.

The well-timed episodes revealing the "Victory of Democracy" were at once a display of noble patriotism, marking well the battle fires through which our purified democracy had come, through conflicts for religious liberty, a righteous revolution, and a civil strife; all pointing logically to the time when through a greater strife the world shall come purified to a safe and sane democracy.

Of the moving picture part of the program it is safe to say that never were better pictures; better photography, better subjects, better projection cannot be imagined; they were all of the pure gold brand and reflected an educated, high-minded, noble and thoroughly cultured standard of moving picture excellence.

Of the scenics it must be said that while every part of the program was perfect in itself the greatest advance was noticeable in the screening of the scenics. How often have we seen similar scenics shown until the audience became tired of their cold, monotonous length and scoffed at them as educationals. At the Rivoli they were so screened as to draw gasps of admiration from a cultured audience. The choicest gems of scenery had been selected and were displayed with such limitations that the effect was instantaneous as judged by the appreciation manifested; the art of showing scenics was accomplished for the first time this Friday night.

The comedy, with Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew in "Her First Love," was a wisely chosen one, giving that necessary touch of humor in the kind of program compiled, and, while the Drews are always safe, this particular playlet was superior to many others for its happy ideas, clean and true, safe and sane.

"A Modern Musketeer" gave Douglas Fairbanks an opportunity superior to the majority of his plays; he seized the opportunity and "made good." This is not the occasion for any review of the pictures shown, but rather an appreciation of the whole; the writer does not wish to seem to be carried away with undue enthusiasm, neither does he feel called upon to in an especial manner become too laudatory of this new venture, but truth must prevail, and he feels that the only opinion which can be expressed under the circumstances is that it was the very best moving picture exhibition he has ever been privileged to attend.

Mr. Rothapfel has in the Rivoli placed the moving pictures on their highest place thus far, and we should prove poor indeed if we did not appreciate that fact and accord to him that just measure of praise which he so richly deserves. Devotees of the moving pictures, enthusiasts of the educational picture, prophets of the future of the moving picture have at all times given expressions of their wishes and views; these alone, however, were nothing but words, words, words; the genius of a Rothapfel was required to translate these words into action and he has done it: rightly has he named the Rivoli the "Triumph of the Moving Picture."

Men of the stamp of the late J. P. Chalmers, founder of the Moving Picture World, dreamed of this day. Sadly they were not permitted to enjoy that which is our happiness. The moving picture has passed through all the fires of censorship, even to denunciation; it has passed through all the seven fires of which gold is tried and has come forth triumphant.

Mr. S. L. Rothapfel, the Moving Picture Educator congratulates you and thanks you.

Interesting Educationals

One Zoological Subject, Two Topical, One Scientific, and One Industrial Subject.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

"Animals in Mid-Summer" (Educational).

The manner in which some of the animals collected at the Bronx zoo relieve their overheated bodies in the sultry summer weather is illustrated in a series of scenes photographed for us by Raymond L. Ditmars and released through the Educational Films Corporation of America. In some instances they seek and find comfort themselves, and in others it is dealt out to them by the keepers. For instance, the rhinoceros is treated to a shower bath, as is likewise the big brown bear. The placid delight of the latter as the water hose does its work is most entertaining. The deer steal away to shady nooks where they endeavor to keep cool while they fight the flies. The polar bear lolls uncomfortably on the rocks, and the buffalo strives to beat the insect combination by rolling in the dust. Animals whose tails have been shorn by evolution of their fly-swatting efficiency contrasted with long bushy-tailed animals such as the shetland pony afford some comedy.

"Handling Food Without Hands" (Universal).

The method by which food is placed in packages and sealed without coming in contact with the human hand is shown in the 55th number of the Screen Magazine. These pictures were photographed in a large packaging concern, and illustrate the method by which flat sheets of cardboard are made to serve a sanitary purpose. An interesting subject.

"The New Art of Dress" (Paramount-Bray).

An interesting series of views for the feminine portion of an audience is found in the 101st release of the Pictograph. Here we learn that from four yards of material a dress slip can be made which will do duty with various tunics of more or less elaborate style. Some of these are shown to be cut from a square of cloth. Then there is an individual cloak which can be used for different occasions by merely turning it inside out. The suggestions contained in this subject are invaluable.

"The Destructive Power of T. N. T." (Paramount-Bray).

A timely subject contained in the 101st release of the Pictograph demonstrates the wonderful power of T. N. T., the explosive which figured in the great disaster at Halifax. Somewhere in California men training for the fighting front are seen handling this deadly explosive with a carelessness that is born of experience and knowledge. Here the men are trained in the use of the explosive in the destruction of railroads, the digging of tunnels for mines, etc.

War Bibles (Pathe-International).

A half-reel subject, showing the way in which Bibles are prepared in wholesale lots for our soldiers at the front. The entire process is made clear—the printing, cutting, folding, assembling, sewing, trimming and finally the binding. An animated drawing accompanies this, showing one of the new exploits of the Katzenjammer Kids.

Finley Nature Studies

Universal Releasing Interesting Pictures of Wild Animals Collected by William L. Finley of the Oregon State Fish and Game Commission.

TWO REELS of remarkably interesting pictures of bird and animal life, collected by William L. Finley, Superintendent of the Oregon State Fish and Game Commission, are being released by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. The first is entitled "Taming Wild Birds," and the second, "Wild Birds and Animals at Home."

In the first reel we are told a number of things about our feathered friends, among which is their ability to keep our gardens free from insects and worms. In the picture we are shown a couple of children caring for a family of young bluebirds, which they rear to maturity. For these birds they build houses, which they hang in the trees, and each morning before breakfast a plate of water is set for them to bathe in. Closeups of the birds bathing are interesting; and after the bath they eat breakfast from the children's hands. The picture tells us that birds are wild only because they have been persecuted, and that it is natural for them to be tame. These birds were so tame that they would come to any part of the garden where the children happened to be, and would alight on their heads, arms or shoulders without fear.

The second reel shows a variety of birds and animals in their native haunts. Among these is the bob-white, whose nest is given a close inspection by the camera. It contains a fine setting of eggs which in the absence of Mrs. Bob-White are tended by Mr. Bob-White, who has his troubles keeping the eggs confined to the nest. Various kinds of owls are also exhibited in excellent closeups, and we are privileged to witness the devouring of a white footed mouse by a monkey owl—not pleasant but interesting. Then there is the cinnamon teal, the kangaroo rat, coyote and pups, raccoon, skunk and other animals with which we are made familiarly acquainted by means of this excellent picture.

The distribution of these pictures through Universal exchanges began with the first week of January.

Educational Contracts With Newman

Traveltalks of E. M. Newman to Form An Important Part of the Program of Educational Films Corporation of America.

E. M. NEWMAN, whose illustrated Traveltalks are a looked-for annual event, has just contracted with E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager of the Educational Films Corporation of America for the release of thirty travel subjects during the next twelve months. The pictures are to be exhibited only in first class moving picture theaters in the United States, Canada, Mexico, South America and all of the European countries. Mr. Newman favored the Educational Films Corporation's offer rather than several other propositions presented to him for the reason that during his ten years of travel his main object has been to secure for his audiences original scenes full of information giving pleasing instruction as well as entertainment. The Educational Films Corporation strives in the same direction so that the combination should prove a happy and successful one.

Newman has visited every habitable part of the globe and his pictures are rare and unusual.

This new departure will in no way interfere with Newman's regular annual series of Traveltalks. Newman will continue to travel for five months each year as he has for the past ten years in search of new impressions and up-to-date scenes for his many "fellow-travelers."

After Year of Interesting Work

George E. Stone Visits New York and Tells of Labors Which Include the Photographing via Prizma of Many Subjects.

ONE OF the big things accomplished by George E. Stone, of Berkeley, California, in the field of educational photography and that which made him best known to us was the photographing of the five-part biological subject widely commented on, entitled "How Life Begins." Now he arrives unheralded from his happy hunting ground in the west and notifies us that he has spent a most interesting and enjoyable year in the employ of Prizma, Inc., photographing subjects which are best exploited by means of the Prizma color method.

During that time he has spent considerable time on the photographing of flowers. For this purpose, and to be able to secure the best results he had a hot house specially built in which the flowers could live and thrive in the sunlight and atmosphere best suited to them, but which could be darkened automatically for photographic purposes. Some remarkable studies have been made by Mr. Stone under these splendid conditions.

Some time was also spent following the trout up the Eel River, in Mendocino county, California, and to the hatcheries at Mount Shasta. Mr. Stone has made a study of the trout of this river, which includes the steel head variety. This member of the same family having access to the ocean not only develops in bodily area, but becomes pink of flesh like the salmon; while his brothers and sisters of home-abiding tendencies remain their sweet normal selves, the finest in the world for table use. An artificial falls erected in the river proved their inability for high jumping, while a graded ladder made it possible for them to make the ascent. From these pictures we will expect to learn much of interest on the subject. A forest fire near Shasta gave an unusual opportunity to gain another interesting bit of film.

Other interesting studies included in the year's work embrace views of Bird Island off the south coast of Oregon, showing the cormorant, the puffin or sea parrot, the petrel, the Western gull, and the murre in their native haunts. Studies of tropical birds and marine studies of fish at the Catalina Islands, including photography through glass-bottomed boats were also secured by Mr. Stone.

Ditmars' Christmas Picture

Strand Theater Exhibits Amusing Animal Picture in Which Zoo Pets Exploit Christmas Stockings.

ONE OF the best of short Christmas subjects for the screen is one which was arranged for the Educational Films Corporation of America by Raymond L. Ditmars entitled "Children's Pets." This exhibited at the Strand theater, New York City, delighted large audiences of adults and children.

A little girl and a little boy share the pleasure of the animals, fill their Christmas stockings and feed them candy, nuts and fruit. One of the smaller monkeys gives fine evidence of a good appetite and expresses in monkey fashion his appreciation of the attentions of the children. But the most amusing thing in the picture by far is the young ourang, who loves to play with the children. His impatience causes him considerable trouble and the audience much amusement when he attempts to unburden his Christmas stocking. In short, he is unconsciously the star performer of the picture. Children will be especially pleased with this offering, which encompasses one reel of film.

ATTRACTIVE FEATURES OF MUTUAL WEEKLY.

Year's Last Issue of Gaumont-Mutual Weekly Contains Interesting Material Well-Photographed.

THE last issue of the Gaumont-Mutual Weekly for the year 1917 having its date of release on Dec. 31 naturally encroaches on the new year and will be known as No. 1 of the 1918 group. It has been unusually well gotten together and contains among other items of importance and interest the following subjects which are presented attractively and are of photographic excellence: The landing in the Presidio, San Francisco, of Miss Katherine Stinson, the daring girl aviator, who has set a new American record in flying without stop the 610 miles between San Diego and San Francisco, California. The training of men-of-war's men at the Great Lakes Naval Training Station. In this subject is shown the famous composer and band-master, John Phillip Sousa, and his new marine band of 300 pieces. A wonderful scene shows Commandant Moffett's living flag of bluejackets at salute, with 9,300 tars in the most remarkable military formation on record.

In nearly every American home there is an engraving of "Washington Crossing the Delaware." A picture which instinctly reminds us of that great feat of the "Father of His Country" shows the training our war engineers are getting this winter. The river pictured somewhere in the United States is ice-covered, but now the engineers experience little difficulty in breaking the ice and erecting pontoon bridges.

The destruction of one of the first transatlantic wireless stations which must give way to a better one, and the launching of the first vessel built in Fall River in more than forty years are suggestive of the big strides America is making in preparations and changes made necessary by existing conditions.

General Film Conventions

Executives and Exchange Men of Big Distributing Concern Discuss Hodkinson Service.

AS THE first act of a new year which is expected to be attended by far reaching developments, the General Film Company called three sectional conventions of its various branch managers for discussion of its new activities already under way or planned by General Film.

The first of these conventions was set for New York City on Saturday, Jan. 5, with executives from the home office and the various branches of the Eastern district in attendance. The second was dated for Monday, January 7, at Chicago, for the benefit of the exchangemen in the central section of the country, and the third is arranged for San Francisco on Friday, January 11.

These sectional conventions mark the first step in an aggressive campaign outlined for the year 1918, each of the thirty-two General Film offices being represented in the deliberations. The various opportunities presented by the enlargement of General Film's usefulness, following its working alliance with the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation for the distribution of Paralta Plays through General Film exchanges, provided the most important topic for these conventions, which were held under the personal direction of General Sales Manager S. R. Kent.

One result of these conventions, according to Mr. Kent, is the determination of General Film Company not to be satisfied with the results already obtained in the preliminary work of distributing the Paralta Plays, even though they have been extraordinarily successful, but to launch an even more aggressive campaign to make possible the fullest and most complete realization of the Hodkinson principles of service among the personnel of General Film branches.

Incidentally General Sales Manager Kent has resumed his country-wide tour of exchanges after a short stay at the home office. Unusual importance has attached to this tour because of the tremendous strides made by General Film Company within the last few weeks. One of the objects of Mr. Kent's tour is to acquaint the various branch managers individually with the details of the Hodkinson plan of service announced some time ago.

Another object is to bring about the closest possible coordination between General Film's many distributing agencies and the Hodkinson service in the distribution of Paralta Plays. Without exception, every General Film exchange has caught the spirit of the new and broader idea in film service and is engaged in an energetic campaign to enlist the exhibitors of the country in support of this new movement. Advance bookings reported for the Paralta Plays indicate the most enthusiastic and cordial greeting ever extended a new picture product, according to Mr. Kent.

"Everywhere," said Mr. Kent, "find that Mr. Hodkinson's new distribution plan has created the most favorable impression among the exhibitors of the country. Our branches have reported a very flattering flow of bookings for the first of the Paralta Plays, but best of all is the evidence of hearty co-operation.

"With a better understanding of the Hodkinson service the methods of doing business in the picture industry will be revolutionized. Exhibitors are agreeing it is the first concrete evidence of a successful system to improve conditions with respect to the distribution of the manufacturer's product. Big changes are now being brought about, and even more important developments are to be expected as the spirit of the Hodkinson plan becomes more widely understood."

At the conclusion of his tour, Sales Manager Kent will go to Los Angeles to visit the new Paralta studios being erected and to confer with the Paralta officials with regard to forthcoming product which will be distributed through General Film exchanges by the W. W. Hodkinson service.

"THE HOUSE OF MIRTH" FOR EMMY WEHLEN.

Motion picture rights of Edith Wharton's famous novel, "The House of Mirth," have been acquired by Metro Pictures Corporation for the use of Emmy Wehlen and the screen version will be placed in production at an early date under the direction of Albert Capellani. "The House of Mirth," a book that was the talk of two continents when it appeared, was given a stage presentation with Fay Davis in the stellar role of Lily Bart. June Mathis and Albert Capellani have prepared the screen version, which will be given a careful and elaborate setting.

Donald Crisp Takes a Bride

Leaves Studio Ostensibly for Vacation, But With Marie Stark Visits Padre at San Juan Capistrano.

A NUMBER of months ago Donald Crisp was directing George Beban in a production entitled "A Roadside Impresario." There was a girl in the cast, an exceptionally attractive girl. Motion pictures were for, once far from Donald Crisp's mind when he looked into the eyes of Marie Stark.

Miss Stark appeared with Mr. Beban in the cast of "The

Donald and Mrs. Crisp, Formerly Marie Stark, After the "Hunting Honeymoon."

Cook of Canyon Camp" and in other of the Beban pictures which were staged by Mr. Crisp. And all this time there was a romance developing which was not designed by a novelist or the author of a scenario.

A few days ago Donald Crisp slipped away from the Lasky studios, quite unannounced, ostensibly for a vacation in the Yosemite. He took with him George Beban and a few other specially invited guests—and Marie Stark. Inside the crumbling walls at San Juan Capistrano Miss Stark became Mrs. Crisp.

INTER-OCEAN FILM CORPORATION DINES EMPLOYES.

Thomas Healy's Jungle Room was on the evening of Saturday, December 29, a scene of festivity when the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation gave a holiday dinner to its employes. Besides this the company gave to each of its employes two weeks' extra salary as a Christmas present. This was so pleasing to the sales and office forces that two blocks of them got together, the sales staff and the office girls, and unknown to each other bought for Paul H. Cromlin, president of the company, two valuable presents. The girls in the office gave him a silver fruit dish and the sales force gave his a sherbert set, also of silver.

As a part of the entertainment at the dinner, the office force had made a motion picture showing the employes hard at work as they are when the boss is away. There were also vaudeville acts. A satirical sketch was presented by Leon and Gus Schlesinger and M. S. Epstin, entitled "Our Important Case."

Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. Paul H. Cromlin, G. W. Newgass, Fred F. Neuman, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Herzog, E. M. James, Mr. and Mrs. Leon Schlesinger, Mr. and Mrs. Epstin, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Kaufman, Gus Schlesinger, Arthur Dorer, Louis Brock, Martin Cohn, Mr. and Mrs. Al Hartlieb, Thomas Lyons, Jerry Smith, William Horn, Jack Abastado, Edith Schulhof, Margaret Maloney, Elizabeth Hart, Viola Benson, Irene Epstin, Dorothy Dinnebeil, M. Brosky, Cecilia Quirk, Henrietta Miller, Anne Corbo and Clarice Schwabb.

MR. AND MRS. BUELL LOSE DAUGHTER.

L. H. Buell, purchasing agent for the Triangle Film Corporation, and wife, are mourning the loss of their seven-year-old daughter Jessie Margaret, who died at the Buell home in Los Angeles the day before Christmas from acute appendicitis.

Partington, of San Francisco, Looks Us Over

Imperial Theater Manager Sees Much in New York to Interest Him—Combining Recreation With Business

THERE are a lot of things in New York for a San Francisco theater man to look up. J. A. Partington, manager of the Imperial Theater in the Bay City, has not exactly discovered this fact in the last two weeks; rather he has verified previous impressions. Mr. Partington, accompanied by Mrs. Partington, came to New York primarily to see the theaters, screen and stage, and incidentally to be present at the opening of the Rivoli. It has been a busy fortnight. The San Francisco manager has seen all the stage shows and he has visited a lot of picture theaters. He has absorbed as much in the way of information as might ordinarily be expected of a keen young man with ten years' experience in catering to the photoplay public.

Nor has Mr. Partington neglected the social side of New York life. He has met many old friends and he has made many new ones. He has made the rounds of the hotels and restaurants—and when speaking of the latter he removes his hat and lowers his voice. "They don't breed pikers in San Francisco," he said. "There are some mighty fine restaurants out there, as you know, but when it comes to raising the limit commend me to these boys in New York." And Mr. Partington smiled.

J. A. Partington.

As was intimated in last week's issue the manager was a visitor at the Screen Club on the afternoon before New Year's Day. It required few minutes in that atmosphere to feel perfectly at home. There was Manager Joe Phillips, who had lived in Partington's own town for twenty-eight years, beginning in 1871. There was Charlie Eldridge, who asked many questions as to the changes that had taken place in thirteen years. William H. Tooker took the manager back over other days, the days of the Grand Opera House, when the present player sang there in opera. And there were many others who knew the town or whose work was familiar to the manager. The San Franciscan admitted he had had a most pleasant call.

Asked about the exhibiting business in San Francisco Mr. Partington said so far as he was concerned it was good. Inside of a half dozen weeks, playing "The Narrow Trail," he had broken his house record of five years' standing. And that was with the war tax added. Speaking about the war tax, Mr. Partington said: "You know that is an expression that is taboo in the Imperial box office. We do have a few inquiries as to why we charge a person, say, thirty-nine cents where formerly we had asked thirty-five, but when we say 'Four cents for Uncle Sam' there is no comeback. That settles the question. You know every exhibitor in San Francisco is adding on the tax. And of course they should."

Mr. Partington expressed his surprise at the scarcity of first-run picture theaters in the show district of New York. "Down town in San Francisco," he said, "and bear in mind that is a town with a population of but a half million, we have the California, Tivoli, Rialto, Jewel, Portola, Alhambra, St. Francis, Strand and Imperial, all first-run houses and seating up to three thousand. I am inclined to think we have more of these than can be found in any other city of the size in the country. That shows what we think of pictures out there. We have two new suburban houses, the New Filmore, seating 2,500, and the Mission, seating 3,000. And then, of course, there is the California, of which the World recently has told its readers. Just think of a nine-story front, all in theater. Building of theaters in our city is all through for a while, I believe. We have got pretty close to the limit of absorption so far as amusement purveying is concerned."

The visitor said the exhibitors and exchangemen of San Francisco had a real organization, the United Motion Picture Industries, Incorporated.

Mr. Partington, who in the Imperial uses Paramount and Artcraft subjects, was an interested guest of the Famous Players' studio officials one day of his stay. He watched Pauline Frederick in one of her big scenes in "La Tosca."

The conversation turned on the celerity with which a player for the screen could be converted into a favorite with the picturegoing public. "In the last month I have witnessed a striking example," said the manager. "Take Elsie Ferguson in 'The Rise of Jennie Cushing,' which we ran a month ago. On the opening night the business was not good. The people did not know Elsie Ferguson. Yet the second night there was a noticeable increase. And that increase held right through the week, so that the last two nights we had them on a line. In my opinion Miss Ferguson is in a class by herself in emotional work."

Mr. Partington is the original week's run man. So far as is known—and the writer heard this before his visit to San Francisco nearly three years ago—the manager of the Imperial was the first picture theater manager who had the hardihood to put on a production for a seven days' run. It was Mrs. Fiske in "Tess of the D'Urbervilles," and it was booked by W. W. Hodkinson, then as now strong for the longer run. Mr. Partington said there was much wagging of heads and remarks of "Poor fellow—crazy!" but, he added with a smile, "They don't say that now, do they?"

The Imperial's manager expects to take his time returning to the coast, making stops probably at Philadelphia, Cleveland, Chicago, Detroit, and possibly Minneapolis and St. Paul.

If you would get a rise out of Partington ask him about the weather in New York. It happened he arrived in the metropolis just prior to the cracking of the 13 degrees below zero, with 7 below the day following—without precedent in the forty-six years of the weather bureau—and the 5 below of the day following that. New York weather is one subject on which Partington freezes up. On any other question, however, he's right there with you. The qualities that have made for his success as a manager stand out. He's a regular fellow.

SARGENT FILM CORPORATION—NEW PRODUCERS.

A new producing company has begun operations in New York, its object being to provide a series of single reel comedies. The Sargent Film Corporation, under which name it is organized, has taken lease of a studio on the Fort Lee side of the Hudson river and has begun filming its subjects, which will feature as comedienne Edith Sargent, formerly a favorite Universal player. The productions are under the personal supervision of George Orth, who has had experience with the Biograph, Eclair, Gaumont, Yankee, Republic and Victor companies. An excellent supporting company for Miss Sargent has been engaged. The cinematographer for the new organization is Otto Schaefer, well known among the Jacksonville studios and more recently chief cameraman for the Tisdale Films of New York. Negotiations are on for the release of the Sargent product through one of the large distributing companies.

TRIANGLE DIRECTORS RETURN AFTER HOLIDAYS.

Director Cliff Smith, director of Western features at the Triangle studios, spent the Christmas holidays on a motor trip to San Diego. He was accompanied by his wife. Director Raymond Wells spent the Christmas holidays at Santa Catalina Island fishing for Tuna and is said to have had much luck. He is now back at work preparing to begin work on a new story and it is expected he will start shooting within a few days.

KITTY GORDON GUEST OF HONOR.

Kitty Gordon was the guest of honor at the opening of Marcus Loew's new theater in Hamilton, Ont., New Year's eve. The theater is one of the largest and finest in Canada. Marcus Loew will play host to a big party of well known stage and screen stars, who will go to the opening.

Julian Solomon Marries

Artcraft-Paramount Service Department Executive Takes Philadelphia Bride—New Yorkers Present at Ceremony.

WEDDING BELLS formed a duet with the New Year's chimes for Julian M. Solomon, Jr., better known at Wallack's and along Broadway as "King." For some two weeks Mr. Solomon's associates at the Artcraft-Paramount service department will find a vacant chair in front of his desk, for "King," shortly after the ceremonies, hied himself south with his bride on a honeymoon.

Julian Solomon.

"King" has countless friends in the film industry who will be interested to know that he has resigned from the bachelors' union. His work at the service department has helped many an exhibitor out of a serious situation when the returns at the box office were conspicuous by their absence. Correctly termed an "exhibitor's doctor," Mr. Solomon, in association with Carl H. Pierce, has advanced ideas and suggestions which have meant dollars and cents to exhibitors throughout the country. "King" entered the film industry some three years ago as an exhibitor, later becoming connected with the distribution end with Bosworth, Inc.

The wedding took place at the home of the bride, Miss Lila May Stephenson, in Philadelphia, an elaborate ceremony being conducted by S. Burns Weston, head of the Ethical Culture Society of that city. The bridal party consisted of Lila Johnson, maid of honor; Mrs. Walter S. Falk, matron of honor; Doroa Virginia Lovenstein, bridesmaid; D. Jack Lit, best man; Thomas George Wiley of the United Theater Equipment Company and Henry S. Luchheim, ushers. Among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Lit, Mr. and Mrs. Jerome H. Louchheim, Mr. and Mrs. S. Vance Lovenstein, Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Stephenson, Mr. and Mrs. Julian M. Solomon, Sr., Mr and Mrs. Thomas G. Wiley, Ensign and Mrs. Walter S. Falk, Alvin R. Plough, of the Philadelphia Ledger; Mr. and Mrs. John M. Lakin, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Obstfield, Miss Margaret Ganss, Pete Schmid, Richard B. Stephenson and Dr. A. Burr Cohen.

GOVERNMENT MOBILIZES NEWS WEEKLIES.

The Association of News Weeklies, of which Jack Cohn, of the Universal Animated Weekly, is president and which takes in the other two weeklies, the Mutual and the Hearst-Pathe, received on Thursday last an official communication from George Creel, chairman of the Committee on Public Information at Washington, appointing Jack Cohn, E. B. Patrick and Pell Mitchell as employees, assigned to the Division of Pictures, at the nominal salary of one dollar a year. All three men took the oath of office, swearing allegiance to Uncle Sam. Mr. Creel wrote: "I have taken this unusual step because the so-called News Weeklies are becoming so much a part of government work—in that they bring to the people pictures of the war, our preparations here, our work, etc.—that I want the co-operation to be the closest possible, and I feel that this will firmly cement your work with ours."

HARRY SHERMAN BUYS ZANE GREY'S STORIES.

Zane Grey, the popular and well-known author of red-blooded western stories, announces the sale of his most successful novels. Among them "The Riders of the Purple Sage," "The U. P. Trail," "Wildfire," and "Heritage of the Desert," to Harry A. Sherman, as vehicles for Dustin Farnum, who will start the productions of "The U. P. Trail," or "The Riders of the Purple Sage," at once, at Los Angeles, California.

Lois Wilson

MISS LOIS WILSON, the sparkling beauty who has won unstinted praise for her work in Universal features, appears opposite to J. Warren Kerrigan in his first Paralta play, "A Man's Man." Miss Wilson has already appeared with Mr. Kerrigan in productions of the Universal Company, and it is especially gratifying to her that she is to support him in his first Paralta play, as she frankly says that much of her success in motion pictures has been due to the kind aid that he has given her. Indeed, Mr. Kerrigan was one of the very first stars she ever saw on the screen, and this was long before she ever had an idea of going into pictures much less than ever becoming a leading lady within a year after she began work for the screen.

Lois Wilson.

Miss Wilson claims the South as her home, for, although she was born in Pittsburgh, Pa., her parents moved to Birmingham, Ala., before she was a year old, and she was educated in the grammar and high schools of that city, after which she attended the State Normal College at Livingston, Ala.

In 1915 the various states were requested to seect their most representative beauty to visit the World's Fair in San Francisco. Nineteen of the leading bachelors of that state were named to award the prize for the state. The decision was given at a big annual ball in Birmingham, where the various state and city officials were present. Miss Wilson was awarded the prize, which carried with it the distinction of being chosen in that state, which is so famous for its beautiful women.

On her way home from San Francsco Miss Wilson stopped off at Chicago, where she met Lois Weber, the directress, who induced her to try the pictures. Miss Wilson returned with Miss Weber to California, joining the Universal forces, with whom her success was instant, and she won a host of friends, who admired her beauty and splendid work on the screen.

She frequently appeared as leading lady for Mr. Kerrigan, and when he decided to go with the Paralta organization Miss Wilson also joined that company.

In "A Man's Man" Miss Wilson is seen in the role of Delores Ruey, a Castillian orphan girl, who figures in the romance with John Stuart Webster, the part played by Mr. Kerrigan.

Miss Wilson is a strikingly beautiful girl, whose rich, dark eyes and hair, with her other Latin features, lend themselves most admirably to a clearly defined interpretation of "Delores," and her rare histrionic talents make her interpretation of the part one that will add new laurels to the popularity which she now enjoys.

COLONEL BILL THROWS IT INTO THE ANIMALS—NOT.

Colonel William N. Selig, whose first 1918 picture will be "Brown of Harvard," has uttered the last word in patriotism. He ordered a meatless day at his Zoo. The animals were not so patriotic, raising an awful roar. But Colonel Bill has heard animals roar before.

KEYSTONE ACTRESS CHANGES NAME.

Because her name was constantly mispelled, Marianna de la Torre, a member of the Triangle-Keystone playing forces, changed it to plain Marian Torrey. Miss Torrey in addition to being one of the most talented ingenues in the Keystone aggregation is a capable pianist and is in great demand for concert work and Red Cross benefits.

Mastercraft Photoplay Corporation

Is Announced as a New Producing Company—F. Eugene Farnsworth, President—Will Use Thomas Dixon Stories.

ANNOUNCEMENT comes of the forming of the Mastercraft Photoplay Corporation. The entrance of this new corporation into the field of motion pictures promises to be an epoch-marking event in the history of the screen, for it brings with it that great mastermind of literature, Thomas Dixon, Jr., whose "Birth of a Nation" has not only made more money than any other photoplay production ever produced, but also marked the entrance of the high admission prices into the art of the silent drama. Ever since the making of "The Birth of a Nation," producers have endeavored to secure other works of this great literary genius for presentation on the screen, but up to the forming of the Mastercraft Photoplay Corporation he has steadfastly refused to consider any proposition presented to him.

F. Eugene Farnsworth.

Dr. F. Eugene Farnsworth, who has been associated with the industry ever since the first motion pictures were presented, will be the president and director general of the new corporation. Few men of today are more eminently fitted for the post than is Dr. Farnsworth, who during his early life won an international reputation as an artist after having studied under several well-known masters. After spending several years devoted to his art, he took up photography as an hobby and soon became the most noted photographer in his native city of Boston. When motion pictures were first shown, Dr. Farnsworth became greatly interested in them and became desirous of having a motion picture camera. That was at the time when the Motion Picture Patents Company controlled not only the projecting machines but also the cameras for making the films. Dr. Farnsworth after a great deal of effort secured a motion picture camera from the Patents Company—the first motion picture camera that was ever owned in this country outside of the Patents company. With this camera he traveled all over the world making pictures which he used for lecture purposes.

He then became interested in the exhibiting end of the business and devoted a large portion of his time in directing several theaters in the city of Cleveland, after which he became associated with the production end of the industry. During the time that he has been associated with pictures Dr. Farnsworth has been responsible for many of the great advancements which have come. It was he who first devised a method for eliminating static from the films, as well as making great steps forward in the use of lenses which have advanced the industry to such a point that motion pictures can be made under conditions that were impossible before his method became effective. In speaking of the new corporation Dr. Farnsworth said: "There was a time, in the early beginning when the success in the manufacturing of motion pictures depended on their novelty, pure and simple. But that time has passed. Men who succeed in the future must be men who are well qualified, and know the business from every angle, the handling of scripts, the technique of the studio, the casting of a production, its staging, as well as the many scientific details of the laboratories and the photography. I believe that we have in this corporation just such an organization. Mr. Dixon, who took an active part in the making of "The Birth of a Nation," and who is thoroughly familiar with the workings of that organization on which has, thus far never been surpassed, agrees with me that in the Mastercraft Photoplay Corporation we have an organization which will, within a very short time, be one of the potent factors of the film industry."

E. H. Sherburne, known in the world of finance as one of the biggest sugar men in the country, and who also has been interested in the manufacture of pictures for some time, will be the treasurer of the new corporation, while Mr. Isaac Wolper, also of Boston, will be an important member of the board of directors.

Dr. Farnsworth left New York last week for California, where he will devote his energies to arranging the details at the California studios of the new company, which will be located in Hollywood, just outside of Los Angeles. Work on the first production is expected to start within four or five weeks. The name of the production has not been announced as yet further than the fact that it will be a vizualization of one of Thomas Dixon's most popular novels. Before leaving Dr. Farnsworth stated that he had about closed negotiations with one of the foremost directors in the country to handle the making of the picture, and that he would announce the director's name as soon as the agreement was consummated.

In addition to the western studios, the Mastercraft Photoplay Corporation have purchased a large tract of land covering a little over fifty acres which is located on the Fellsway, a beautiful natural park at Medford, Mass., just outside of Boston, which will be known as Film Land City. This site, which will be used for the eastern studios of the new company, are located in one of the most picturesque spots in the east, and within its boundaries is great diversification of natural scenery which lends itself most admirably to the making of photoplays. The building of the eastern studios has been under way for some time past, and the buildings that are now nearing completion include a large executive building, laboratories, an administration building, together with large studios built with every modern equipment for the production of the most stupendous cinema offerings.

It is the intention of the new corporation to make not less than four or more than seven productions a year, but into the making of these productions will go the limitless resources of a great organization which proposes to make photoplays of such magnitude as will constitute an entire evening's entertainment, mounted in the same lavish manner that has won fame for Thomas Dixon the world over.

Amy Leah Dennis

AMY LEAH DENNIS, whose cut is herewith reproduced, has arrived in Gotham. She came by way of the Twentieth Century Limited train the other day, and is now stopping at a friend's house in New York, where she will continue to reside during her stay in the metropolis. Her contract with the Selig People in Chicago expired recently, where she appeared in the Selig-Hoyt Comedies in the leading roles of these pictures.

Amy Leah Dennis.

Although her specialty is one, two and three-reel subjects, she has appeared in several features of multiple-reel length. Only recently she appeared opposite Lew Fields in "The Barker," in which she shared the honors with the famous actor. Her work in this production provoked favorable comment from the trade press.

Miss Dennis is still in her teens, yet she has already won her laurels in the photoplay world. She possesses unusual talent in productions of a humorous nature, but at the same time, has displayed much ability in parts calling for character studies of a more serious nature.

Miss Dennis excells in outdoor sports, and can ride horseback, swim and perform athletic stunts with the agility of an expert. She has a winsome smile and a charming personality which lend an added charm to her appearance in motion pictures.

She is at present considering several offers from picture concerns, but as yet has not definitely decided for which company she will work.

How It Is Done at the Strand

A Discussion of Methods Which Have Actually Been Worked Out Successfully.

By Harold Edel, Managing Director.

IT has been noticed at the Strand Theater that usually, when a single male singer appears, his offering is enhanced with special effects in the way of drops and lighting, while in the case of the female artist this is not as a rule evident. The reason for this is about the same as that which prompts the editor of the newspaper to print the picture of a woman more readily than that of a man. An attractive female artist can keep the interest of an audience centered upon herself throughout the entire length of her offering as a result of her personal charm and with the aid of graceful gestures, which, of course, cannot be used by the man. In other words, we have accepted the statement that woman has more magnetism than man. Thus when it comes to a question of the rendition of a vocal number the female singer, as a rule, immediately has the advantage over the male, and to make up for this handicap we make special effort to enhance his presentation. It is for this reason also that we allow a woman to render one selection during the entire time she is on the stage, while a man usually presents two numbers in the same length of time. A change of numbers also tends to keep up, if not increase, the audience's interest in the artist.

If the audience of the Strand, or similar theaters, consisted entirely of dyed-in-the-wool music fans this would not be necessary to such an extent, for then a voice of merit would in itself satisfy. However, when an audience consists of strict motion picture fans, semi-music lovers and ardent patrons of high-class music, in order to satisfy all it is necessary to present more than a good voice. The rendition of a number must be made interesting to the person who comes to the theater only because Mary Pickford's picture is there, as well as the patron who purchases a ticket chiefly to hear the Strand's musical program. It is therefore necessary for an exhibitor to look upon the presentation of his musical program differently from the man who holds a musicale for lovers of music only.

As an illustration: Recently one of our beautiful female artists rendered one vocal number in the time alloted to her appearance on the stage. With merely a spotlight upon the young woman throughout the entire number she presented her offering, enhancing her wonderful voice with a personality that was equally wonderful, and receiving a storm of applause. Later in the evening, even though he was a finished artist and a handsome man, one of our male singers, in the same length of time consumed by the young woman, presented two shorter numbers, each with special drops and lighting. Though he was personally just as talented an artist as the female singer, and despite the fact that his two numbers were exceptionally suited to his voice, the female singer received just as much applause without the stage effects as he did. This I have observed time and again.

It was some time ago when I noticed that the applause given men did not average up to that accorded women singers, and ever since I have tried to make up for this in the manner above described. As an illustration of just how we enhance the presentation of a male vocal offering I will cite the effects accorded Herbert Waterous, the prominent bass soloist, during his recent appearance at the Strand. As usual he was scheduled to sing two numbers, "Out on the Deep" and "There's a Million Heroes," the latter having been selected for its patriotic possibilities in presentation.

"Out on the Deep" was rendered before an appropriate drop, with the spotlight on the singer, suitable changing of lighting taking place on the drop, the house itself being semi-lighted. Then as direct contrast the house was thrown into darkness and on the stage appeared a drop of the White House, in the evening sky of which appeared the faces of the various celebrities mentioned in the lively song. During the second chorus, at the psychological moment, the screen was lowered and motion pictures of marching troops from various parts of the country were projected. Applause punctuated the singing of this song every few seconds as different visualizations were offered. Thus the patriotic effect of the song was brought out to best advantage, and, to use the vernacular of the theater, it stopped the show at practically every performance.

Various exhibitors have failed to make their vocal selections popular because they have not analyzed their audience enough to learn that the presentation of these numbers is an art in itself, just as the presentation of a photoplay is. Another thing, it must always be kept in mind that the numbers rendered may be "high brow," so to speak, but they must be popular among the average American audience. In trying to give a high-class performance it is the natural tendency to present "high-brow" music, even though it is foreign to the average high-class motion picture audience, which is a big mistake. To again fall into the stage vernacular, if it goes "over the heads" of the audience it does more harm than good. There is hardly a limit to the music which is regarded as "high brow" and yet is familiar to the layman, and it is such music, and only such music, that the exhibitor should dare to offer to the mixed public comprising his audience.

Charlotte Granville

CHARLOTTE GRANVILLE, now with the Empire All-Star Corporation, is one of the many distinguished English actresses that the Empire has had in their various pictures. Miss Granville made her first appearance on any stage in London when—after the death of her husband—she determined to go on the stage. She has played with all the foremost actors and been under all the more prominent managements.

Charlotte Granville.

Miss Granville understudied Mrs. Patrick Campbell in "The Second Mrs. Tanqueray" and on one occasion played the part at ten minutes' notice. In "Lady Windemere's Fan" Miss Granville was Erlynne, a part created in America by Margaret Anglin, and was the Queen in Forbes-Robertson's production of "Hamlet." One of the parts Miss Granville most joyed playing was that of Mme. d'Semiano in "The Marriage of Kitty." Miss Granville also played with William Gillette in his famous "Sherlock Holmes" play and strangely enough was the only English person in that typically English play.

When Weedon Grossmith came over here some five years ago, he brought Miss Granville with him and she has remained ever since, for she greatly enjoys both America and American audiences.

In pictures—which Miss Granville declares she finds most interesting—Miss Granville has been with Alice Brady, the Famous Players and is now playing in "The Girl and the Judge," in which the Empire are starring Olive Tell.

The present was of particularly great interest to Miss Granville, as she is not only a soldier's daughter, her father having been Major-General Stuart, a celebrated Irish officer, but also her only son is now in training in Canada. Miss Granville also lost five cousins in two weeks, and she herself wanted to enter the Red Cross, but having no training, felt that she could be of more help in other ways.

WHO KNOWS ROY WALLACE?

The following letter to the Moving Picture World explains itself. Anyone knowing the whereabouts of the person named will confer a favor by informing Mr. Kaufman:

Memphis, Tenn., Dec. 29, 1917.

Motion Picture World, New York City.

Gentlemen: On Thursday, Nov. 15, we shipped the following eight reels to Roy Wallace, at Ingomar, Miss.: "Hans and Fritz in Barnyard"; "American War News," No. 3; "Nature Fakers"; "Long Shift," two reeler; "Vampire," two reeler; "Man of the Hills."

We were under the impression that this party operated a theater there, but when our films were not returned we investigated the matter, and we learned that he was operating a traveling show, and although we have made repeated efforts through letters, wires, and finally through the sheriff, we have been unable to secure the return of these film, we would appreciate you calling the attention of the exhibitors and exchange men throughout the country of the fact that these film have been take by Wallace, and that any information that will assist us in locating these reels will be appreciated, and for the person to wire us at our expense. Yours truly,

Advertising for Exhibitors

Cutting Costs.

NOWADAYS printing costs are soaring, and some former advertisers have cut out their programs instead of cutting down the costs. The trouble is that too few advertisers realize the nice points of the printing business. They go to a printer and order a job. When they find the job costs too much, they stop publication. They do not know the short cuts. Only this morning a correspondent writes that he is going to get out a program with a cover in three colors. Last week we had a cover proposition of our own to face. A fraternal weekly was costing so much that it was determined to abolish it. It was finally agreed that the issue would continue if the cost could be cut to a certain figure. One of the cost problems was this same three-color matter. It was found that the cover design carried so little of the third color as to scarcely matter, yet this third color required an elaborate lock-up and make-ready, and where there are more than two printings this cost is excessive, since the form must be brought to exact registry with previous impressions. Cutting out the third printing, and working a benday effect, gave practically the same results with two colors. Printing covers for four months at a time effected a still greater saving. Not many theatres use two colors on the cover, and fewer still use three, but many can effect a saving by having two or four covers in one color printed up at once. The sheet coming from the paper mill is larger than the sheet that goes out. Cut it so that the press can take four covers at once. Have one section form for the first week, another for the second, third and fourth. The press is made ready and runs the issue for four weeks printed on one side. Then the sheets are cut apart and the weekly program is printed up on the other side as the program comes, though many houses can now print four issues at once, knowing in advance what the attraction will be. Changing the style of type may help some, using a different paper may give another saving, and perhaps changing the size of the sheet will enable the printer to buy stock to greater advantage. In the case of the paper referred to a saving of more than $200 on an issue of 8,000 copies was effected simply through the use of common sense and the application of practical knowledge. You cannot make as great a saving, perhaps, but unless you have already gotten down to bottom facts, the chances are that there are some economies you can practice without materially affecting the cost of the job.

Here's Dan Donellan.

This department is not an annex to Popular Picture Personalities, but we are running this cut of Dan Donellan because he is an old friend of readers of this department. Among other things, Mr. Donellan was the editor of the V-L-S-E Pals, brought out by that company's Seattle office in the good old days, and he wrote most of the ideas we used to clip and pass along to our readers. The three exchange organs that stand out most prominently were Pals, George E. Carpenter's Real Reels and L. J. Scott's press sheet for the Kansas City branch of V-L-S-E. They were helpful because they were based upon ripe experience and a real knowledge of the business, but the high cost of white paper and changes in the business overtook all three. Mr. Scott has gone to be a soldier. Carpenter is a manager, and putting into practice the things he used to preach; while Mr. Donellan is now branch manager for the Mutual in Minneapolis, and the Tom North organ plays no more. He started in the lumber business, but came over to films, and has been with Triangle and Super Pictures, as well as V-L-S-E and Mutual The stuff he used to write for Pals was really helpful, and it did much to make business for that branch by showing the exhibitors how to make money with the films they hired. While Pals was running there was more expert advertising done on the upper west coast than there is now, for the paper spurred them to it. Now service-from-the-home-office has replaced the old exchange house organs, and some good ones got the axe.

Dan Donellan.

Want to Correspond With China?

Lately we mentioned the very complete house organ of the Empire theater, Tientsin, China, and the Pavilion. Marshall Sanderson, sending the third issues, writes that he would like to exchange with managers in America having similar house organs. Very few here have sixteen page real magazines, but those who have should address Mr. Sanderson at the Tientsin house. He writes that the little paper is produced entirely by Chinese labor, even to the making of the half tones and setting the type, but that his own knowledge of the printing end helped him not a little. There are two or three pages of editorial comment each week that are worth while, and evidently an editor-manager has his troubles, for the most recent issue has to throw a rock at a man who objects to sitting in the three-dollar seat swith American soldiers who were supposed to have come in for a dollar. The text is unusually clean, and this is the more remarkable in that the Chinese type setters do not know the language in which they work. There was a flood in Tientsin in October that caused the theatre to shut down, while the employees manned the pumps to keep the water in the cellar and out of the auditorium, and between floods and revolutions and epidemics little things like delayed express shipments seem absolutely peaceful and comfortable.

Hard Sense.

Philip Wright Whitcomb, of the Triangle's London publicity department, speaking of the capital booklets he gets out, remarks:

> Of course the idea back of it all is that the best way to make an exhibitor enthusiastic about a picture is to get his attention not on to exercising some fancied power of judgment but on to definite mind-pictures of ways in which he can easily make money with the film.

That seems to be good enough to paste up on the desk of every publicity man. But give them practical ways of making money with the film. We have seen some suggestion books that are far from helpful merely because not sufficient thought was given to the manner in which the schemes would probably work out.

Marine Press Work.

In sending in a special department in the Stockton, California, Mail, for the new Turner and Dahnken house there, our news correspondent adds that it was gotten out by H. Jobelmann, director of publicity for the circuit, in addition to his regular work. He went to Stockton to be on the ground, and it was so warm that he did most of the writing sitting up in the bath tub with the typewriter (machine) drawn up alongside. Five pages are given wholly to the new house and its makers and sub-contractors in addition to general mention. The special supplement is growing common, and makes a fine opening drive, but Mr. Jobelmann need not think that he was the first to find out how handy a bath tub and typewriter are in combination.

Conservation.

Harold B. Franklin, of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, N. Y., sends in a newspaper advertisement and comments: "A remarkable thing about the ad this week is that, notwithstanding its small size, it stands out as the dominating advertisement on the sheet." This should not greatly astonish Mr. Franklin, for he generally does make his small advertisements stand out, but this display is a little stronger than the usual run. It is two threes and the cut of the lower half of the page shows that it stands out well above the rest of the stuff, though its one weak point is that it does not intimately connect the display with the house name. Putting the name into a separate panel by extending the side lines and running a second bar across the top would have worked better, but the advertisement, as it stands, is a good study in the use of black in the mass. For a change the orchestra is here shown in white against black, and for a moment it does not show up as well as the black on white. It looks more like an irregular white space than the familiar trademark, though we think that most regulars will soon perceive that the orchestra is among those present. Mr. Franklin takes a small space, but he uses good judgment in his conservation. A two fours or even a two fives would have shown up to no greater advantage. The only difference would have been in the cost of the advertisement, and the man who can make two threes do what two fives could accomplish is a real Hooverizer of space. But Mr. Franklin achieves an even better result with his program. Probably you remember the well-executed drawn design he used on his front. We think that the new effect is even neater and it gives him space for an announcement as well. A cut is a good thing for the front page, but a type announcement that is not too full means even more to the house, and Mr. Franklin gets both. It is necessary to turn out a nice looking job. That always is desirable, but the first thing to be considered is the advertising value to the house rather than the artistic value of the front. The front should be as artistically attractive as possible, but it is here very clearly shown that a front can be artistic and hardworking as well. The new design is in some ways more attractive than the old. It will work just as hard and the type announcement will triple its value to the theater. Remember, in planning your work, that the first duty is to the house. The program must appeal to the patron, but if it can be made appealing and hard-working as well, then make it both. We also reproduce one of the inside pages. This is the familiar third of a page to the house, but note that there is no question as to what is program and what is not, and still both advertisers are given a distinctive and individual display. The "program" panel cuts the top from the corset ad, and also cuts the corset ad from the program, while the twelve-point rule does the same office for the lower display. Mr. Franklin is a liberal education in how to do things right.

Wants Three Colors.

T. S. Daley, of the Casino, Halifax, N. S., writes, inclosing some house programs, and asks for comment. He adds:

> I intend enlarging the program to twenty-four pages, with a fancy three-color cover, but before doing so, I would like to have your suggestions. You will note from this letter head that I am really a member of Herr Richardson's tribe, and intended asking him to give the program the once over, but was afraid that he might start talking light rays and all that stuff he raves about.

Mr. Daley has his own letter head showing that he runs the program and a repair business as side line to shooting the picture to shooting the picture to the screen via Brother Richardson's light rays (Richardson spells it raise when he talks to the boss, and he is just as enthusiastic about that). His program is now a sixteen, 5½ by 8¾. Sometimes he uses a design front page, but he throws it overboard for cuts when he can get them. Of the five issues sent three are design fronts and two have cuts so large that even the name of the house does not show. We think that the value of the cut is not so great as the value of a regular front that comes to be recognized and sought after. Just what he means by three-color cover fronts we do not know. Probably he has in mind some of the ready-printed program covers. If these can be had from a Canadian firm at a fair price they will work well enough, but it would scarcely pay to import them, and if he has in mind his own three-color jobs he is advised to quit before he begins. There are lots better ways of growing grey and bald headed and crazy. As a matter of fact we fail to see that a colored cover will help materially. Make the contents of the sheet so attractive that people will want it, and a plain cover will be ample. The trouble with the program as it stands, from a circulation point of view, is that it carries too little reading matter. One issue carries a list of fourteen picture players born in Canada spread over half a page, another issue gives a page and a half of notes, a third gives about the same, and a fourth nearly two pages. The fifth offers nothing at all. Mr. Daley is playing too hard to his advertisers, not realizing that he must pay his readers for reading the advertisements else they will be passed over. On a sixteen he should offer at least three and, if possible, four pages of well chosen clip stuff or original material, spreading this so that there is some material on every advertising page, though for this purpose the house program may class as reading matter. It is not enough that he fills in with type matter. It must be the sort of material that people want to read; that they desire to read so acutely that they'll ask for an issue when they fail to receive one. When he can get out this sort of sheet then he can deliver to the advertisers the goods he is charging them for, and may even raise the prices. They will all come in for a time on a new advertising proposition, but they will not stay in unless they find that their patrons are reading the program, and they will be at some pains to find out if they do. Good text is better than three color covers as an attractor, but it must be good text, and not the sort of stuff the average press agent writes. He should not be afraid to rewrite. In some of the issues we note display advertisements for some of the plays. Some of these would be more effective if done into running stories. He should by all means have an editorial page, and make it largely local, and he should keep all advertising off this page. Like too many program editors he is looking more at the income than eventual results. It pays better to gain the good will of the reader and then sell that to the advertiser than to sell him so many inches of white space.

Drops Into Verse.

H. A. Chenoweth drops into verse to explain to the people of Thompsonville, Mass., that he is going away from there. Evidently even he could not make the small town pay, so he is moving back to one of the Goldstein Brothers' other houses in Springfield, and the only revenge he takes is the verse. He is a better manager than poet, but that he is a good manager is shown by the fact that, in leaving town he does not scold his late patrons for not coming more often. He just tells them he has gone down to Springfield, where he hopes to see them often. The temptation to throw rocks is strong, but he parts on good terms and will probably carry the crowd with him. The town is still a bit too small, so he frankly admits an error in judgment and goes back to a larger place. It is good policy, even if the poetry might be improved upon.

Strip Advertisements.

Lately we showed the Bleich style of advertisement, running across the page in the newspapers. Here is another good example, this time from Charles Decker's Movie Fan, Grand Junction, Colorado. This is a house organ advertisement, in which the various attractions are treated at length in the reading columns and less argument is required than would be needed for straight newspaper work, but the form is a good one to follow in a weekly paper if the days are made less conspicuous with the gained space going to the chief titles.

The Blue and the Grey.

The Kozy theater, Paducah, Ky., offers a pretty program in blue on gray paper somewhat against the principles of Judge Priest and other of Irvin Cobb's home folks, perhaps, but an unusually good combination. And to add to the effect the front cut shows a man kissing the stars and stripes in advertisement of "The Slacker." The printer knows his job, but we think it would be better to get him to draw in a little that a part of the back page may be used for house talk. With a 6 by 9 there should be some house talk, because there is room enough. In these days of high costs a sheet of paper nine by twelve inches should be made to work overtime to pay for itself, and here the only house talk is less than four lines on the front page. One way to cut costs is to make programs smaller. Another and better way is to make them work harder.

Coupon Stamp Books.

The Theater Louisiana, Baton Rouge, La., offers for sale coupon books for the payment of the war tax, explaining that the scarcity of the copper coinage makes this step necessary, and asking those who do not purchase books to bring pennies, as the house is unable to make change. Entirely apart from the scarcity of pennies the coupon book is a good scheme. It seems much less to pay a quarter once than to pay a penny twenty-five time or two cents twelve times. They get the tax off their minds, and are ready to come at the old ten or fifteen cent price. With a little thought the war tax may be made a business builder instead of a nuisance.

Simple and Good.

Terry Ramsaye says "an exhibitor" uses a stunt for "The Lost Express," but does not say which one. Maybe he thought it out himself. Anyhow, the idea is a scenic set with a train running into a tunnel and returning unseen to its starting point "by a clever arrangement." That is not very informative, but if the scene model showed both ends of the tunnel and the train ran down an incline within the tunnel instead of running out from the opposite side, then the device would be simple and clever. You can get—possibly borrow—a small electric railroad. Get also one of the tin tunnels used, but have the track run down an incline to a space under the model instead of running out on the track that comes from the outlet. Have enough trackage underneath to permit the spectator to wonder where the train went to, then bring it up to the surface again behind a profile. Meantime a sign flashes asking "What becomes of THE LOST EXPRESS?" Instead of the trackage in the lower space, some device might be employed to shut off the current for a moment. It might be possible to work this with some toy or department store, using their window space and supplying the setting while the store furnishes the train and tracks. An elaborate display can be made that will advertise both the serial and toy trains, bringing good to both the store and the theater. That is the real essence of advertising. Get others to help for their share of the advertising. Before Christmas time such a display could have served the purpose of a Christmas window and would have been worth enough to the store to warrant special advertising.

Cutouts for Fronts.

A. C. Raleigh, of the Rialtom, Butte, Mont., sends in something new in the way of house front work. Probably most exhibitors have some sort of a sign in front of the house, and most of them have a flashing sign in preference to one with a steady illumination because it more quickly and surely catches the eye. Mr. Raleigh goes a bit further and uses mechanical cut outs above the lettering. One cut shows the Julian

Eltinge sign with the wig on and off and the other gives the Hart and God's Man and the Law. There is a certain amount of camera distortion that detracts from the appearance of the cuts for the reason that the exposures had to be made at an angle, but the idea shows clearly. Mr. Raleigh writes:

> I am sending you, under separate cover, several photographs of movable cut outs which have proven to be good business-getters for us.
> Two of these show the moving features for Julian Eltinge in "The Countess Charming." One shows the hat and wig in place and the other, the hat and wig removed, giving a real display of female impersonation.
> Another shows Mary Pickford in "The Little American." In this the circle behind the figure revolved.
> A third advertises "God's Law and Man's." The figure bows, the hands running out over the incense burner. At night, I used red fire in the burner, which greatly enhanced the effect.
> The Bill Hart display was a "still," but thows the advantageous use of black and white over ordinary "paper."
> These displays are placed on the marquis and run from eight to twelve feet in height. The figures must be painted in block colors as the ordinary "poster" colors do not show at any great distance. I use black and white with the shadows in gray or blue—all "blocked" in. The work is done on ordinary building (compo.) board and the movements are accomplished by means of a ⅛-H. P. motor and a small worm gear. The connections are made with pieces of 1 inch by 2 inches and whenever a pause is necessary, I cut a slot or slit, in the connecing rod.

I also use the little contrivances known as "Skeedoodle" plugs to great advantage.

In these displays, three, six or twenty-four sheets show hardly at all and air-brush work is nil. Black and white are the most effective and the figures can be painted by any good painter or sign writer by the "squaring-off" method or pantagraph.

I also use boxes—twelve inches deep and two feet high—in which I place cut-out letters with a double backing of crepe paper and lights—set in series—in the box. This shows the lettering against any color background one may choose—rather different from the ordinary electric sign in that the background is lighted and the letters are not.

It is more easily read at a distance, too. A "Skeedoodle" plug makes a "flasher" of such a sign. I generally use three boxes, one on top of the other—thus:

TODAY
PICKFORD

A big advantage is the inexpensiveness.

I will be very glad to give more detailed information on any of this to anyone who desires it. These displays have proven valuable to us and I believe that they will go big wherever placed.

I also am sending you some samples of recent ads for the reason that they have done business for us and having been proven, may be of value to other picture people.

Mr. Raleigh, who, by the way, got out that unusually clever Klemmerklink booklet for the Clemmer, Spokane, some time since, puts his finger on one big point when he remarks that for signs of the sort he uses on the house front black and white is best. Use air-brush work for stuff that will be seen at close range and use bold black and white for stuff to be seen from a distance where nice detail will be wasted. The shadow box for announcements sounds good. The illumined letter is so old that it no longer attracts marked attention. The illumined background is something new. With properly selected paper for the backing and two or more series of colored lights, the color of the backing may be made to seem to change. The advertisements Mr. Raleigh mentions are all pictorial, for he is an artist as well as an advertising man. They made business, so they must be good, but we are inclined to think that the type is made to take the second place. We would make the titles a trifle more prominent, and not trust quite so much to the portraits.

For Boxes.

The Victoria, Buffalo, N. Y., uses a new idea for its date boxes in a recent program. It is made up of eight point cap repetitions of the name of the star and the title, but set apart with one-point rule instead of being set solid as a border, in the old-fashioned way. We don't know what the printer will get, but it should look more or less like this:

The box goes all the way around the date. And we like Mr. Hyman's lead for the formal program. It starts off:

————Peep With Us————

¶ You will fly away to a romance spot on the wings of "The Moth" on Friday and Saturday, November 30th and December 1st, for that is the title of the vehicle Norma Talmadge will offer.

The entire program is given with a paragraphic punch to each subject. It winds up with an allusion to a singer "with his silken voice and croony ballads." That's a fine line, but if you use it, make certain that the printer keeps the r in "croony" or they'll be expecting ragtime.

Understanding.

APPLES have been falling from trees since Eve first plucked the fruit in the Garden of Eden. For centuries they fell from trees, and the world was content with the fact that they did fall. It remained for Newton to discover why they fell to the ground instead of into the sky. He did not have to discover the laws of gravitation in order to make the apples fall, but the discovery of those laws did much to solve age-long problems.

Be a Newton of the photoplays. Do not accept facts. Get at the why of facts. Reason out for yourself the facts you are told. Learn the reason for those facts. Do not accept the fact that a little child or the flag of the United States can save an otherwise poor story to some extent. You know that it does, for you have all to frequent demonstrations of that fact, but find out why. If you do, you will discover that the reason is an appeal to sentiment. You will learn that an appeal to patriotism or the love of innocence will move an audience. If you carry your thought deeper you will find that the same appeal, more subtly made, will give much greater strength to your idea. If you look below the surface you will find that the waving flag is the obvious application of the same idea that makes truly great the more intelligent story with the theme of patriotism. You will find that the waving flag brings momentary cheers. You will find that the deeper appeal makes a more lasting impression. You will arrive at the fact that while claptrap will make for momentary applause the greater refinement will make for lasting reputation. Through the study of the cheap and the bromidic you will eventually arrive at the point where your touch on the emotions is so certain, so strong that your plays are in demand. Any fairly intelligent writer can turn out a story to be saved by "hokum," so these plays are not in great request, but a story with the same theme, more carefully treated, can command a better price and will be found to be in more steady demand.

Analyze the sources of appeal. Do not merely say to yourself that people will cheer the flag. That is merely the premise to the real study. Look deeper. With that one fact established learn that you can do better with a more intelligent application of the idea. In time you will be so well versed in appeal that you can play upon the sympathies of your spectator at will. You cannot if you merely accept facts. You must know the reasons for those facts. You must go below the fact to arrive at the cause of the fact.

It is the same way in matters of technique. You must not merely know that this or that should be done or avoided. Know why the advice is given. Examine it from all angles, and you will then make intelligent application of the rules and write better plays.

Pull the Strings Right.

If you have ever seen puppet shows you must have noticed that there has been a lot of difference in the various shows. We have seen full dramas played with a skill that almost created the impression of reality and we have seen performances that reminded us of a child playing with a toy theater. The puppets were all the same; mannikins with strings to their various members, but some of them were worked so carefully that their jaws opened and shut with the words they were supposed to speak and others merely opened and shut their mouths with more or less regular movement. Some actually seemed to gesture while others merely raised or lowered their arms. It was all a matter of the man behind the scenes who worked the strings and read the lines. The artist manipulator created the appearance of reality that at times was startling. The incompetent merely pulled the strings with no thought beyond mere movement. It is pretty much the same with writing plays; you have the puppets—the characters—but it is what you make them do and the way you work them that counts. One of the best of the puppet masters told us once that his father had been a famous manipulator in Europe. He played with puppets where other children played with dolls. He was working in the gallery, in ensembles, when he was barely large enough to lean over the rail, and scarcely strong enough to do more than move his dolls about. He grew up in the business and had come to a point of perfection that few could hope to attain, yet he strung his puppets in precisely the same way as did the man who could not hold the interest in a "family" theater as an opening act. It was all in the way he did it; inherent ability, plus study and experience. Your play-people are but mannikins who act in accordance with the strings you pull. Make them seem as human and as convincing as possible. Make them do the things real people do in the way real people would do them. Create the illusion of reality to the highest degree within your power. Do not be content merely to have them move about. Have them move about naturally. Study real people and seek to reproduce their actions and modes of thought; not slavishly copying actions and motives, but studying motives and actions in general, so that your mannikins will move and act naturally while doing other, but similar things. You must make the people real to yourself if you would make them real to your audiences. You must, so far as possible, hide the mechanism from all save the trained manipulators, and if you can hide the action from them, as well, then you are truly an author. It is all a matter of practice and perseverance. Harry Kellar used to have one pass that was a thing to wonder at. Other magicians used to admire his technique as they watched his work, because they knew what he was doing, but the audience never saw the move. All his practice had gone to conceal that move; to make his audience unconscious of the movement, and he succeeded so well that even the trained watchers, knowing what he was about to do, could not see him do it, and gasped with admiration. It should be the same way in writing. Kellar's skill was all due to constant practice, and the proper handling of the tricks of writing comes from the same assiduous practice. Nothing can take its place; not even inherent ability, for even ability must be trained. When you plan your puppet shows make your figures so realistic that even editors will forget they are puppets. Make that your aim, and through constant experiment you can achieve your object.

Refreshing Ribbons.

Several machines are on the market for renewing typewriter ribbons. Most of them merely refresh the ribbon, though one employs the word "re-ink" instead. As a rule the refreshing fluid is nothing more than kerosene oil or some similar fluid, but the better scheme is to use three-in-one oil mixed with gasoline or benzine in the proportion of about six parts gas to one of oil. This is for the reason that with the oil alone the ribbon is apt to be made too fresh, and must season until the oil dries out. With the gasoline mixture the more volatile oil will evaporate quickly and leave your ribbon more evenly coated.

An excellent device, if you wish for something better than a brush, is one of the felt or felt-covered wheels used in certain forms of envelope moisteners. This is screwed to a stick by means of a round headed screw. Two wire nails are driven into the stick, one each side of the wheel, so that the ribbon is pressed against the face of the wheel. The ribbon is put into this contrivance and passed from one side of the machine to the other. Then it is removed from the typewriter, "pulled down" until the roll is as tightly wound as possible, and left for twenty-four hours, after which it is rolled more loosely and placed in an air tight box until wanted again. The idea of winding tightly is to ensure an even distribution of the fluid. Opening the folds slightly permits the excess to evaporate.

As a rule the ribbon may be treated three or four times, but it will grow lighter each time, for the fluid merely softens the pigment on the edges and unused spaces and flows it over the entire ribbon, bringing new color into the type track.

Script Changes.

"Why do directors persist in changing stories?" wails an author who takes his work seriously. And we remember, about a year ago, in discussing a fiction story, the same writer told how differently he would have handled that plot. He had it all figured out, but of course he could do nothing with it, except in his own mind. With the director it is the same, but different. He has his own ideas as to how any given story should be told, but he has no sense of editorial courtesy. He takes himself more seriously than he does the author, and so he tells the story his own way because he regards the story as his own production and not a realization of the work of the author. We can get his point of view even while we reprehend it. What the author has done is all wrong, because it is not done his (the director's) way, so he does it his way, and gets a story that satisfies himself, though it may not please the public. Then if someone else cuts the picture a third mind undertakes to tell the story the "right" way and confusion is worse confounded. Sometimes the changes make for the betterment of single situation, but they never make for general improvement because the flavor of the author is partly lost. It is like putting curry powder in vanilla ice cream. Both are good in their way, but they do not mix, and it is but seldom that the director can so closely approximate the ideas of the author as to strengthen without changing the flavor.

Technique of the Photoplay

By

EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

A book replete with practical pointers on the preparation of stories for the screen, answering the hundred and one questions which immediately present themselves when the first script is attempted. A tested handbook for the constant writer of picture plots. "Straight-from-the-shoulder" information from an author with a wealth of real "dollars-and-cents" experience.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost, will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Conditions in Halifax.

Shortly after the Halifax disaster Brother A. A. MacDonald, Secretary I. A. Local Union 497, wrote the editor setting forth conditions as applies to the theaters and operators of the stricken city. I handed the letter to some one to read, and whoever it was failed to return it. I at once wrote Brother MacDonald, asking for a copy of the letter, to which communication he replied as follows:

F. H. Richardson—Dear Sir and Brother: Yours at hand. Only one of our members, Brother Fred P. Metzler, was injured. He had just finished shaving and was standing in front of a window when the explosion occurred. He received a bad cut in the face and one over the heart, but is doing nicely—able to be out and getting along O. K. The rest of us operators escaped unhurt, but most of us lost everything we had, as nearly all our married members lived in the North End, and the North End was simply wiped out of existence. After the explosion came fire, and on top of that followed a snowstorm, then cold rain Sunday, and on Tuesday came the worst snowstorm Halifax ever experienced in December. And it has been pretty much the same ever since, so you see the elements were against us. But every cloud has its silver lining, so 'tis said, and from the ruin will arise a cleaner, a better and a bigger Halifax.

As for our theaters, here is the dope: The Casino, Manager R. MacAdam and his staff were unhurt. The theater itself is badly wrecked inside, but will soon be fixed up. The Empire, Manager George B. Metzler and staff escaped injury, except for Brother Fred Metzler, as before set forth. Roof of theater blown off. The King Edward, Manager George Conture and staff not injured. Theater badly wrecked; will take months to repair. The Acker, Manager L. R. Acker and staff safe. Theater roof badly wrecked. Will take months to repair. The Strand, J. M. Franklin, manager, and staff escaped uninjured. This house escaped with less damage than any other. Its front doors were blown in and all glass, of course, smashed. It was used as a shelter during the trying days which followed, with Yours Truly working four days and nights without sleep, feeding and doing what could be done for the sufferers within its walls. The Imperial, M. Hirsehorn, manager, and staff unhurt. Windows blown in but easily repaired. The Orpheus,, N. Gastonguay, manager (Gastonguay is president Maritime Province Exhibitors' League.—Ed.), and staff uninjured. Theater walls shaken and windows blown in, but can be repaired quickly. The Academy of Music, J. F. O'Connel, manager, and staff unhurt. Exterior badly wrecked. Will take months to repair. A. E. Wall, censor, is around again, but as I have not yet talked to him I do not know how his family fared.

And that is the full story. What is in the immediate future we do not know. Certainly business is utterly dead for the winter, at least, and we operators will have to get by as best we may. The International Alliance sent the local the sum of $100 for relief, which we thought was wonderful, considering that we were only organized August, 1917. Well, Brother Richardson, in the published description of your visit to our city you remarked that you would not come again until we smoothed down the bumps in the road over Mount Uniacke. Evidently some one took you at your word and did his best to do it! Surely after that it is up to you to come again. I wish for you a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

After reading this I want you, brother, to sit down and think for a moment. This little local is in the far northland. Its members have mostly lost everything they possess. In many instances their homes have been entirely wiped out of existence. The blizzards of winter are upon them, with prices of necessities of life soaring to the skies. Their theaters are wrecked, with probably only a dribble of business left for those few which can resume operation. The International, to its everlasting credit, promptly sent $100. It was, under the circumstances, liberal. But, after all, that sum is only a drop in a bucket as compared to the crying need. I shall attend the next session of my local and insist upon a liberal cash donation, also I WOULD SUGGEST THAT EVERY OPERATORS' LOCAL IN THE ALLIANCE MAKE A CONTRIBUTION AND MAKE IT AS LIBERAL AS POSSIBLE, within reason. Meanwhile such operators as have the kindness of heart to give to their solely tried brothers of Halifax, any sum from fifty cents up, may send it to this department. It will be promptly forwarded to the Halifax men, together with the name of the giver. This department starts the list with five dollars. Its editor personally adds two, making seven dollars. Now, boys, let us see what you are made of. This department has many thousands of readers. A long, hard winter faces the Halifax men. Show your colors. There is not one of you who cannot spare fifty cents to one dollar if you really want to. If the cause were not of extraordinary merit this department would not take it up. Please understand that the Halifax matter is entirely voluntary, because I know what a terrible situation the boys up there are facing.

All contributions will be acknowledged in this department.

New York Motion Picture Operators' Local 306	50.00

To Eastern Local Unions.

Don't forget that you are invited to attend, either by representative or as a body, Local Union 306's grand ball, Palm Garden, February 14. Take it from me there will be extremely high jinks on that particular night. Moving pictures will be taken, with four cameras, directed by a director of national reputation—D. W. Griffith if we can get him. Charles Unger and your Humble Servant have that matter in charge and fully intend to make it an event which will get into one or more of the topicals. Samuel L. Rothapfel will lead the grand march, and Brother Unger and I are encouraged to believe we will secure no less person than the Mayor of Greater New York to lead it with him, each accompanied, of course, by a Star of the starriest magnitude. Lighting effects are in the hands of F. H. Richardson, Will C. Smith and Sam Kaplin, president of 306. Leave it to us. We're going to get the operators talked about. And that is only a beginning. Be on the job. Come down, up or over to the Big Town. You're invited, through the Editor, who is intrusted with that task by Local 306.

Oh no, I'm not doing it all, by any manner of means. Looks like considerable for a fact, but my part is really a mere bag-o-shell. Local 306 is fixing to "kill 'em dead" the night of February 14. We'll be looking for you, so don't forget. Official invitation will reach you in due time.

San Antonio Comes Back at Sherman.

Local Union 407, San Antonio, Texas, by its secretary, Roger Abby, heads an article for the department: "Mr. Richardson Has Heavy Competition." The aforesaid article is in the form of a letter, reading as follows:

Mr. F. H. Richardson, Dear Sir and Brother: It was with much amusement we read the article published in November tenth issue, headed "To Suit Themselves," regarding the manner in which this local conducts its business. We deeply regret the pain, mental agony and misery caused Mr. Sherman of Corpus Christi. As a matter of fact that gentleman did receive one application blank from this local, but, without the formality of first having filled it out, returned same to us for action. We could not, however, taken action on a blank application, and he reported the matter to International headquarters, New York City, with result that we received from headquarters a very courteous letter stating Mr. Sherman's case. There was, however, an utter absence of rattling bones. The mater was simply brought to our attention by headquarters, with the suggestion that we give it consideration. But the one thing we are unable to understand is why Sherman, with his perfectly wonderful fountain of accumulated knowledge, should desire affiliation with a body of men who are so tremendously and hopelessly ignorant and whose business methods are so very, very crude. Perhaps you might be able to give us light on that point, Brother Richardson. And right here let me pause to remark that when you were in our city last April our boys were working for from five to eighteen dollars per week, holding contracts with just two houses, viz., the Majestic and the Grand. Yet, wonder of wonders, this aggregation of know-nothing boneheads now, six short months later, has contracts with eleven theaters and a scale of $21 for the chief and $12 for the relief. We are sorry to say it, but Sherman's thirty-five, twenty-five and fifteen sounds to us like male cow; also why does Sherman wish to leave a thirty-five dollar job to come here, where twenty-one would be the best he could possibly get? Don't sound reasonable, does it, Brother Richardson? As to Sherman's knowledge of projection, why the writer was personally acquainted with that same a year ago, and if he has transformed into a genius in so short a time he must have studied the Richardson Handbook nights, days, Sundays and holidays. I myself have a copy of the Handbook, but fail to find where it recommends brass tubing in place of fuses on a mercury arc rectifier, which same is precisely what a certain gentleman intimately connected with this discussion had when working, at the Soledad theater in this city. He blew three rectifier tubes in succession. We do not quite understand how you, Brother Richardson, gained your present standing as the world's greatest operator and projection scientist with Sherman of Corups Christi on the job. No, Local 407 would not be so cruel as to take Sherman from his present position. We feel that his employer would certainly go out of business were he to leave and maybe enter into a gradual decline through despair, grief and melancholy. Come now, Sherman, don't get angry, but back up your words. Local 407 is in the best of humor and not, as you thought, furious. We stand ready to back out statements, as they are founded on positive fact.

I feel it but right that Local 407 be allowed to answer, even though the same be a trifle warm. But this matter cannot be allowed to go further. Squabbles have not place in this department. My own remarks concerning this matter—in the former article, I mean, were made in good faith. Sherman's charge concerning failure of the local to answer letters seemed reasonable, because I myself wrote the San Antonio union three letters on an important business matter before it finally replied. I said in my remarks that the local seemed to need a shaking up. I repeat that assertion. That it has accomplished things this last summer is well, but, brothers, they are and were things which should have been accomplished long ago. At the time of my visit to your city conditions could not well have been much worse. And the local was calmly tolerating very bad conditions. I am indeed glad there has been improvement. I hope there will be more. As to the Sherman matter, why I, of course, have no first-hand knowledge, except that he did travel a long distance to hear a lecture on projection, whereas the San Antonio local made but a slight effort to get out the managers, and unless memory plays me false, did not even get out a 100 per cent. attendance of its own members—or of San Antonio operators at least. In justice to Sherman, I do not understand that he desires to move to San Antonio. He merely wishes to become a member of the I. A. At least that is the way I understood him. And now, my brothers, this little scrap will, I venture to say, do Local 407 no harm. It may hurt her feelings a little, but also it will cause her to examine her working machinery a little more closely, and maybe take up some lost motion, which is largely why I allowed the matter to get into print at all.

Submits a Solution.

C. B. Turner, Chicago, Illinois, submits the following as a possible solution to the trouble of Greenville, Ohio, October 20 issue. Greenville complained that his lower carbon, using a. c., burned away faster than the upper.

> Wasting away of the carbons in projection arc lamps is caused partly by volatilization of the carbons and partly by actual burning (oxidation) of the red-hot carbon at the tips, the latter being due to air coming into contact with the heated carbon surrounding the actual crater The tip of the upper carbon is for the most part surrounded by carbon vapor from the crater and from the lower carbon tip. The lower carbon volatilizes equally as fast as does the upper (a. c) and burns much faster because it gets more air. If there were no air in the lamphouse both carbons would burn equal; also they would last very much longer.

A somewhat novel theory Never heard it advanced before Personally I don't think it fits, brother Turner. Seems to me if it did all a. c. lower carbons would burn away faster than the uppers, but I have never noticed anything of the sort when I was operating and using a. c.

Aislelite.

The Brookins Company, Cleveland, Ohio, manufacturers of Aislelite, the same being a plan for lighting aisles in theaters, object to remarks of mine in an article published some time ago, and claim that Aislelite is the proper and best method for lighting the motion-picture theater. They cite as proof the fact that many theaters have installed it and many theater managers have approved it As to that, why it is no proof at all, because thousands of theaters have installed the most stupid auditorium lighting systems imaginable (not that I by any manner of means mean to place Aislelite in that class) and thousands of theater managers are today approving auditorium lighting which is literally a crime against the theater patron and the moving-picture industry.

Aislelite would, in my judgment, be a distinct advantage as an auxiliary to a lighting system which lighted the seating space from above and behind in a way which allowed no ray to reach the eye of the patron and no ray to reach the screen -direct rays are meant, of course. Where there are steps in the aisles Aislelite is particularly valuable. It unquestionably has its place in theater lighting, but as a complete lighting system this department cannot accept it We would, however, be more than glad to have the Brookins Company put out a system which would be right not only from the general viewpoint, but from the projection point of view as well, and we will be glad to, without money and without price, lay the plans for such a system before that company, or before any other company which will take the matter up and push it to completion.

There Is No Such Animal.

Here is a new one August Henning, Sheboygan, Wisconsin, turns up a new one as follows:

> My stero lens, Power's, 6-A projector, keeps getting weaker and weaker, and I don't know what the trouble is. The lens is clean and the light is very bright. The picture is not out of focus, but every month I have to move the lens down (out, I presume you mean.—Ed) on the rod. In the new position all is well for about thirty days, when it again begins to get out of focus and I must again move it out. If this keeps up I will soon have to put an extension on the lens rod. Can you tell me what the trouble is? Use d. c., throw 92 feet, picture 12 feet wide Five-eighths upper and half inch lower carbon. Condensers 8½ and 9½.

Well, waddy ye tink' o' dat! First and foremost your condenser combination is wrong. It makes for excessive loss of light in that your arc is altogether too far from the arc condenser. Better line up according to the chart in March 17 issue. As to the lens, why the only way in which its refractive power could be altered would be to change its curvature, and that is, of course, impossible. Are you sure some one is not having a little fun with you by changing your lens? That is the most logical solution, improbable as it may seem. Lenses do not change their power of refraction, or at least I know of no such thing having occurred, or any way in which it could occur. If any one does, why for heaven's sake let him stand up and be heard.

From St. Louis.

G. J. Taubler, St. Louis, Missouri, delivers himself of the following:

> In October 13 issue you say you have asked your readers whether they wish the list of questions published again in the department and that there were no replies. Some time since I wrote, setting forth my view as to how a man could earn a living and at the same time learn to be a first-class operator. If the questions and answers were in book form it would form one more volume for the too scant library of the school which ought to be established in every union, as I tried to explain. I will bet twenty dollars to a plugged Mexican nickel that if the license of the operator were made dependent upon answering the list of questions referred to not 10 per cent. of them would pass. Operators should be made to study those questions and many other things which would improve their work. In my opinion the questions and answers ought to be in book form for the good of all concerned, but if that is not to be, then by all means publish them in the department again. Every operator should have a set of the questions and answers, a Richardson Handbook, the Hawkens' Electrical Guide and a book on optics, of which there are many. Then, too, operators ought not to overlook the Photography Department of the Moving Picture World, since it contains much information on lenses and lens systems which would be of value to them. As you well know, this is an age when every man must specialize. Education, it has been aptly said, consists in knowing something about everything and everything about something. Well, the successful operator is that one who knows, as nearly as may be, everything about projection. I hope the time will come when exhibitors will realize the value of men and demand men in their operating rooms who have initiative—who can and will do things without being told.

All very well, friend Taubler. But what about the exhibitor or manager who desires precisely the opposite; who demands of his operator that he do not one solitary thing except that which he is told to do; who condemns initiative and wants his operator to follow his instructions, and that in face of the fact that he knows no more about the science of projection, or even the excellence in screen results, than an Egyptian mummy knows about Shakespeare? And lemme tell you that particular brand of theater "manager" (????) is an altogether too numerous article. He does not even know enough to light his auditorium properly. So long as the picture is "bright" and big enough (which often is altogether too large) all is well. Of the finer science of reproduction and interpretation of the screen drama he is as ignorant as a child unborn, and that is some considerable innocent, I think you will agree. By his utter lack of knowledge, coupled with an exaggerated ego which will not allow of permitting his operator, who does, or is presumed to, know to handle the projection unhindered, he rips his knife of ignorance into the finest screen productions and makes of them, in so far as his theater be concerned, a ridiculous farce. Of his high-priced orchestra leader he expects and demands initiative, and all too often gets it, to the everlasting butchery of the result on the screen. This particular thing is sometimes carried to the point where Mr. Orchestra Leader actually demands that the operator run the picture to suit the music, and through the aid of Mr. Solid Ivorytop Manager's order to the operator actually gets away with it. Talk about "getting away with murder," huh! In the face of this such comparative trifles as blinding the audience with floods of light, poured back into their eyes from brilliantly lighted music, seems insignificant.

But Taubler is nevertheless right. The operator should be a man of brains, which means a man of initiative; also he should be allowed to assume full and complete charge of projection. That is what he is there for. He is presumed to know how to properly interpret a photoplay and reproduce it on the screen in the best possible way. That so many of him are not able to do this at this time is no one's fault under heaven except the exhibitor's and manager's, who has insisted on cheapness instead of excellence and who has literally demanded the suppression of initiative instead of its use. As to the questions and answers, why to date there has been but slight demand for their republication, and—there you are.

From a Traveling Man.

G. E. Bates writes from Sioux Falls, South Dakota:

> Am not in the moving picture business, but much interested from the like-to-see-a-good-show viewpoint. Being a traveling man, making the principal cities of both North and South Dakota, I have opportunity for observing projection in both states. Maybe you will be interested in my account of what I have found, and maybe not; anyhow, here goes:
> In so far as concerns projection, North and South Dakota are about the same. There is but one city in each state in which there is a theater really putting up a sharp, rock-steady, flickerless picture, and those two cities are Fargo, North Dakota, and Sioux Falls, South Dakota. Was in the former city last Sunday(November 11.—Ed.) and was well pleased with what I saw in the way of good projection. Sorry I did not learn the names of the operators. North Dakota has other towns where the projection is fair—just fair. South Dakota has a number of good towns and some good theaters. Sioux Falls is not only the largest city in the state, but a good business city for its size. The projection I saw here was what caused me to get busy writing you. For the past six months have made this my Sunday headquarters. Last Monday evening myself and two friends saw Clara Kimball Young in "Magda" at the Strand, Sioux Falls, and Mr. Richardson, I wish you might have accompanied us, for the projection was really wonderful. The show ran one and one-half hours and not once were we able to tell when the operator changed from one machine to the other. The picture was sharp, without flicker, and was rock-steady. After the show I mounted to the operating room, intent upon tendering my congratulations to the man behind the light ray, but he was very busy, so did not disturb him. His name, I learned, was F. M. Olson. From the Strand we went to the Princess. Here, too, we saw distinctly high-class projection. It certainly is a pleasure to see such high-class work as we viewed in those two houses. William Van is operator at the Princess. There is little to choose between the work of Messrs. Van and Olson. They are two celever men and I wish them all the success in the world. Wish I knew them personally. Though a traveling man I am a regular reader of the World and think it just fine. I want to congratulate you on the great work you are doing. Followed the account of your recent trip with much interest. Noticed that when operator or managers had it "coming to them" they got it and got it straight from the shoulder. I hope some day to have the pleasure of your acquaintance, for I like to meet men who are real men.

As to that, friend Bates, while I am grateful for your kindness, I have but done my duty as I saw it. I am not a believer in coating the bitter drug so deeply in sugar that its medicinal qualities are lost, or very largely impaired. There is a time and place for everything, and, under all the circumstances, it has, up to date, been the time and the place for straight from the shoulder jolts in most things connected with the moving picture industry, particularly in the projectional field. Also, it has been my lot to deal with men who for the most part had to be talked to plainly, if one was to get results. Operating room affairs literally screamed to Heaven for revision. Waste was on every hand. Film life was and still is shortened to a perfectly scandalous degree. Projection machinery was and still to some extent is outraged by improper oils and improper adjustments, light was and still is wasted shamefully through lack of understanding of the optical system of the projector, and for the same reason the picture was less sharp than it should be, as well as more flickery than it should be when run at proper speed. Also there were many other troubles—and still are many others, as well as, in less degree, the old ones. Speaking to Tom Jones, operator, I could say: "My dear Mr. Jones, please pardon my impertinence, but I feel that there is possibility of improvement in your work if you will study," and accomplish about as much good as I would by blowing my breath into the cylinder of a steam engine. But if I say to Tom Jones, operator: "See here, Jones, why in the name of gehenna don't you wake up and study at least the rudimentary elements of your business? Your infernal ignorance is literally raising Sheol with valuable films, with the eyes of theater patrons, with the machinery entrusted to your care. You've got a fine gall to call yourself an operator!" Jones will most likely get real angry. He will stick out his tongue at me and probably will call me names (after I'm gone). Soon, however, he cools off. Then he starts thinking. He has had such a heavy jolt that he just simply can't help it. And, after all, that is the whole battle to get him started thinking. To get him using his mental machinery. The rest is comparatively easy. And that is the reason for my "straight from the shoulder" methods. Using them is not the most pleasant thing in the world. I hope the day will come when they will no longer be necessary. But that day is still in the future. Though castor oil is not pleasant to take, it is, nevertheless, very effective. Of course little Willie doesn't like to take it, but mother makes him do it because it is good for what ails him. I represent the mother the unpleasant dose I am sometimes obliged to hand friend operator is the castor oil. Some operators and some unions I've castor-oiled made wry faces and called me naughty names, but they are today better operators and better unions just the same.

Glad to hear the excellent report from Fargo and Sioux Falls. My compliments to the operators named. May their tribe increase. I might, however, remark, without in any way meaning to detract from the credit of the men out there, that the operator of a first-class New York theater who let his change-over show on the screen would be called up on the carpet so quick it would make his head swim. We just don't simply expect that sort of thing nowadays.

Wants an Opinion.

P D. Howe, Wrightstown, New Jersey, asks for an opinion. He says:

> I made an experiment last year, Ford truck, Universal generating set, Power's 6-B, near Mobile, Alabama. Outfit cost $1,500 and I went busted, but am not yet satisfied. Will you give me your opinion of Oxy Hydro-Cet? Using Gold Fiber screen with, say, a nine-foot picture, what kind of picture could I expect? I have worked out a plan which would place the movie in most of the rural schools of the country. There is no profit for me in the idea I have, yet it seems I can interest no big-bugs in it, though its possibilities are tremendous

If there is to be no profit in it for you why not send us your plan to look over? What you might expect under the condition named depends on the viewpoint. With a reasonably light film you would get a picture which would be fairly satisfactory to one not accustomed to pictures projected by electric light. But gas can in no event compare with electric. Also with gas you could not get anything worth while out of dense films. The light you name is perhaps as good as any gas light now in use and better than many. That is about all I could say.

Likes Tinted Titles.

Tony Guglielimo, Union Hill, New Jersey, does not agree with Friend Givan as regards tinted titles. He says:

> Brother Givan, Sussex, New Brunswick, sets forth his views concerning tinted films in November 17 issue. In my opinion he is all wrong insofar as applies to tinting of titles. As an operator I find that tinted titles are far the better. This is true because of the fact that when the title maker gets careless or lazy and does not finish the edges of his letters cleanly, as he should, the fault appears in the photgraph, with result that we cannot make the projection letters look sharp on the screen if in black and white, whereas if tinted it does show sharp. In verification of this I would suggest that Brother Givan observe a Fox feature title, which is not tinted, and a Triangle title, which is tinted.

Personally I know nothing about this matter. Don't see why tinting should make the letters show up sharp, unless you mean that the tinting makes the minute faults invisible. Perhaps the difference lies in the relative care used in making the title cards in the first place. The Triangle is very careful in matters of this kind I know, but am not so well acquainted with the Fox practice in this particular. Perhaps here is something that company should look into.

Sleepy Bunch! Yes? No?

William J. McQueen, Freeport, Illinois, writes:

> Enclosed find forty cents, for which send question booklets. Am studying Richardson's Handbook, second edition; also have Hawkins' Electric Guides. Wish to find out whether or no I can answer any of the questions. To date have not seen the name of our little city in the department. Guess we're too sleepy a bunch, but probably we will wake up some day.

The booklets have gone forward. Heavens, neighbor McQueen, do you realize that the second edition of the Handbook is out of date by about three years and that, too, in an industry which is going forward with giant strides? You can, of course, learn a great deal out of that book, but the trouble is that in so far as equipment, etc., be concerned you are likely to learn a lot that you will have to unlearn; also some of the other matter is no longer correct. Take my advice and send in four dollars at once and get the third edition. It is a 700-page book and precisely what you need.

"Wake up some day" won't do, my brothers of Freeport. The industry moves ahead, and if you stand still you will be left behind.

"A Modern Musketeer"

Douglas Fairbanks in His Latest Artcraft Picture, Story and Direction of Allan Dwan, Surpasses Any of His Previous Stunts.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THERE is a happy combination of satire, old romance, life of today, fun and physical daring in "A Modern Musketeer," the latest Douglas Fairbanks Artcraft picture, that furnishes the spectator with an unusually varied and enjoyable quality of entertainment. The story was written by Allan Dwan, from a novel entitled "D'Artagnan of Kansas," and is quite the best of the Fairbanks scenarios. The first half is particularly rapid in movement, and is chock full of laughs and surprises. The hero of them all is Ned Thatcher, a breezy young gentleman from Kansas, whose love of adventure makes his pathway through life more or less cyclonic. Ned's nature is the result of his mother's love of romance. Just before the boy's birth she spent hours reading the works of Dumas, D'Artagnan, of "The Three Musketeers," being her favorite character.

When Ned reaches young manhood he possesses the qualities most admired by his mother and is the very soul of chivalry; only, unfortunately, he discovers that trying to rescue fair ladies from the brutality of the opposite sex is not always appreciated. The scenes satirizing the adventures of the original D'Artagnan are screamingly funny and overflow with record-making Fairbanks stunts. The real story opens when Ned is presented with a flivver by his father and told that his conduct is too strenuous even for Kansas. People in that fortunate state do not object to taking to cyclone cellars at frequent intervals, when the wind becomes playful; but when young Thacker begins to get bored by things in general and runs up and perches on the weathervane at the top of the church steeple or hurdles over all the front fences on the block and scares the neighbors into fits, Ned's father fears that the popularity of the Thacker family will not stand the strain. Once well out of Kansas and headed due West, Ned meets his first real adventure. He comes upon a stalled motor car containing Raymond Peters, Dorothy Moran, and her mother. These three persons furnish the proper dramatic motive. Peters is a wealthy roue who has deceived a number of wives; Dorothy is poor but beautiful, and her mother is anxious to marry her to a man of means.

Ned helps the party to reach the Grand Canyon of Arizona, and immediately Dorothy gets into all sorts of dangers. A treacherous Indian guide proves the most difficult enemy to manage, but Ned defeats him in true Fairbanks fashion. This calls for leaping, climbing, riding, fighting, sliding down the side of the canyon in utter contempt of life and limb, with little side contempts like turning somersaults or doing handstands on the edge of the canyon thrown in for comedy relief. The question of whether anyone in real life would, or could, act in this manner does not matter in the least. "Doug." Fairbanks does it, and that is all his public asks.

Allan Dwan directed the production. His advancement to the position of head director with the Fairbanks company is more than vindicated by his work in "A Modern Musketeer." He shows the resource of a master of his art in every detail. The supporting company contains the names of nothing but favorably known actors. Marjorie Daw makes an uncommonly attractive and spirited heroine, and Kathleen Kirkham is effectively cast as her mother. Frank Campau contributes one of his clever character studies as the Indian guide, and Tully Marshall is just as artistic in his portrayal of Philip Marden. Eugene Ormonde shows both skill and nerve as Raymond Peters.

"Thais"

Goldwin Presents Mary Garden in a Version of the Story by Anatole France With Sensuous Charm.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

IT WAS to be expected that Mary Garden could give an interpretation of "Thais" without flaw, but those who come to the screen from the operatic stage do not always leave their mannerisms behind, hence her performance was a delightful surprise. She carried the role without marring theatrical affectations, though with so much dignity at times that she was perilously near losing the characterization. The note of dignity, however, was sustained by her support, notably by Hamilton Revelle as Paphnutius, and by a nicely adjusted decorative spirit in production, at one time buoyantly luxurious, at another severely ascetic, the one life-enhancing and supposedly demoralizing, the other cold, cramping and conventionally religious. From the warmth and joy of wealth and popularity, Thais of the single standard, who believed in according women the liberty enjoyed by men, could only be weaned by that strange quality of human nature which reaches out for spiritual happiness through martyrdom.

That strange note was to be sounded by Paphnutius, who was among those fascinated by her in Alexandria, who could not forget three years later at a convent in the desert. The desire to convert beautiful Thais, and, incidentally, serve God, led the handsome priest back to Alexandria and supplied the influence necessary to abruptly divert Thais from her delightful misdeeds. She follows the priest to the convent, takes the black veil, and the ancient struggle between the spirit, the flesh and the devil begins, with the priest wavering in his faith. Thais conquers through suffering, is given the white veil and becomes inspired at death, just as the futility of it all begins to dawn on her reformer.

"Thais," as an opera, scored a triumph for Mary Garden, and "Thais," as a visualization, preserves that triumph in that it vividly portrays her strong personality, and this is made possible by a wealth of decorative charm throughout the presentation. The poetic conception of the author is supplemented by poetic picturization to their mutual advantage. The art motive thus made harmonious, the leading role intelligently interpreted, the effect is one of sensuous pleasure and artistic delight. The story moves with difficulty during the opening scenes from lack of psychology, but it gains strength from that very source in the end, and it will succeed on that account. It was closely followed by an attentive audience at the Strand and should prove a drawing card wherever shown.

"The Cloven Tongue"

Pathe Releases Five-Reel Russian Art Film Production Which Presents Pleasing Drama of Love and Jealousy.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS is another of the subjects made on the native soil of Russia by the Russian Art Film Corporation. It has the same intense, convincing quality of former releases, but is not so tragic as the others have been in its denouement. It inclines rather to the simple drama of conflicting character, and the chief events spring from the love of a prince for the daughter of a country nobleman. The dramatic moments are brought about by the intriguing interference of the latter's jealous housekeeper.

The scenes occur on a country estate in Russia, which resembles a picturesque rural district in one of the Middle Western states of this country. Except for occasional glimpses of a carriage equipped with high shafts, or household furnishings of strictly Russian design, the locations might well have been found on an Iowa or Nebraska farm. But the characters themselves are all native types, ranging from peasant women, gathering faggots, to a Russian prince. The two leading feminine parts are taken by women of rather striking beauty, one a pronounced blonde and the other a brunette.

The story opens with the return of Sonia Orloff to her father's estate after several years at school. Orloff, one of the petty gentry, and a man in reduced circumstances, deals in horses. In this work he is assisted by an employe named Stephan. Orloff has also in his employ a housekeeper known as Glasha Antonova, a Circassian woman of great physical charm, but of an unscrupulous, deceitful nature.

Glasha has a great love for running things in her own way and at once conceives a dislike for Sonia. She has a hold upon the girl's father. When a neighbor, Prince Alexis, falls in love with Sonia, the housekeeper immediately stirs up trouble. She goes so far as to denounce the prince as having made love to herself. Stephan, in love with Glasha, offers to kill the prince, but later Glasha herself is killed. Stephan then accuses the prince, and circumstances are very much against him. But it develops that Glasha was killed by some peasant women whose hatred she had won, and the love story between the prince and Sonia goes on to a happy conclusion.

Sophie Karabana appears as Sonia, Nadya Lesienka as Glasha, P. A. Baksheef as Stephan, and N. V. Panoff as Orloff. The story was written by A. M. Pushkin and directed by Chesler Sabinsky.

"Brown of Harvard"

Selig's Production of the Play and Book of This Name Is Highly Praiseworthy for Story, Direction and Acting.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

THE script of "Brown of Harvard," which is based on the book and play of that name and adapted by Harry Beaufort, lends itself so happily to moving picture service that there is not a slack moment during its run on the screen. Mr. Beaufort has been equally successful in the direction of the production, as there is no instant when the fast moving story is not clear to the spectator.

The preliminary training of the Harvard Crew, as shown in the scenes, took place on the lagoon of Lincoln Park, Chicago, and most of the scenes in the race itself were taken on the same stretch of water, the rowers being selected partly from the student force at Madison, Wis., and partly from Harvard. In all these scenes, as well as in those showing student life at college, Director Beaufort has preserved the atmosphere with a nice sense of realism.

The members of the cast are all efficient, from the leading parts of Tom Brown (Tom Moore) and Evelyn Ames (Hazel Daly) to the minor parts of Tubby, Happy and Jean. Mr. Moore's Tom Brown will rejuvenate everyone of riper years who sees him, and he will set aflame the enthusiasm of youth of both sexes. True, Tom Brown is idealistic, but so was the character which each one of us imagined for himself, but which alas has never been realized! For this very reason alone it thrills and exalts our poor human nature to watch Tom Brown reach the heights that we failed to reach, and in our happy dream while watching him on the screen we forget our own frailties.

Hazel Daly's Evelyn Ames will win her many new admirers. We may not like the proneness of Evelyn to discard her sweetheart on several occasions without a fair investigation of his presumed guilt; but then most girls, as well as their mothers, are prone to do this very thing and then kiss and "make up" afterward. Mere man was made to mourn in love matters, no matter how innocent. But everyone will be happy to see how charmingly Hazel Daly's Evelyn does make up with Tom Brown, after piercing his heart with a thousand arrows.

Others in the cast who merit special mention are Sidney Ainsworth, who appears as the professional gambler Victor Colton; Warner Richmond as Claxton Madden, Tom Brown's room-mate; Walter McGrail as Gerald Thorne, Nancy Winston as Marion Thorne, Alice Gordon as Evelyn's mother, Kempton Greene as Evelyn's brother, and Frank Joyner as Cartwright, the student philanthrophist.

The release will be made Jan 10, through the George Kleine System.

"Daughter of Destiny"

Five-Part Petrova Picture, Presented by First National Exhibitor's Circuit, Deals with War and Romance of Today in Entertaining Fashion.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

MADAME PETROVA, the star of "Daughter of Destiny," a five-part photoplay, presented by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, has the role of a young American girl, daughter of the American Ambassador to a European kingdom, known as Belmore. The earlier scenes are laid in America, and Marion, the heroine of the drama, has contracted a marriage with an adventurer, Franz Jorn. As his name indicates, he is the secret enemy of this country and also of other nations on the opposite side of the Atlantic. The Crown Prince of Belmore, while on a visit here, meets Marion and is greatly attracted by her. Marion's father does not look with favor upon his son-in-law, and when he learns of his death in Paris has the widow join him in Belmore.

Thrown together again by fate, Marion and the prince fall in love, and the heir to the crown prevails upon her to become his morganatic wife. This raises a great row in the kingdom, as the young man's father is anxious to have him marry the princess of a neighboring state and thus keep his country out of war. The prince refuses to hear to a divorce, and Marion is appealed to. She is about to sacrifice her own happiness in order to avert the pain and misery that must come to the entire kingdom, when a new angle is taken by events. Her first husband is not dead, but has tricked everyone into that belief so that he might serve certain political ends. He makes a dramatic entrance into the council chamber, but is disposed of at the finish with tragic effect. Jorn has been helping to stir the people of Belmore to rebellion and is the victim of a bomb thrown by one of his followers.

Although dealing with the present, "Daughter of Destiny" follows the model of a school of romance long familiar, and depends on its love interest rather than on an attempt to reflect conditions as they exist between nations today. George Irving had charge of the production. Except that a little more light might have been used on some of the scenes, his efforts are marked by good taste and sincerity of purpose, and the atmosphere of the different social grades are skillfully maintained.

Madame Petrova is a stately and finely gowned figure as Marion, and seems born for a seat on a throne. It is quite evident, however, that she was not born in the United States. She plays her part with earnestness and is always consistent to the character indicated at the beginning of the picture. The supporting company is of excellent calibre and includes Thomas Holding as the Crown Prince, Anders Randolf as Franz Jorn, Robert Broderick as Ambassador Ashley, Henri Leone as Morhange, Richard Garrick as Graham West, Carl Dietz as a Secret Service Man, and Warren Cook as the American Minister.
